An Erie man who has no ambition to be a Chesterfield or a leader of Erie's Four Hundred was invited out to dinner a few evenings ago. He conjured up every excuse imaginable, and as a last resort tried to make his wife believe she was sick and unable to go, but she gave him to understand that she was going and he must accompany her. "Well," he said, "I'm sick myself, but I reckon I'll have to go." And they went. When the first course was brought on the old gentleman filled up pretty well, but seemed to be getting along all right. In the middle of the second course he declared he was full "clean up" and pushed back from the table. "Ahem, you folks jist go ahead an' eat your supper an' don't mind me. I've got to go home an' feed the pigs."

A Chinese Superstition.

The Chinese have a remarkable superstition about the Chu river, which is the local name on the border for the Chiating. A considerable trade in drugs is borne along this river, for which a special class of boats, composed of very light boards fastened with wooden nails, is built. The natives say that the magnetic attraction of the bed of the river is so strong that were ordinary boats used the iron nails would be pulled out. Along the river banks iron is mined in primitive fashion, and from geological evidence it is believed that the ore is very rich.

Luther's Fireworks.

"In my lecture on mediaeval history I was giving an account of the spectacular burning by Martin Luther of the papal bull which put him outside of the Church of Rome," said a Columbia college professor. "The next day I found this in the notebook of one of the students who had heard the lecture:

"'Luther gives a vaudeville show, accompanied by fireworks.'"

EFFECTS OF SUN SPOTS.

New Discovery of a Greenwich Astronomer—Magnetic Streams Travel Through Space to Us.

At a recent meeting of the British Astronomical Association, Mr. E. Walter Maunder of Greenwich Observatory described a discovery he had made with regard to the relation between sun spots and magnetic disturbances on the earth, which promises greatly to advance our knowledge of the mysterious interior of the sun, and to help in the settlement of other obscure points in solar physics.

"Magnetic storm" is a sudden disturbance in that mysterious flow of influence round the surface of our globe, which causes the mariner's compass to point north and south. Sometimes the needles all over the world seem to receive a sudden twitch or jerk, which sets them oscillating violently, and for hours, or even days, they behave in a most hysterical fashion, and swing about as if they are mad before settling down and pointing to the north again. These "invisible storms" or commotions have nothing to do with the weather, which may be fair or foul, but sometimes they make telegraphic communication impossible, and even affect our electric trams and lighting. Occasionally a brilliant display of the aurora borealis shows that something unusual is occurring in the heavens.

Effect of Sun Spots.

For long it has been more than suspected that sun spots have something to do with magnetic storms, but no one could quite trace the connection. Sometimes we had big sun spots and no magnetic storms, sometimes vice-versa. Lord Kelvin, a dozen years ago, said what looked like the last word on the subject. He declared that there could be no casual relation between the two phenomena. Reasoning a priori, he pointed out that as any magnetic influence from the sun must, in the nature of things, radiate in all directions, like light and heat, the influence of the sun spots on the magnetic needle here might wax and wane, but could not arrive with the sudden twitch characteristic of the "magnetic storm."

In substance, Mr. Maunder's theory is that the force which suddenly agitates the earth is not a radiation at all, but a stream of attenuated matter, like a comet's tail, or of electrically charged particles, shot out from the sun spot like a geyser or the water from a fireman's hose. Flying upward from the surface of the spinning sun, this "stream" rushes out into space in the form of a great Catherine wheel, or invisible watchspring spiral. When the stream happens to strike the earth, we see the aerial fireworks in the upper air overhanging the pole of this earth-magnet of ours, and our compasses and telegraph needles jump with excitement. Thus Lord Kelvin's reasoning is correct, but does not apply to the present set of phenomena.

In Regular Periods.

We have given Mr. Maunder's conclusion; now for his method. He carefully marked out the time of hundreds of magnetic storms, and found that some corresponded with big sun spots and some did not. In vain he tried to find a correspondence with the faculae, or flecks of boiling fire on the sun's surface, and with the "prominences." At last he noticed that there was frequently a series of magnetic storms at intervals of 27 1-3 days. Sometimes there was no storm at the end of this period, but the storm was repeated after exactly two or three of such intervals. Now, this time—27 1-3 days—is just the time taken for a point on the sun to go one round and appear opposite the earth again. It is the rotation period of the sun as viewed from our moving planet.

In this remarkable discovery, Mr. Maunder found explanations of many difficulties. The storm arrives generally about 26 hours after the sun spot points fairly and squarely at us. Presumably that is the time taken by the stream of uprushing particles to reach this planet. But though the storm comes again and again after the sun spot vanishes, it is generally just at the time when the place where the sun spot was is passing us. The sun spot has gone, but the stream of magnetic commotion is still flying out from the same point on the sun's surface.

More than this, and still more remarkable. There are certain favorite points on the sun for these sun spots and the magnetic streams which continue after they have vanished. A point on the 222nd degree of the sun's longitude is a centre of such disturbances, and magnetic storms constantly arrive when this point faces the earth. This fact points to definite permanent structure in the sun. It cannot be merely a churning mass of fire if it has volcanic regions which never change their situation.

Mr. Maunder concluded this most interesting and suggestive lecture by showing eclipse photographs by Mrs. Maunder and others, in which the long rays of the sun's corona and the outsweeping waves of light from whose crest they appeared to be flung off, were certainly analogous to the "stream lines" of magnetic force, or particles which he suggests as the origin of terrestrial disturbance.

The Divining Rod.

Englishmen who write letters to The London Times just to free their minds have engaged in a hot argument over the divining rod. In order to adjudicate the question, The Times has employed a learned gentleman who has studied the rod for fourteen years to marshal his proofs for and against this survival of mediaeval superstition. The rod is still believed in with implicit faith in England, although its field of operations has narrowed down in latter years to simply locating water underground. Formerly buried treasure, mineral veins and even stolen goods were sought for with the rod. Criminals were tracked by it, according to its firmest disciples. In France the masters of the rod gained so much influence in the time of Louis XIV. that they were prohibited from using it in affairs of the moral world.

A Rich Genealogy.

A few months ago, in looking up his genealogy, a Londoner discovered that a woman he did not know was using a crest he had regarded as his own. He found she was a cousin. They became friends, and when she died recently she bequeathed her estate, more than $500,000, to him. That was certainly rich fruit to find on the branches of the family tree.

David Murray an Academician.

A general assembly of Academicians and Associates of the Royal Academy took place in Burlington House, says The London Star, at which Mr. David Murray was elected an Academician, while Mr. David Farquharson and Mr. Reginald Blomfield (architect) were chosen associates. Mr. Murray, a landscape painter, is 56 years of age, and was at first destined for a commercial career in Glasgow. His inclination towards art, however, led him to abandon the office to study nature, and the result is a series of pictures portraying well-known places in this country and abroad, which insured the honor which has now fallen to him. Mr. Farquharson is also a Scotsman, hailing from Perthshire. Educated in Edinburgh, he came to tempt fortune in London exactly 21 years ago. Much of his work is done at Sennen Cove, Land's End. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Scottish Academy in 1882. Mr. Blomfield, the other new Associate, is a grandson of a famous bishop of London, and examples of his architectural style are scattered all over the country. The late Sir Arthur Blomfield, the distinguished architect, who died in 1899, was his uncle. Mr. Reginald Blomfield's most important works hitherto have been country mansions. He is also an authority upon the laying out of gardens.

How are the mighty fallen! A year ago last Saturday Gen. Kuropatkin said in an interview:

"After crushing the Japanese in Korea and Manchuria, we will take their island. If I have anything to say in the matter the treaty of peace will be signed in Tokio and nowhere else."

General Bombastes Kuropatkin has not at present, judging by the despatches from the front, "anything to say in the matter."

All the heroism in this world, however, is not confined to the battlefield. An Ottawa despatch on Saturday, prior to the Rat Portage-Ottawa hockey match, said, after describing the injuries of some of the Rat Portage players, "Griffis is probably the most damaged of the lot. He has a bad knee, damaged toe, broken nose, and badly cracked up arms, but he is prepared to go the limit to-night." There must be considerable heroism in a man when he will stand such treatment as that, and ask for more. What a gentle bunch of lambs that Ottawa crowd must be!

The following from the Galt Reporter, will undoubtedly commend itself to the average taxpayer:—"Loose methods in municipal affairs should not be approved by newspapers. If close watch is not kept careless officials will depart from the straight paths and pile up trouble for the municipality they serve. A reminder now and then that some one is watching them will do no harm. The representative who is conscious of mistakes and not blind to the workings of a system that would not pass muster in a business is only doing his duty in calling upon heads of departments for statements of receipts and expenditures of such a character as to satisfy the most exacting taxpayer that no weakness exists in the department that handles finances."

AN EASY WAY

TO KEEP WELL.

It is easy to keep well if we would only observe each day a few simple rules of health.

The all important thing is to keep the stomach right, and to do this it is not necessary to diet or to follow a set rule or bill of fare. Such pampering simply makes a capricious appetite and a feeling that certain favorite articles of food must be avoided.

Prof. Wiechold gives pretty good advice on this subject; he says: "I am 68 years old and have never had a serious illness, and at the same time my life has been largely an indoor one, but I early discovered that the way to keep healthy was to keep a healthy stomach, not by eating bran crackers or dieting of any sort; on the contrary I always eat what my appetite craves, but daily for the past eight years I have made it a practice to take one or two of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets after each meal and I attribute my robust health for a man at my age to the regular daily use of Stuart's Tablets.

My physician first advised me to use them because he said they were perfectly harmless and were not a secret patent medicine, but contained only the natural digestives, peptones and diastase, and after using them a few weeks I have never ceased to thank him for his advice.

I honestly believe the habit of taking Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets after meals is the real health habit, because their use brings health to the sick and ailing and preserves health to the well and strong."

Men and women past fifty years of age need a safe digestive after meals to insure a perfect digestion and to ward off disease, and the safest, best known and most widely used is Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

They are found in every well regulated household from Maine to California and in Great Britain and Australia are rapidly pushing their way into popular favor.

All druggists sell Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, full sized packages at 50 cents, and for a weak stomach a fifty cent package will often do fifty dollars' worth of good.

The road to failure is the one that is full of ruts.

The fool never puts off until to-morrow what he shouldn't do at all.

ASKS OFFICIAL INVESTIGATION.

Organizer Writes Prov. Sec. re Co-Operative Harvesting Co.

Toronto, March 13.—J. F. McLaughlin has written to Hon. W. J. Hanna, Provincial Secretary, asking him to investigate the affairs of the Farmers' Co-operative Harvesting Machine Co., saying:

"In 1903 I obtained a charter from the Ontario Government for the Farmers' Co-operative Harvesting Machine Company, Limited. I was induced by Joseph Stratford to undertake the organization by representations which I have found to be untrue. The waste on money, principally obtained from farmers, and the methods of this company generally, call for investigation on the part of those in authority, whose duty it is to protect the public from fools and fakirs. As the organizer of the company, it is my duty to draw your attention to its condition, and to the representations that have been made in order to induce farmers to purchase its stock."

Funeral of O. A. Howland.

Toronto, March 13.—The funeral ceremonies on Saturday of Oliver Aiken Howland, K. C., C. M. G., ex-Mayor of Toronto, were extremely simple. The services at St. James' Cathedral were attended by a gathering that fully represented the political and commercial life of Toronto. The service for the family was conducted by Canon Cody at the residence of Sir William P. Howland at 2 p.m., and the body was then conveyed to the Cathedral, where Canon Welch took charge, assisted by Canon Cody. The church was crowded to the doors, and traffic on King Street was disturbed for about an hour. The final service at the chapel in St. James' Cemetery was very largely attended by intimate friends.

McDougall Growing Worse.

Toronto, March 13.—In the Sessions on Saturday, when the case of Alfred McDougall was called, Dr. R. J. Wilson stated that McDougall's condition was steadily growing worse. The circulation of the left arm was cut off. He lived in bed and often had spells of unconsciousness. Dr. F. N. G. Starr was also called by Mr. DuVernet, and Drs. A. A. Macdonald and Adam Wright by the Crown. They all concurred with Dr. Wilson's statements, and agreed that the malady was progressive and incurable. His span of life is now short.

Hanged to Bedpost.

Montreal, March 13.—Sick, penniless, without a friend in the city, and oppressed by a strange dread of having to go into a hospital, Pierre Trudel, a widower, 55, employed as a cook by Mrs. Bissonnette, St. Paul Street, after having gone to confession, hanged himself to the bedpost yesterday afternoon in a room of his lodging house.

An Irishman gave his wife away by talking in his sleep. That is nothing. Plenty of wives give their husbands away by talking while awake.

It is worse than madness to neglect a cough, or cold which is easily subdued if taken in time but becomes, when left to itself, the forerunner of consumption and premature death. Inflammation, when it attacks the delicate tissue of the lungs and bronchial tubes, travels with perilous rapidity; then do not delay, get a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, the medicine that grasps this formidable foe of the human body, and drives it from the system. This medicine promotes a free and easy expectoration, subdues the cough, heals the diseased parts, and exerts a most wonderful influence in curing consumption, and other diseases of the throat and lungs. If parents wish to save the lives of their children, and themselves from much anxiety, trouble and expense, let them procure a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, and whenever a child has taken cold, has a cough or hoarseness, give the Syrup according to directions.

What is that which is lengthened by being cut at both ends? Answer—A ditch.

A Liniment for the Logger.—Loggers lead a life which exposes them to many perils. Wounds, cuts and bruises cannot be altogether avoided in preparing timber for the drive and in river work, where wet and cold combined are of daily experience Coughs and colds and muscular pains cannot but ensue. Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil, when applied to the injured or administered to the ailing, works wonders.

What black thing enlightens the world? Answer—Ink.

Signals of Danger.—Have you lost your appetite? Have you a coated tongue? Have you an unpleasant taste in the mouth? Does your head ache and have you dizziness? If so, your stomach is out of order and you need medicine. But you do not like medicine. He that prefers sickness to medicine must suffer, but under the circumstances the wise man would procure a box of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills and speedily get himself in health, and strive to keep so.

Name something with two heads and one body. Answer—A barrel.

The Most Popular Pill.—The pill is the most popular of all forms of medicine, and of pills the most popular are Parmelee's Vegetable Pills, because they do what it is asserted they can do, and are not put forward on any fictitious claims to excellence. They are compact and portable, and they are easily taken, they do not nauseate nor gripe, and they give relief in the most stubborn cases.

Why is bread like the sun? Answer—Because it rises from the yeast.

Many inherit weak lungs, and as disease usually assails the weakest point, these persons are continually exposed to attacks of cold and pulmonary disturbances. The speedy use of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup will be found a preventive and a protection, strengthening the organs so that they are not so liable to derangement from exposure or abrupt atmospheric changes. Bickle's Syrup is cheap and good.

If you were to ride a donkey what fruit would you resemble? Answer—A pair.

Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator is pleasant to take; sure and effectual in destroying worms. Many have tried it with best results.

What coat is finished without buttons and put on wet? Answer—A coat of paint.

Why go limping and whining about your corns when a 25 cent bottle of Holloway's Corn Cure will remove them? Give it a trial and you will not regret it.

Linked by Fate

BY CHARLES GARVICE

Author of "The Verdict of the Heart," "A Heritage of Hate," "Nell of Shorne Mills," "Paid For," "A Modern Juliet," Etc.

The moment she had done so she was vaguely sorry; she missed the thing; her finger looked bare and "unclad" without it. But she was too proud to put it on again. No, it should not remind him every time that he glanced at her hand of the unwelcome tie which bound him to her.

It was late before Mannering came slowly over the hill and towards the saloon—as Nina had decided to call the men's hut—and, as she looked at him, she saw that he was very tired. Now she had on her best skirt—the one she had been mending when Fleming came to propose the marriage to her. She had tacked a bit of dark blue ribbon under her collar and had done her wonderful hair with more care than she had taken since the wreck.

Her freshness and the general effect of these attempts at adornment—he was too much of a mere man to take in the details—struck Mannering, and he said apologetically:

"If you'll wait a moment, I'll go to the stream and have a wash and tidy up."

"Well, don't be long, please," she said. "I have been experimenting with a soup, and I'm anxious and nervous about it; and nothing sooner puts a cook into a bad temper than keeping the dinner waiting."

He came back very quickly and sank into his chair with the sigh of a man who has a great deal on his mind.

"I've been to the north end," he said. "It is, as I expected, more barren than this; the trees don't grow so thickly and vegetation generally is sparser—"

"Oh, speaking of vegetation, do you think you could find me some more vegetables? This soup wants carrots and onions—"

"It's a first rate soup," he said.

"Oh, thank you!" she retorted, drily. "I was afraid you didn't like it. You didn't say so."

"I beg your pardon," he said, meekly. "I was pondering over—"

"More important things. I'm sorry," she caught him up in a quick little way that was so rare as to be charming. "Please go on."

"I'm confirmed in my opinion that the largest of the group of islands lies on the southwest; and I propose building a boat—it will be safer than a raft—in which I—we—can make a cruise of discovery."

She listened earnestly and forgot to serve him; then she remembered it, and with a start begged his pardon and took his plate.

"I also found more evidence of gold. Some of the quartz, or whatever they call it, show quite plainly on the big stones or rocks in the dry river beds."

"Yes. Do you like the ducks best this way or stewed? I put it in an empty tin amongst the ashes of the fire. Is it all right—done enough?"

"It is very good," he said. "It is a delightful dinner and I am enjoying it. Where was I?—Oh, the gold. And I think there is copper; in fact, the place seems to abound in valuable minerals."

She nodded carelessly and sighed. "We seem to find all the useless things," she said. "Now, if we'd been two persons in a book of adventure, cast on an uninhabited island, we should find all the useful things, or the materials out of which to make them."

"Ah," he said, rather resentfully. "I always had, even as a boy, a suspicion of fraud in those shipwreck stories; but I little thought that the thing was so tragic and uncomfortable as it is."

"I am sorry you are not comfortable," she said. Then she remembered the two she had lost and the tears came into her eyes. He saw them and tried to divert her mind.

"We haven't tried the old trick they always perform in the adventure books—sending empty bottles with 'We are shipwrecked on an unknown island. Help us! Rescue!' "

"I've only three empty bottles and I couldn't spare them," she said. "One is a rolling pin and worth its weight in gold."

"Yes, but your people: their anxiety will be, must be, very great," he said, gravely.

"I haven't any people," she replied. "My father and I were alone in the world. I suppose we must have relatives, but I never heard of them. We lived for one another." After a pause she said, with her eyes on the table: "If you would like to try to communicate with your people I will sacrifice my bottle."

He shrugged his shoulders. "It's of no consequence."

She looked at him with almost startled surprise.

"Your sister, brother? Why, surely you have some one?"

"Why should I any more than you?" he answered. "I haven't father or mother or a sister or a brother; and as to the rest of my people—well," grimly, "they won't suffer any anxiety over my disappearance."

"Are you not going to smoke?" she asked after a moment or two.

He thanked her and sat down on the ground before the fire and lit his pipe. He was terribly tired, and presently, as she glanced towards him, she saw his head fall on his breast—he had fallen into a doze. His attitude was an uncomfortable one, and she longed to put something for him to lean against. The desire grew so intense—she told herself that it was only because the sight of him sitting so "fidgetted" her—that she stole on tip-toe to him.

As she stood over him hesitatingly her eyes wandered over his face and form. She noticed the short curls that clustered closely on the bend of the strong neck, the great shoulders, broad yet flat, the handsome face, the grace of the whole figure. The thought flashed across her that he was the best looking man she had ever seen. And how tired he was! The maternal instinct, which lies dormant in all women, awoke in her and her heart ached with pity for him.

She drew the box gently against his back. But the touch, gentle as it was, awoke him; in a moment he was on his feet and had seized her arm in a grasp of iron, his vacant eyes glaring at her sternly. She thought he was going to strike her, but suddenly he was awake fully and staring at her with dismay.

"I—I beg your pardon!" he stammered. "I must have fallen asleep; and I dreamt that the Lascar had come back. I must have thought you were he and—oh, I beg your pardon!"

"If you'd let my arm go," she said with a painful smile. "You are hurting it. I am glad I am not the Lascar!" He released her arm, and in doing so saw that the ring was not on her finger. He did not frown or show surprise; but his face became thoughtful, and he avoided her eyes.

She noticed the subtle change in his manner, though she did not discern the cause.

"I will go now," she said; it almost seemed a formula. "Give me your coat, please."

"My coat?" he repeated, vaguely.

"Yes. You have torn it; I will mend it for you."

"Oh, don't trouble," he said, rather coldly. Why had she taken off the ring? Was she afraid of him—afraid that he would forget his promise? His heart swelled with bitterness.

"Give it me, please," she said with her queenly air of command. "You have not too many coats, I know."

Obediently he took off his coat and she flung it over her arm, wishing him "Good- night," and left him. He refilled his pipe with her tobacco—it was not half bad, but he sighed as he thought of his favorite brand—and sat over the fire smoking for a time, then swiftly he rose, resolved to conquer his reluctance to take repossession of the hut. As he passed hers he saw that the light was still burning.

He lit the pine torch at the door and stood dead short at the threshold, astounded by the change she had wrought in the hut. Looking round his eyes caught the flowers she had put on the table, and he took them up and smelt them, then put them down and frowned at them thoughtfully. Why had she taken the trouble to turn out the hut, to alter the arrangement so that he might not be haunted by the memory of his dead friend? Why had she put the flowers there for him? Something lit a fire in his eyes, then they grew dull. She had taken off his ring. It was just a woman's idea of pity that had impelled her to tidy up and arrange the hut. With a sigh he set down the bottle of flowers and began to undress.

Nina carried the coat to her hut, and finding her needle and thread, lit the ship's lamp. But she paused, with the coat in her lap, and turning up her sleeve looked at her arm. The marks of his fingers showed on the white flesh. She held her arm to the dim light and looked at it with a faint pensive smile. How strong he was! His grasp had been like that of a vice. She had felt that if she had moved her arm it would break. How strong he was, how handsome, and yet how gentle to and considerate of her! He was treating her with the chivalry of a knight-errant. Yes, he was good, good! If she had met him, say in London, under ordinary circumstances, and they had grown to know each other in the usual way, midst all the surroundings of civilization, perhaps he might—she might—they might—

The color rose to her face. Whither were her foolish thoughts leading her? With a gesture of self-rebuke she took up the coat and mended the worst rent the bushes and undergrowth had made in it. She could not do much for him, but at any rate he should not go about in a ragged coat.

As she turned it over something fell from the breast pocket. She groped about on the ground and presently came upon a small, flat leather case. She turned it over and over curiously, then put it on the table. Whatever it was it did not concern her. It might contain bank notes, letters—no; it was not bulky enough for that; it was just simply a flat case. It haunted, mocked, fascinated her. She tried to keep her eyes from it, to concentrate her attention on the coat, but the thing seemed to exercise a power over her; and at last, with a gasp of shame, she snatched it up.

It was fastened by an ordinary clasp, and, pressing it, it flew open slowly and revealed the portrait of a woman. It was a colored miniature, and of so lovely a face, of such almost perfect beauty, that Nina's first emotion was one of unalloyed admiration. The eyes were blue, the complexion a delicate ivory—old ivory—the hair a rich auburn. The neck was bare, perfectly modelled and of snowy whiteness.

Admiration at first; but suddenly it gave place to—what? The blood rose to Nina's face, her eyes darkened and grew hard. Her bosom—as white, by the way, as that of the portrait—rose and fell with instinctive resentment, and her breath came thickly.

He carried a woman's portrait in his pocket—over his heart! Her own heart grew cold, then burnt hotly. She put the miniature close to the lamp and studied it. There was some writing at the bottom of it:

"To my dear Vane; Judith."

The words struck her like so many strokes of a dagger. Her "dear Vane." Here!

Who was she, this beautiful, perfectly beautiful woman?

With a sudden thrill of relief that seemed to set the blood running in her veins again she thought that it might be his sister. Then, cold as ice once more, she remembered that he had said he had no sister.

Her hand closed spasmodically over the portrait, and she rose in passionate indignation and resentment.

This portrait she had found in the pocket of her husband's coat— Her husband! Her husband! Ah, yes; but her husband in name only. He had married her under compulsion; he had fought, argued against the marriage. No wonder, with the portrait of this beautiful woman on his breast! Oh, what should she do, what should she do?

With a gesture of loathing and despair she flung the miniature from her and, sinking into the chair, buried her face—in his coat.

CHAPTER VII.

Nina lay awake all that night. Wedded to a man who married her against his will, and who carried the portrait of another woman—and how beautiful a woman—in his breast pocket.

But Mannering slep soundly, rose a little after the wondrous dawn and, having got through his usual work, went to the saloon. Nina was not there and he saw that breakfast was only laid for one. She came in as he was pondering over this fact, came in with a quick step and said, in a matter-of-fact way:

"Good-morning. I have had my breakfast"—she had not been able to eat anything. "I had so many things to do. Have you got everything you want?"

"Yes, thanks," he said, absently. Something in her tone, a coldness and aloofness, struck him; and glancing at her he saw that she was paler than usual and that her eyes were dull.

"I hope you are not overworking yourself," he said, earnestly. "There is really no need for it. We have plenty of time to do what is necessary; and I could help you in ever so many ways. For instance, for the future you must let me bring the water from the spring; the can is heavy. And I will light the fire."

She laughed, but mirthlessly. "And do the cooking, and lay the table, and wash up the things; and I could sit by with some fancy work and watch you. Oh, no, I am not working too hard; if it were not for the work I should—" "go mad," she was going to say; but she stopped short and made a gesture of impatience.

"I am going to set about that boat," he said; "but I shall be back to lunch."

"Oh, I've tied up your lunch for you," she said, coldly, pointing to the package.

"Very well," he responded, almost meekly. "Perhaps it will be better; it will save time."

"There is your coat," she said, taking it up and holding it out to him.

"Thank you," he said, simply, as he put it on. He did not know that her eyes were raised to his searchingly, almost accusingly. "I'm afraid you sat up late last night to mend it. I saw the light in your hut. I'm sorry. I'll be more careful in the future. You look tired this morning."

"I'm not in the least tired," she retorted with a little snap in her voice, usually so calm and low. "If you do not want anything else—"

She went out and Mannering turned to his breakfast again; but her coldness, her strangeness had spoiled his appetite. What was the matter with her? She had removed his ring from her finger, was stand-off-ish and sharp with him.

With a sigh he pushed his plate away from him and shouldering his gun went off to the woods. Nina watching him from her partly opened door.

Mannering selected the biggest tree, felled it and, scooping out a length of the trunk, made a fairly good canoe.

It was a tremendous day's work and he regarded it with pardonable pride; but he was too tired to haul it down to the beach and he left it reluctantly.

When he entered the saloon she was standing by the table. He saw, with a sigh of relief, that it was laid for two. But she had on her old frock, and the bit of ribbon was absent from her neck; and she scarcely lifted her long lashes as he wished her "good evening."

"I hope you're better," he said, blundering like a man.

She bit her lip impatiently.

"I have not been ill," she said with ominous emphasis, as she passed him his plate.

"I've finished the boat," he said, trying to speak as if he did not notice her coolness.

She fixed her eyes on the plate.

"Why did the raft not do?" she asked.

"Oh, it is not nearly as safe as a boat. I could not steer it or sail it as well. I made the raft because"—he hesitated and stammered—"there is no immediate hurry now. Oh"—hastily—"this boat—it's only a canoe—is ever so much better! I'm hoping that we shall be able to reach one of the inhabited islands; perhaps, if we have luck, the mainland."

Her face grew set and her lips came together straightly as if she were bracing herself to an effort.

"And—and—if we do, Mr. Mannering?" she said in a low voice, which palpitated with her agitation, "what will you do? Will you tell the people we meet that—that we are married?"

Mannering gazed at her blankly, as if he were trying to see what was passing in her mind.

"I—I don't know; I haven't thought of it," he stammered, his face flushing. "What—what would you wish me to do?"

"I—I would rather you did not," she replied. "I—I want to make a—a—bargain with you."

"Yes?" he said, interrogatively.

She raised her eyes and looked him steadily, bravely, in the face.

"I want to tell you that I know how great a sacrifice you made in mar—in doing what poor Mr. Fleming wished."

"As to that—the sacrifice was yours," he put in eagerly, earnestly; but she ignored his interruption and went on:

"If we escape to England—and, oh, I hope and trust we may!—I want you to understand that—that the marriage, what we have done—hasn't any meaning, significance; that we shall part as if—as if it had not been done. I will give you my word—I will swear it if you wish it—that I will never tell anyone of—of the ceremony we went through, never, as long as I live; and I need not say that I will never—oh, never!—make any claim on you."

Her voice broke and the tears burnt in her eyes; but she drove them back and continued:

"And I want you to promise that you will tell no one—that you will never make any claim on me."

He was silent for a moment or two, his eyes bent on his plate.

"I understand, and, of course, I promise," he said in a low voice and rather grimly. "I know how you feel, at least I think I do, and I respect that feeling. It would be very strange if I didn't see the—the way in which you regard our marriage—"

"Was it a marriage?" she broke in, abruptly. "There were no witnesses; we were not in church—"

"It doesn't matter," he said, almost gently. "What I have to do is to study your wishes—to follow them. All I ask is that—that while we are together—"

He stopped and gazed at her earnestly.

"Well?" she asked, as he paused.

—"That you will not treat me as if I were an enemy—as if I had planned the shipwreck and the—the marriage from sheer malice. See, now, Miss Nina, you and I are the victims of Fate. It was not my doing that you and I were left alone on this desolate place, but the will of Providence—"

"I know, I know!" she broke in. "I am not blaming you. But for you I should not be alive at this moment. Oh, I am grateful for all you have done for me; but, oh, don't you see how I am placed? I want you to promise that you will not—not claim me, if we escape, if we reach England; that you will not tell anyone that—that we were married."

"I promise," he said, gravely.

"And I promise on my side," she responded, earnestly. "If Heaven should befriend us and help us to get away from this dreadful island, I swear that I will not tell a living soul that—that poor Mr. Fleming persuaded us to be—married."

"Agreed!" said Mannering, grimly.

She drew a long breath of relief and rose from the table.

"What a wind is blowing!" she said in a more cheerful voice.

"All the better for us; it is blowing from the right quarter," he said.

"But it is blowing very hard," she remarked. "See how it shakes the saloon! I—I am glad we have agreed so well, Mr. Mannering. I will go now. you say we shall be able to sail to-morrow?"

"Yes, to-morrow," he said, rising as he spoke.

She wished him good-night and went out, and Mannering lit his pipe and sat pondering. The vein of reflection which he struck was not a flattering one. The girl he had married was so indifferent—disliked him so much, to put it plainly—that she had bargained with him to conceal their marriage. And he had consented. He drowsed over his pipe for half an hour or so, then he rose and made for his hut. But when he came in sight of the spot where Nina's hut had stood, he stopped short with his heart in his mouth. The hut was no longer there and only a litter of poles and undergrowth remained.

He ran, calling upon her name, and found her lying on the ground, with one of the heaviest poles across her slim form.

With a Herculean effort he dragged the pole from off her and, raising her in his arms, called upon her frantically:

"Nina, Nina! Are you killed—dead? Nina!"

Her eyes, upon which his frantic gaze was fixed, did not open, but he felt her shudder in his arms, and, unconsciously, he pressed her still more closely to his breast.

"Nina, Miss Nina, are you hurt?" he called, his lips close to her ears, for the storm had risen again. "Oh, speak to me! Try—try to speak to me!"

She opened her eyes, and as a flash of lightning lit up their violet depths, a gasp of relief, of thanksgiving, escaped his trembling lips.

"Oh, thank God! I—I thought you had been killed. Are you—are you hurt?"

She clung to him—still unconsciously.

WHAT TO DO FOR AN UNHEALTHY COMPLEXION.

There Is Only One Way to Get a Good, Healthy Complexion. You Can Have Red Cheeks, Rosy Lips and Bright Eyes All Your Life Without Using Poisonous Lotions, Washes or Powders.

It has come to be a habit with many women to make use of powders, cosmetics and other beautifiers, to cover up defects and to conceal the fact that their skin is rough, mottled or pimply. It is foolishness, however, to attempt to correct a bad complexion by the use of beautifiers. There is only one way to secure a lasting result and that is to remove the cause. If you have an unhealthy complexion you may depend upon it that your blood is also unhealthy. It must be purified and enriched and this can only be accomplished by keeping the liver active and establishing regularity of the bowels. Smith's Pineapple and Butternut Pills act directly on the liver, regulate the bowels, cleanse and enrich the blood, and in this way purify the complexion. Never use cosmetics, many of which are poisonous, containing lead, arsenic and other mineral poisons, and all of which eventually are sure to make a bad complexion even worse, but use a remedy which is known to cure all stomach and bowel troubles, cleanse the blood of all impurities and regulate and strengthen the functions of digestion and assimilation. If you would have red cheeks, rosy lips and bright clear eyes, keep your bowels regular by the use of Smith's Pineapple and Butternut Pills. Their daily use will establish conditions of perfect health. Remember these little pills are purely vegetable, and not only quickly restore the complexion, but are a positive cure for sick headache, constipation and biliousness in one night. All dealers, 25 cents.

For Liquozone, Yet We Give You a 50c. Bottle Free.

We paid $100,000 for the American rights to Liquozone; the highest price ever paid for similar rights on any scientific discovery. We did this after testing the product for two years, through physicians and hospitals, in this country and others. We cured all kinds of germ diseases with it—thousands of the most difficult cases obtainable. We proved that in germ troubles it always accomplishes what medicine cannot do. Now we ask you to try it—try it at our expense. Test it as we did; see what it does. Then you will use it always, as we do, and as millions of others do. You will use it, not only to get well, but to keep well. And it will save nearly all of your sickness.

Kills Inside Germs.

Liquozone is not made by compounding drugs, nor is there alcohol in it. Its virtues are derived solely from gas—largely oxygen gas—by a process requiring immense apparatus and 14 days' time. This process has, for more than 20 years, been the constant subject of scientific and chemical research.

The result is a liquid that does what oxygen does. It is a nerve food and blood food—the most helpful thing in the world to you. Its effects are exhilarating, vitalizing, purifying. Yet it is a germicide so certain that we publish on every bottle an offer of $1,000 for a disease germ that it cannot kill. The reason is that germs are vegetables; and Liquozone—like an excess of oxygen—is deadly to vegetal matter.

There lies the great value of Liquozone. It is the only way known to kill germs in the body without killing the tissues, too. Any drug that kills germs is a poison, and it cannot be taken internally. Medicine is almost helpless in any germ disease. It is this fact that gives Liquozone its worth to humanity. And that worth is so great that we have spent over one million dollars to supply the first bottle free to each sick one we learned of.

Germ Diseases.

These are the known germ diseases. All that medicine can do for these troubles is to help Nature overcome the germs, and such results are indirect and uncertain. Liquozone attacks the germs, wherever they are. And when the germs which cause a disease are destroyed, the disease must end, and forever. That is inevitable.

LIVE SORROW CRUSHES

MORE FORMIDABLE AND MORE AWFUL ENEMY THAN DEATH.

LAW OF LOVE IS UNEQUAL

One Who Makes Sacrifices Has Stronger Affection Than the One for Whom the Sacrifices Are Made—"A Foolish Son Is the Heaviness of His Mother," Saith the Preacher

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1905, by Frederick Diver, of Toronto, at the Dep't of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., March 12.—In almost every home throughout the land the topic chosen by the preacher in this sermon is a more or less familiar one. The text is Proverbs x. 1, "A foolish son is the heaviness of his mother."

Death is an enemy. The Bible distinctly declares it. I remember some years ago, when visiting one of the New Zealand cities, this thought was impressed upon me as never before. A young man, a musical genius, had lately come from London and captured that whole city by his organ playing. He was to play that Sunday in the church where we were worshipping. The night before, coming home from practicing upon the keys, he sat down to eat dinner with his wife and two children. Suddenly he began to gasp. A fishbone had caught in his throat. In a few minutes he was dead. The whole city was shocked at the awful tragedy. The church was draped in black. The organ was covered with crape. Among the sobs of the dead man's friends his pastor preached a eulogy upon this young man's life from I. Corinthians, xv., 26, "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." As the preacher uttered those solemn words they sank into his hearers' consciences, an axiomatic truth.

Oh, yes, death is an enemy. Death at times seems to be a cruel and a merciless enemy. It breaks asunder the marital bands. It lifts the little baby out of the crib and shuts her forever from our eyes by the closing of the coffin lid. It strikes down the strong man who is proclaiming God's word in the pulpit. It empties the office of the physician who is bending over the patient. It sometimes sends the pleading lawyer to the grave even before the murderer whom he had defended expiates his crime upon the gallows. Oh, yes, death is an enemy. It snatches the mother away from the child just at the critical period when her presence seems to be essential for the moral life of her child.

But when listening to that sermon in the far-off country of New Zealand I soliloquized thus: "That widow is to-day having her heart crushed by the hearse's wheels, even as the Indian juggernaut used to mangle the bodies of the Hindoo devotees. But a living sorrow can be more formidable and a more awful enemy than a sorrow of the grave. The fiendish acts of a dissolute, a debauched, a drunken, a cruel or an unfaithful husband can weigh more heavily upon the wife's heart than the corpse of a dead husband. And by the same reasoning the evil deeds of an undutiful or unfaithful son fall upon the parental heart with a more crushing weight than the sod that falls upon the coffin lid of a dead child. Thus, to-day, from a parental standpoint, I would preach upon the agonizing sufferings of a father and a mother when their children go astray and do wrong. I include here the father's sufferings, as well as the mother's. The full wording of the verse of my text includes both parents. "A wise son maketh a glad father." That sentence, interpreted from the negative standpoint, means, "A bad boy maketh a sad father, and a foolish son is the heaviness of his mother."

Why sad? Why heavy? First because the true father and mother can never separate their joys and sorrows from the joys and sorrows of their child. Though a man may live after his right arm has been amputated, the hand and the arm cease to live as soon as the surgeon's knife has cut the arteries and the bones which unite them to the shoulder. But here nature seems to reverse the conditions of life. Though a child may live independent of his parent, a true parent can never live independent of his children. From the parental standpoint the parental life and the child life are not only bone of one bone and flesh of one flesh, but their existences are truly grafted upon each other. They derive their joys from the same source; their sorrows make both hearts beat as one; they are interdependent. Like the Siamese twins, they have the same flow of blood through their arterial systems.

From the standpoint of a child you may not believe this. You ask: Is not the love between parent and child a mutual love? Why, then, should not its separation affect the one equally with the other? Oh, no! The law of love is unequal. The one who makes sacrifices has a stronger affection than the one for whom the sacrifices are made. I go into the sculptor's studio, and I say: "Thorwaldsen, why art thou bending so lovingly over yonder piece of cold marble? Has the stone a heart?" "Oh, no," answers the Danish sculptor. "I do not love this stone because it has a heart. I love it because I have put my heart into it in my effort to bring out the beautiful figure which there I see slumbering or beckoning to me from the cold stone." Why does the artist love his canvas and the composer his oratorio? Because their life's work has gone into the creations of those masterpieces of art or of music. Why did Christopher Wren's life seem to be anchored to St. Paul's Cathedral, and Isaac Newton's life to his laboratory? Because in these places these men spent most of their earthly existence in order to work out the problems of their lives.

Love inspired by sacrifice. That is true. Then how can a true father and mother help loving their children? How can they ever separate their existence from the joys and sorrows, the successes and failures of their children? Oh, how many sacrifices they have made! Was it ten years of sacrifice? More than that—twenty years, thirty years, forty years. For years and years the burden of raising their families never left their minds and hearts. If I could take you back to your old homestead thirty years ago, I would find all you children sound asleep. The mother and father—what are they talking so earnestly about? "Father," says the mother, "cannot you meet the mortgage on the farm unless we cut down our expenses? Then I will have to let the hired girl go, and I will do my own cooking and washing." "Well," said your father, "we must not economize at the children's expense. I must make more money. We must raise the children right. They must be educated."

Why did your mother's hair grow white at thirty-five years of age and your father's face begin to be "crow marked?" Neither in the morning, noon nor night could they be found shrinking from their unceasing labors for feeding, clothing and educating their children. Now man, do you think it is possible, after a quarter of a century of the hardest kind of work has gone for the support and development of the children, that the parents could ever be independent of them? Oh, no. Your father practically said: "If my children turn against me, then will my life be a failure indeed. If my boys turn out badly and my girls do not do what they ought to do, then will earthly life hold but little joy either for me or their mother." My friends, your fathers and mothers worked too hard for their children for you to disappoint them in the results of their life's work. No matter what you do or say, you cannot make them forget you or cease to live for you. Even the sinful plot of a Hebrew prince to steal from a father his throne could not make David do aught but cling to Absalom while he was alive, and sorrow for the wayward boy after he was dead.

But another reason why the burden of a sinful child is hard for the parent to bear—no sooner does a boy or a girl begin to go astray than a true father and mother agonize on account of the stingings of a bitter self-reproach. Mark you this, wayward children—your parents do not blame you entirely for your sins. They are blaming themselves. They are looking away back over the scenes of the past. They are saying to their own hearts: "Did I do right when I let my boy do this or that or the other thing? Did I set my daughter the wrong example? Did I pray earnestly enough for my children when they were in my own nursery?" Oh, the sadness; oh, the sorrow; oh, the bitter, bitter pangs of a merciless self-denunciation which comes to the parents, when their boys and girls turn out badly! "A foolish son is the heaviness of his mother."

But, my friends, though your parents made many mistakes in your bringing up, tell me were not most of their errors made on account of the gentleness rather than the meanness of their hearts? Even in their weaknesses, would you not have had them just as they were? Let me see; you started to go astray first because they trusted you too much. They never thought that you would or could do wrong. When you came home from college they were so proud to see you. They had kept sending check after check. My, how hard it was to get that money! But it was for their boy. And, oh, the awful awakening they had when they found the money they sent, that hard earned money, was being spent for sin! Don't you remember how their hands trembled when they were placed upon your shoulder and their lips quivered when they kissed you for the first time after that shock? Don't you remember how their tears—not your tears, but theirs—were left upon your cheek when they kissed you, a prodigal, returning home?

Don't you remember how angry your father became when your employer first insinuated that you had embezzled some of his money? Old as he was, his clenched fist was ready to knock that employer down. But after the undeniable proofs were presented, what did he do? Did he allow you to be sent to jail, as you ought to have been? It did no good to pay up that deficit or embezzlement. Since then you have been cheating everyone else you could. No, he did not let you go to jail. He took every dollar that he had saved up to care for your mother and himself in their old age. He turned it all in and signed notes for a thousand dollars more to save you from your just punishment. He ought not to have done it, but now in his old age are you still going to sin and have him lacerated by remorse because he has been too kind to you?

But is it to be wondered at that parents, on account of their great love for their children, err many times over by being lenient? For years I never had sympathy for fathers and mothers who, as I expressed it, were willing to pay their children's expenses to perdition. I always said if I had any boys and they got drunk once I would forgive them and get their clothes out of pawn and get them on their feet again. If they stole once I would keep them from going to jail. But, if they did it the second time, to the jail or to the county poorhouse they would go. As my own boys are now growing up, do I think I would do it? Perhaps. But I fear I would do just as most fathers do. I would make the mistake of giving all I had, of running into debt, and, if necessary, perhaps, of destroying my own good name, if I could only save my boys. Oh, wayward children, it is not you who should blame your fathers and mothers which proves to have been mistaken! They were indulgent to you, they were blind to your faults, they trusted you, believing that you would do right. You see now, as they see, that it would have been better for you if they had been more strict and severe. But will you blame them for that? It was their love for you that was their fault. How have you repaid that love? Return, I beseech you, and beg their forgiveness and ask God for pardon for your sins against him and them.

But there is another reason why we sympathize with broken-hearted parents who are bearing the heavy burdens of wayward and sinful children. Those burdens are placed upon backs too weak to carry them and upon hearts when they are too tender to suffer. It makes a great deal of difference how a man can bear a burden, whether he is old or young, sick or well, tottering or straight limbed. You would not hitch an old horse up to a load he could easily have drawn in his prime. Neither, foolish son, should you make your parents, in their old age, bear the burdens of your sins.

How old are your parents? "Oh," you say, "father is about sixty years of age, and mother is about the same." You know when our parents married they did not do as many people of the present day. They did not wait until they had amassed a fortune. Then the daughters were ready to start with the sons at the bottom of the ladder to climb up. Therefore, they married when they were young. Once young together, now they have grown old together." And then your lip quivers as you say: "But mother is not as strong as she used to be, and that old pain has come back in father's heart. He had a fainting spell last week." Ah, yes, they are growing old together! Perhaps one of them is already gone. Is it not a mean act, an awfully mean act, on your part to take a broken-down woman or an old broken-down man and place upon them the burden of your unpardoned sins? They once carried you in their arms; now you ought to be willing to let them lean upon your arm. They once wiped away your tears; now you should be willing to wipe away theirs. They once lived and are still living to make you happy; now you ought to strive to make their last days happy. Do not put that heavy burden of your wickedness upon their hearts. They are too old to bear it.

"Oh," says someone, "would that I could do as you ask! I would do anything on earth if I could only lift the burden of my sins, which I compelled my dear old father and mother to carry, but it is too late—it is, alas, too late! They are now forever past carrying the burden of my sins. My father died as did the father of the Scotch poet. On his sickbed he was asked by his minister if he was worried about anything. Then my father looked at me as the father of Robert Burns looked at his son on a similar occasion, and he answered: 'Nothing. I am worrying about nothing except my boy Robert.' But father is dead now. I can never bring him back to tell him how I have repented of my past sins."

Your father and mother beyond the burden of your sins? Friend, I do not know about that. Even in Heaven I think they are still longing and hoping for our salvation. I for one cannot understand how there can be joy in Heaven over one sinner that repenteth and not any thoughts about us who are still unrepentant. I do not believe it beyond the range of possibilities for our dear ones to be anxious about our unrepentant souls. Even now I would not be surprised if they were sending forth an angelic messenger to find out what our decision is to be. Heaven, beautiful Heaven! Have our redeemed parents any burdens about our unpardoned sins in Heaven?

Perhaps, by taking you on a past journey to a place where I spent most of my boyhood days I might help you to a decision to give your hearts to Jesus Christ. The journey which you are to take occurred a short time after my father's burial. After his body had been laid away to sleep by the side of my mother, I said to my sister, "Come, let us go and look at the old house." We walked down the street where we both had played many years before. As I went along I began to call up the names of the different neighbors. But the houses now had strange faces looking out of the windows. The little children who were playing in the street looked much like my old playmates. They laughed and shouted and jumped just as we used to jump, but their eyes were different. They edged off from the sidewalk as we came along. We were strangers to them.

Ah, yes, here is the old house. It stands as a sentinel overlooking Fort Green Park, where one of the old Revolutionary battles was fought, and where some of the old Revolutionary veterans lie buried. From the outside the old house looked about the same. There was the vine mother planted, still crawling over the side and clinging to the roof and trying to cover up the windows. Indeed, the house looked so much like the past that I thought for an instant mother would be waiting for me in the front room to welcome me home from college. Just to the rear of the house was the old grapevine arbor built by Captain Spicer before he lost his wife and manly son, whom I can just remember. I had often taken my dessert of fruit there before I answered the dinner bell. But, come; I must not linger outside. Here, let me take a peek in at the window. I wonder if yonder policeman will think I am a thief. He wears just the same kind of brass buttons as did the officer who used to chase me off the park grass when I was playing "hound and hares" and climbing up yonder walls more like a trapeze performer than a hare scurrying for her burrow.

Up and through the house we went. Each room had for us a history. In each place we could see the living and the dead side by side. Now it was a sister in her bridal robes, now a deathbed scene, now—but stop; I cannot go further. You would not have me if you could. The history of my old home was merely the history of yours, only under other names. With us it was Jessie, De Witt, May, Edith, Frank, Daisy, Maude. With you it was Gertrude, Sarah, Carrie, William, John, Walter. Names different; scenes all the same.

That afternoon I went away from the old homestead with a sad heart. "All that scene of love gone forever!" I kept saying, "All gone, all gone!" Is it all gone forever? But that night as I sped on west toward my own home, where my wife and children were waiting to greet me, I was looking out of the train window. I had my cheek resting upon my hand. I know not whether I was asleep or awake. But, whether asleep or awake, suddenly a strange vision came to me. I seemed to see the dear faces of my loved ones who are gone. Among the twinkling stars of the night I saw their bright eyes and heard them speaking to me. They seemed to say: "The past is not dead. We are going to have our reunions again. We are here waiting. We are waiting for you. Will you live for Christ as we lived, that we may have these reunions?"

Are our parents in Heaven concerned about us? They so loved us here, they were so anxious about our best interests, that I cannot believe they have forgotten us now. What news could so gladden their hearts, could the angelic messengers that pass from earth to Heaven bring to them, than the news of your repentance? Shall we let them wait and keep waiting for our answer? Father, mother, we are coming! Yes, in a little while, after we have done our work for Christ, we shall come. Oh, sinful child, thou art not an orphan. You have a Heavenly Father waiting. You have a redeemed earthly father and mother waiting. Wilt thou not lift from them the burden of their anxiety? Wilt thou not enhance their Heavenly joys by the assurance that thou art coming to complete the family circle around the throne?

Prince Edward Co.'s House of Refuge

Picton Gazette: It is understood that a petition has been circulated and signed by a number of the people of Hallowell, asking the County Council to purchase the Wood property—better known as the old Quaker school property—for a House of Refuge, instead of the Vandusen property at the head of Washburn street. It matters little to the people of Picton which of these two places are selected, but in the point of economy, it would appear that the latter place would be preferable, for this reason, if for no other. On the one place is a large brick house, which would not be available, because a House of Refuge must be constructed according to certain plans and specifications, inasmuch as the Government provides one-quarter of the cost up to $10,000. On the other place there are no buildings and the premises could receive the benefit of the town electric light and water works system, and would be within easy reach of the canning factories, in the event of raising produce for these industries, as well as readily available for extra laborers should they be required to harvest the crops, or at any other time. In any event, however either place would be acceptable to Picton, and it is hoped that a satisfactory solution of the problem will be reached at an early date, so that the work of construction may proceed with on the opening of spring.

CHURCH CHIMES OF YESTERDAY.

NOTES OF SERVICES IN BELLEVILLE'S DIFFERENT PLACES OF WORSHIP.

Bridge Street.

In the morning the Rev. Geo. Brown occupied the pulpit, and in the evening the Pastor, Rev. J. P. Wilson. The latter preached an able sermon and made a few pointed and timely remarks regarding the Separate school question. His text was from Hebrews, 12th chapter and the latter portion of the 1st verse:

> "Let us lay aside every weight and the sin that doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us."

"Besetting Sins" was the subject discussed, and in his opening remarks the Rev. gentleman referred to what he considered was the besetting sin of various nations. Of late the besetting sin of Canada had been political corruption, and this was a sin which could and should be wiped out. At present this country was agitated by a serious matter, namely, that of Separate schools. A crisis was virtually at our doors. The Hierarchy wanted these schools, but he did not believe that the majority of the Roman Catholics in the country wanted them. It was to his mind truckling to the Roman Catholic vote. We should object to this wedge being inserted. It was a vicious thing to have this law enacted. The laws to govern Canada should be made in Canada, not in Italy. Equal privileges to all should be the motto. The Rev. gentleman then spoke generally of his subject, referring to the besetting sins in individuals, which can only be overcome and conquered by the love of God in the heart.

During the service the choir sang two anthems namely, "I Waited for the Lord," and "Crossing the Bar." In the former Miss Vermilyea sang a solo and also, with Miss Elsie Price, sang a duet. The ladies' quartette, composed of Misses E. and G. Price, M. Vermilyea and Wilson, sang very effectively a selection entitled "In the Hour of Trial."

Holloway Street.

In the morning the Pastor, Rev. R. H. Leitch, preached, his subject being "Human Responsibility." His text was from Genesis, 4th chapter and 3rd verse:

> "And in the process of time it came to pass that Cain brought of the fruit of the ground an offering unto the Lord."

During the service Miss Brereton sang very acceptably a solo entitled, "Abide With Me."

Emmanuel R. E. Church.

Good congregations were present at both services yesterday, and the Sunday School is regaining the interest which for some time had been lost. Last night the Rector, Rev. A. M. Hubly, preached a thoughtful and helpful sermon on "Faith," showing that St. Paul's definition of faith was the one which should appeal to all Christians.

St. Andrew's.

Rev. A. H. Drumm occupied the pulpit in the morning, and the Pastor, Rev. R. S. Laidlaw, in the evening. The latter's text was from St. Matthew, 22nd chapter and a portion of the 42nd verse:

> "What think ye of Christ?"

During the service the choir rendered an anthem entitled "The Better Land," the solos being sweetly taken by Miss Grace Webster. Messrs. McMechan and Joyce rendered a duet, "Raise Me, Jesus, to Thy Bosom," in splendid form.

Tabernacle.

Educational sermons were preached in this church yesterday, in the morning by the Rev. J. P. Wilson, B.A., and in the evening by the Rev. R. H. Leitch. The former's text was from Galatians, 6th chapter and 9th and 10th verses. In the morning Miss Sterk sang a solo entitled "Beyond the Gates," and in the evening Mr. and Mrs. M. C. Gordon rendered a duet entitled, "Jesus, Lover of My Soul."

Bethel Hall.

The subject last night was "The Times of the Gentiles," which it was shown began 600 years before Christ, when kingly power was taken from the Jews and handed over to Nebuchadnezzar because of the sins of Israel, earthly rule being still in the hands of Gentile powers and will so remain till after the rapture of the church (I. Thess. 4.) and the Lord returns with His saints and holy angels (Rev. 19), and judges the living nations (Matt. 25). His earthly people, the Jews, will again, during the millenium occupy their former place as head of all earthy powers; meantime during this dispensation God is not seeking to convert the world, but is taking out of it a people for Himself (Acts), and the invitation is to all who will to come to Him and find rest. The speaker announced a continuance of the subject next Sunday evening.

Christ Church.

"The Reformation" was discussed by the Rector, Rev. W. B. Heeney, at the evening service, which was largely attended. During the course of his address the Rev. gentleman spoke of the Separate School matter and unsparingly condemned the attitude of Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

LOUD LAUGHTER IN PETERBORO.

OVER THE APPOINTMENT OF A COAL MERCHANT AS SUPERINTENDENT OF THE TRENT VALLEY CANAL.

(Peterboro Review.)

A coal merchant in charge of the Trent Canal.

A tailor in charge of the Cornwall Canal.

A plumber in charge of the Grenville Canal.

There's a record for business men in the higher flights of political graft, position and emolument. Truly the Liberal Government at Ottawa is caring for its friends.

The man on the street is telling his friends of the confirmation of the appointment of our local and distinguished politician, Mr. J. Harris McClennan, as Superintendent of the Trent Canal. The man on the street speaks of it and bursts into unseemly laughter, thereby expressing some derision concerning the fitness of the appointment, and well he may. Are there no men in the Liberal ranks, having had a training and who are competent to direct this enterprise? Why should a coal merchant, no matter how skilled in his honorable profession, be selected? It is a case of pull, pure and simple. It is a pull resulting from the drowning out of aspirations as a candidate and giving way to the candidature of another.

It is understood that Mr. J. Harris McClellan has imparted to others the information that he is now in charge of all repairs and maintenance on the canal. If this be correct, and Mr. McClellan should know, things have come to a delightful pass when a government will entrust the expenditure of large sums of money and the direction of a work to a man who has never had a training to fit him for the position. Fancy our distinguished fellow citizen in charge of the lift lock and directing its operation and use from day to day. It is plain that if Mr. McClellan's appointment carries with it the responsibility he assumes it does, that the matter is one in which his authority overrides that of the Superintending Engineer and of those concerned with the operation of the works, and especially that of Mr. Rogers, the Engineer-in-charge. Mr. Rogers has, so to speak, spent his life on the canal, and has given his energy and ability with unstinted hand.

It will be interesting to note what is to follow in the future, the heads that may fall, the positions that will be made vacant. It will be interesting to note and to remember.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES,

FIRST OF THE NOONDAY LENTEN SERVICES BEGUN TO-DAY, AND PROVOKED MUCH INTEREST.

The noonday Lenten addresses for men in the Y.M.C.A. parlor began today at the hour of 12 o'clock, sharp, and lasted for 15 minutes only. This will be the hour and the length of the addresses each day. Rev. A. H. Drumm spoke to-day, on the subject, "Hunting for a Man." The address was a model of concise rhetoric and was greatly appreciated. The sober man, the righteous man, the godly man—that is, a man who does his duty towards himself, his neighbor, and towards God—he is the man who is wanted to-day in city, church and state, that God may use him as a channel of blessing to others. Christ was THE MAN in this threefold sense and is God's great channel of blessing to the world. The meeting was well attended, the parlor being nearly full of men.

Died of Heart Disease.

Mr. Richard Emmons, who was at one time a resident of this city, died suddenly on Saturday evening at Adolphustown. It appears that the deceased had recently moved from Prince Edward County and was doing some straightening up about his new premises, when he fell over and passed away. Heart disease was the cause of death. Mr. Emmons was about 55 years of age and leaves a widow and a family of eight children.

A Small Fire.

On Saturday afternoon fire did some damage to a house on Ann St., occupied by Mr. Jas. Eccles and owned by Mr. H. Cornell. The blaze originated upon the roof, but was soon extinguished when a stream was thrown upon it. The loss sustained is covered by insurance.

A Forgetful "Pegleg."

The police have been notified that on Saturday a man with a wooden leg hired a horse and rig from Mr. Spencer, liveryman of Frankford, and up to this morning had not yet returned. When he obtained the outfit he stated that he was only going for a couple of miles' drive.

HOCKEY.

How Ottawa Kept the Cup.

Ottawa, March 12.—For the seventh consecutive time, Ottawa has made a successful defence of the Stanley Cup and twice has Rat Portage failed to lift the mug which represents the hockey championship of the world. At Dey's Arena last evening, before the largest crowd which ever jammed into that rink, Ottawa defeated the Thistles by the narrowest possible margin, after the greatest game of hockey ever played in this city. Right till the call of time the issue was in doubt and it was anybody's game. The goal which gave the locals the victory was scored just two minutes and forty-five seconds before time was up. The final score was 5 to 4.

Never before had the cup defenders to travel at the pace the Thistles set them last night, and when it was all over the spectators freely admitted that there was practically nothing to choose between the rival teams, and that luck figured largely in the result. It was a hair-raising struggle, and admirers of the home team had heart failure at more than one stage of the contest. Each team appeared to have the game well in hand at various stages of the contest, and they see-sawed in the lead right till the finish. The Thistles got an early lead, but Ottawa tied and then the Thistles came back with another counter that put them in the lead. The half-time score was 2 to 1.

In the second half Ottawa scored first, and then it was the Thistles' turn. Ottawa gladdened the hearts of their admirers by registering two in succession and assuming the lead, but it was short lived, the Thistles coming back with another counter. In the final stages of the contest the spectators were in a fever of excitement, and the enthusiasm displayed when Frank McGee scored the goal which won the match, with but a couple of minutes remaining to play, was unbounded. It seemed as though the spectators would never cease cheering.

The defeat of the Thistles emphasized forcibly that any team which has designs on the Stanley Cup must be able to play Ottawa in their own methods and rough it from start to finish. Last night's game was not as rough an exhibition as on Thursday night, but it was pretty stiff going for all that, and the Thistles were the greatest sufferers. In the first half the double referee system was used, and Ottawa played a comparatively clean game—for Ottawa—though the defence handed out bumps unsparingly to the Thistle forward line, and the forwards made dexterous use of their sticks as weapons, Frank McGee and Billy Gilmour being particularly aggressive in this respect.

In the second period, with one man as referee, the Ottawas cut loose, and went in to clinch possession of the mug. Referee Mike Grant may have tried to be impartial, but to the western contingent and many from the east it certainly looked as though he gave the Thistles the worst of it. He allowed glaring cases of slashing, hooking and deliberate hitting in the face by the local team to go unnoticed, while for minor offences, such as tripping, he punished the Rats severely.

The Thistles blame Bellefeuille's absence from the ice for ten minutes in this half as largely responsible for their defeat. He was ruled off twice for five minutes at a crack once for a trip and once for knocking McGee down with his stick accidentally while playing the puck. It was not, however, so much what the Ottawa team did last night in introducing rough tactics as what happened in Thursday's game, when the Thistles were chopped to pieces, which beat the challengers. Griffis and McGimsie went on the ice last night fitter for the hospital than for the hockey arena. They both had wrenched knees, and were still rather weak from the fearful gruelling which they took in the previous game. They, along with the other players, were jolted good and plenty on every possible occasion last evening, and, as a result, their effectiveness was decreased 50 per cent. McGimsie was so done out that in the second half he fell down from sheer weakness in a scrimmage in the Thistles' goal, and was unable to get up for a few seconds. When he did rise to his feet Referee Grant ruled him off for five minutes for obstructing the goal. Hooper had a nasty knee, too, and he injured it early in the game, when Pulford almost heaved him over the boards into the crowd with a dirty charge from behind. Every one of the Thistles, except Brown, after the game was marked up. "Tommy" Phillips had his face cut open in three places and his eye closed, and he looked as though he had been in a railroad wreck. Griffis had a beautiful countenance, decorated by a swollen nose, split lips and a gash on his forehead. The Thistles took defeat gamely, though, and never kicked. Captain Phillips congratulated the Ottawas on their victory, and said he was satisfied with the result, as it showed plainly that his team was fully as good as the Ottawas. He thought, with the double referee and cleaner methods by Ottawa, his team would have won out.

Captain Alf. Smith paid the Thistles a compliment after the game, saying they were the best team that ever came from the west after the Stanley Cup. Still, he thought Ottawa should have made the victory more decisive.

Referee Grant admitted that there was practically nothing to choose between the teams, and what the Thistles lacked in trickery they made up in speed. He thought that if the Thistles had continued to play hockey in the second half and not tried to even up with Ottawa for rough work they would have won.

The Thistles were given an enthusiastic send-off at the station to-day, when they left for Montreal, where they play the Wanderers on Tuesday night.

Harvey Pulford was the star of the Ottawa team in last night's game. He played roughly and never overlooked an opportunity to do bodily injury to the Thistles, but, with all, played a wonderful game. His defensive tactics, while strenuous, were of the most approved brand for preventing goals, and he figured prominently in the limelight as a shifty forward, too. He did some mighty, effective rushing, and two of the Ottawas' goals were directly attributable to his rushes, McGee taking the puck and doing the shooting on each occasion after Pulford had bored in on the nets with the disk. Finnie, in goal, did very well, though Moore was not any too brilliant. McGee was in great form and scored three of Ottawa's goals, though he missed several easy chances as well. He is pretty nearly the best centre in the business, though undoubtedly the dirtiest forward playing the game to-day. Smith was also in fine shape. "Tommy" Phillips and Griffis were the best of the Thistles' attack. Griffis did not do so well as in the other games, owing to his injuries, but time and again he electrified the crowd by brilliant dashes through the entire Ottawa team. Phillips was busy with his little rod again. Tommy put it all over Smith when it came to individual work, too, and he and McGee were the busiest men on the ice. Giroux, in goal, put up a splendid game, some of his saves being of the marvellous order. Brown and Bellefeuille completed a fine defence, though the latter spoiled his work by being ruled off when he was required on the ice. Hooper played better than in either of the two previous games, and more than held his own with Gilmour. He was quite aggressive, and nearly put Pulford out of the game in the second half with a hard body check.

In the second half the Thistles were most of the time playing one man short, and part of the time they were two short. At one stage of the game they were playing with only four men. The Thistles' first goal in the second half was scored with only five men on against seven. The visitors all through showed more combination than in either of the previous games, though it was of the two and three men order, while Ottawa used the whole line. Referee Mike Grant was bad on off-sides. Two of the Ottawas' goals were scored on rank off-sides, one pass from Pulford to McGee being fully ten feet from the straight line across. He seemed to catch the Thistles on off-sides whenever it looked as though they had a chance to score and break away together.

SPORTING NOTES.

Ninety-nine people out of a hundred in this city were sorry when they heard that the plucky "Rats" had lost at Ottawa. They deserved better luck.

A Winnipeg syndicate offers to bet $10,000 that Rat Portage can defeat Ottawa on neutral ice, with a judge of play as well as a referee. It's a safe bet that there will be no takers in Ottawa.

Playing for the Toronto city championship, the Marlboros beat St. Georges 8-4 on Saturday night.

Harry Brown, of this city, who has been playing hockey in Nova Scotia, says the Nova Scotia champions would have no chance for the Stanley Cup. They have the speed, but lack skill and experience.

Fergus Grits beat the Tories at curling. The winners were not skipped by G. W. Ross.

The final C.A.H.L. match was played in Montreal on Saturday, Quebec beating Montreal by 10 to 8.

The Ballot-Box Trial.

INTEREST INCREASING — PROSPECTS OF A BUSY TIME NEXT WEEK.

As the day for the opening of the Assizes draws near, interest in the famous ballot-box cases grows more intense. The Assizes opens at 1 p.m. to-morrow, and the first afternoon is almost certain to be quite taken up by the deliberations of the Grand Jury. Then there are some civil causes, which, if brought on first, as they generally are, may occupy all day Wednesday. It is possible, of course, that the ballot-box trials may come up at first. The alleged criminal libel case of E. Guss Porter, M.P., vs. T. S. Carman, will surely come up at this court, as will also the case of the King vs. Rielly, Whalen, Ruttan and Harryett. It is whispered that a lot of new and interesting evidence will be given. Rumor says that Phil Lott has more to tell. Ex-Police Magistrate Harryett will be defended by Mr. Robinette, of Toronto. The name of a well-known Conservative lawyer of this city is mentioned as the one who will defend Rielly. As stated in The Intelligencer of Saturday, 96 jurymen and over 100 witnesses have been summoned. It will take some time to examine the latter. Lent may be over before the cases are finished. Already the hotels are filling up, and by to-morrow accommodation will be at a premium. Once more Belleville is the storm centre, and in a day or so all Canada will be listening to the telegraphic tales which go forth from this city. We're getting well advertised anyhow.

RUSS HOME TROUBLES.

Serious Situations Everywhere, and the Peasant Movement to Possess the Land Is Extending.

London, March 13.—Special despatches to the London newspapers from St. Petersburg, Kieff and elsewhere all report serious internal situations, and especially the extension of the peasant movement, even to the Baltic Provinces. It is declared in these despatches that the peasants are trying to forcibly possess themselves of land, and that they are burning and otherwise destroying property wholesale.

CAMPAIGN IS SYSTEMATIC.

Recurrence of Strikes in Poland Points to Socialistic Agitators.

Warsaw, March 13.—Agitation among the peasants against the use of the Russian language in the local administration is increasing. Acting Governor-General of Warsaw Podgorodnikoff Saturday issued a proclamation imposing the severest penalties, consisting of fines and imprisonment, on persons who in any way interfere with the local officials. Peasants' strikes constantly break out in new centres where laborers are admittedly well treated. This is regarded as indicating that a systematic campaign has been opened throughout the country by Socialist agitators.

Bomb's Owner Killed.

St. Petersburg, March 13.—The explosion of a bomb at the Hotel Bristol, adjoining the Hotel d'Angleterre here, just before daylight Saturday morning, blew to atoms the owner of the bomb, a man with an English passport, and giving the name of Alfred Henry McCullough, and wrecked the adjoining rooms, killing the wife of an officer and injuring several other lodgers.

To Expel Schoolboys.

Warsaw, March 13.—The authorities have decided to order the schools to reopen on Tuesday, and unless the boys return within a week, to expel them. It is expected that the majority will continue the strike, and hence parents have appealed to the Minister of Education at St. Petersburg to keep the schools closed until the situation is clearer.

BREAKS CHATHAM JAIL.

Dan Forsythe Breaks Officer's Rib and Bruises His Head.

Chatham, March 13.—Dan Forsythe, grain stealer, who the other day pleaded guilty to several charges of theft before P. M. McKinlay of Ridgetown, and was confined in the County Jail here, made a dash for liberty Saturday night about 10 o'clock. Calling the turnkey on the pretence of wanting a drink, he overcame him, locked him in his cell, and after striking down a pal, Charles Benjamin, who was in another cell, because he refused to run for it also, made his escape by way of a window overlooking the porch. Benjamin released the officer, whom Dr. Charteris, jail surgeon, found had received a broken rib and injuries about the head.

British Government Appointments.

London, March 13.—Official announcement is made of the appointment of Walter Hume Long, President of the Local Government Board, to succeed Mr. Wyndham as Chief Secretary for Ireland. Gerald Balfour, President of the Board of Trade, succeeds Mr. Long; the Marquis of Salisbury, Lord of the Privy Seal, becomes President of the Board of Trade, retaining his former office, and Allwyn Fellowes, Junior Lord of the Treasury, is appointed President of the Board of Agriculture, succeeding the Earl of Onslow, who recently was appointed Chairman of Committees in the House of Lords.

McINTOSH BROS.

HAULTAIN TO PREMIER

Writes Open Autonomy Letter to Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Opposes the Education Plan of Dominion Government, and Asks That the New Provinces Be Put on the Same Footing as Other Provinces, Except Ontario and Quebec—The School Lands Fund.

Ottawa, March 13.—Hon. F. W. G. Haultain, Premier of the Northwest Territories, has addressed a long letter to Sir Wilfrid Laurier, explaining his position with regard to the Alberta and Saskatchewan bills. In the first place, he expresses the opinion that there is no necessity for dividing the country into two Provinces separated by a purely arbitrary line, and with their machinery and institutions duplicated. He, however, admits that opinion in the Territories is not unanimous, and that the proposals of the Government will not evoke much hostile criticism. He adds that he thinks the dividing line should be at least 75 miles further east.

The Education Question.

Premier Haultain takes strong exception to the treatment of the education question, both at the conferences and in the bills. From this letter it appears that neither his colleague nor himself was made aware of the proposals until noon of the day on which the bills were introduced. Proceeding to the school clauses themselves, Mr. Haultain insists that the New Provinces be put on the same footing in this regard as all the other Provinces of the Dominion, except Ontario and Quebec. He maintains that the Dominion Parliament is bound by the provisions of the British North America Acat and cannot legislate in advance on the subject.

Regarding the provisions of public money, Premier Haultain refers in detail to Dominion legislation as to the school lands fund, and contends that the words "Public Schools" cannot mean or include any other schools, and that sub-section 3 of section 16—entitling the Separate Schools to a rateable share of public money—is a direct interference by Parliament with the right of a Province to do as seems best with its own. The latter part of the letter deals with the provisions as to public domain, irrigation, the financial arrangements, and the selection of judges, on all of which points Premier Haultain makes suggested amendments. In closing he intimates his intention to make the letter public, as the matter has now become a subject for public discussion.

Yankee Fish in Canada Waters.

Burlington, Vt., March 13.—Former Gov. M. W. Fiske was summoned to Ottawa Saturday to confer with the officials there regarding the efforts of the North American Fish and Games Protective Association and the State of Vermont to prevent seining in Lake Champlain.

Recently Hon. Raymond Prefontaine, Canadian Minister of Marine and Fisheries, declined to issue an order-in-council forbidding the seining of fish in Missoquoi Bay, in Quebec Province, into which, it is claimed, millions of fish put in the lake by the United States Fish Commission go to spawn.

President Roosevelt has been appealed to by the Vermont authorities.

Parent Will Not Resign.

Montreal, March 13.—"There is not the slightest question of my resignation at present," declared Premier Parent at the Place Viger Saturday morning. "All I want is British fair play," concluded Mr. Parent, "and I think no faction in the Legislature should desire to deprive me of that. My honor has been impugned. I cannot leave office while such a condition exists. I demand that the whole matter be cleaned up, and then I shall bem ore than glad to fulfil my long desire to resign."

AFTERMATH OF MUKDEN

The report received in the afternoon of March 11 says: "Our various detachments hotly pursuing enemy from all directions and inflicting considerable damage upon him everywhere. Occupied on the afternoon of March 10 a line extending 13 miles to the north of Hunho, and are still continuing the pursuit on March 11.

One detachment, which proceeded northwards on the morning of March 11 from the neighborhood of Puho, met a large column of the enemy retreating northwards, and after a hand to hand fight we enveloped the column, which finally surrendered.

Near Mukden we are now engaged in clearing remnants of the routed enemy, some of whom still continue resistance, while the others come to surrender.

Heaps of Russian corpses are found everywhere.

THE RUSSIAN RETREAT.

Kuropatkin Takes Charge and Disputes Every Inch of Ground With the Japs.

Tie Pass, March 13.—For many versts all the approaches to Tie Pass are covered with troops, artillery and baggage transport pressing northward, and 25 miles away the strong rearguard of troops, which is commanded personally by Gen. Kuropatkin, is retiring slowly, doggedly disputing with the pursuing enemy every foot of ground in order to cover the retreat of the remainder of the army.

Retreat to Tie Pass Ordered.

The order to abandon Mukden and retreat to the Tie Pass position was given at 9 o'clock on the evening of March 9. It was realized if any point of the Russian line gave way all would be lost. The position in the most extreme danger appeared to be north of Mukden Station, where it seemed for a time the Japanese might break through and entirely cut the lines of retreat. Gen. Kuropatkin concentrated heavy columns there, took command himself.

Burned Everything Possible.

Before beginning the retreat all the depots, stores and military buildings and everything that would be of service to the Japanese was set on fire. A large amount of baggage and many guns were abandoned. All rolling stock belonging to the main railroad was brought away and not a single car or locomotive was left at Mukden, though some cars belonging to the military roads behind the Shakhe River positions were abandoned.

Wounded Left Behind.

About 10,000 severely wounded Russians and several hundred Japanese were left at Mukden hospitals, together with a complete Russian medical staff, which was entrusted to the care of the chivalrous Japanese. The remainder of the wounded in hospitals were sent northward and a railroad train remained behind almost with the rearguard, and brought off a train load of those wounded in the retreat, many of them reaching Tie Pass without their injuries being bandaged. Mukden Station was abandoned at 7 o'clock Friday morning.

Bombarded on Both Sides.

The retreating columns were bombarded on both flanks by batteries, which it was impossible to silence, the shells reaching the Mandarin Road from the east with especial frequency from the villages of Tawan, eight miles north of Mukden and Pu, five miles further north. Under these circumstances the retreat was conducted with astonishing precision, which was largely due to the personal efforts of Gen. Kuropatkin, who, with haggard face and uniform yellow with dust was everywhere when needed.

In ordering a retreat, Gen. Kuropatkin is said to have declared it was done in order to satisfy protesting opinion, and whatever the blame he would take it, which in the light of events seems to show that he best knew the capacity of the soldiers.

Strenuous War.

For ten hours not a man nor a horse rested, while the wounded were being gathered up on the topsides, in the rear, and often in the centre, and every energy was bent towards getting out of a trap, the jaws of which were almost upon the Russians. The forty miles of retreat was accomplished in seventeen hours. It was virtually through plowed fields, with enormous dust clouds, which made it impossible to see any distance.

Toronto, March 13.—The estate of Mrs. M. E. Myles is contesting the right of the Province to collect succession duties on a sum of $300,000 left her, which, it is claimed, was taxed when left to Mrs. Myles by her father, J. G. Worts, and for that reason should not be taxed again.

FIREMAN MEETS DEATH

Alex. Nairn Dragged a Hundred Feet By the Cars At Galt

While Shunting on the Grand Trunk Railway He Fell Off the Tender—Was Not Missed by Engineer for Some Time, and Was Quite Dead When Found—Other Accidents.

Galt, March 13.—The inquest into the fatal accident which occurred at the western station of the G. T. R. at 9 o'clock on Saturday, will be resumed to-day. The victim was Alexander Nairn of Palmerston, 23 years old. He was a fireman on the 8.30 accommodation train from the south. While shunting in the yard he is supposed to have climbed up on the tender to ascertain if there was sufficient water in the tank with which to run to Guelph. The engine was backing up at the time, and Nairn fell off the tender under the cars. He must have been dragged 100 feet, for it was some time before he was missed by the engineer. The train was stopped and the body of the fireman taken from under the tender. He was then lying parallel with the rails. He was quite dead. His head was crushed and torn. On examination, Dr. Vardon found that the spine was also broken and his right foot crushed. The body was taken Saturday night to Palmerston by Louis Nairn, the father, who is a farmer near that town.

Trolley Kills Little Boy.

Toronto, March 13.—While having a game of tag with several of his little playmates, Charles Harold Beasley, 5 years old, was struck and instantly killed by a south-bound trolley car within a few yards of his home, 240 Church Street, shortly after 6 p. m. Saturday. The body of the little victim was found stretched across the track, between the fender and the front trucks. Dr. J. M. Johnston, who was one of the passengers, pronounced the little fellow to have been killed instantly. The head was badly crushed, the brains oozing out. A particularly sad feature was the circumstance that Saturday was the birthday of the little fellow's three-year-old sister, and a few little friends had been called in to the birthday party. It was while enjoying play afterwards that the sad happening occurred. The father, William Beasley, is a candy manufacturer.

FATALLY SHOT HIS CHUM.

Buffalo Youth Succumbs From Gun Charge in Leg at Niagara.

Niagara-on-the-Lake, March 13.—A fatal shooting accident occurred here about 3 o'clock Saturday afternoon, in which a young man named Haskell, about 19 years of age, son of Dr. Haskell of Buffalo, lost his life.

Haskell, in company with a young man named Shoemaker of Youngstown, N. Y., had been on the river duck shooting. They afterward pulled into McIntyre's dock, near the waterworks pumping station, and were firing at a tin can on the end of the wharf.

Shoemaker was holding the gun with the hammer up, when his foot slipped, the jar discharging the weapon, the charge entering Haskell's leg above the knee, inflicting a horrible wound. The unfortunate man was taken to the pumping station and medical aid summoned, but he died 20 minutes later.

The coroner decided an inquest unnecessary.

Dynamite Thawer Killed.

Winnipeg, March 13.—While thawing some dynamite at Dunn's quarry at Stony Mountain, Saturday morning, William Smith, an employe, was instantly killed in an explosion that followed. The tragedy occurred at 10 o'clock. Smith was a well-known resident of Stony Mountain. He was 40 years of age and leaves a family of eight children and a widow.

Broke Leg at Paris.

Toronto, March 13.—William Wallace, machinist, who boards at the Neelon House, while stepping from one car to another at Paris Station, fell and broke his leg. On his arrival in Toronto he was taken in an ambulance to St. Michael's Hospital.

HAVOC FROM SPREAD RAILS.

One Man Dead, 9 Hurt, and Many Cars Badly Wrecked.

Butler, Pa., March 13.—The southbound express on the Buffalo, Rochester and Pittsburg Railway, was wrecked Saturday night near McCalmont Station three miles south of Butler. One man was killed and nine injured. Engineer Edward Wilkes of Dubois, Pa., was killed, his body being buried under his engine.

The express had just crossed a bridge over Connoquenissing Creek, when the pony trucks of the engine left the rails, causing an axle to break. The engine plunged into the bank at the right of the track and the express car which followed toppled over into the creek. The other cars were derailed, the car platforms were broken and the second passenger coach was telescoped six feet into the front car.

A spreading rail is blamed.

26 Welsh Colliers Killed.

Cardiff, Wales, March 13.—Twenty-six lives were lost as a result of the explosion which occurred Friday in the Cambrian colliery at Clydach Vale, in the Rhondda Valley.

Frightened to Death.

Severn, March 13.—Mrs. Cunningham, wife of George Cunninghom of Severn Bridge, dropped dead Saturday afternoon about 2 o'clock. The chimney caught fire, and the excitement incident therewith evidently was the cause of her death, as she had not before complained of feeling unwell.

To Hide the Disgrace.

Hamilton, March 13.—An inquest was opened by Coroner Ross Saturday morning on the body of the infant found buried under the barn of John Adams, Millgrove, who is generally known as William Marshall. The inquest was adjourned till next Thursday. In the meantime a post-mortem examination will be held with a view to finding out how the child died. The prisoner told the police the child was born on Feb. 23, and died two days later. He says the body was concealed to hide the disgrace.

KENNEDY LEFT A NOTE.

That Is a Practical Admission of His Having Done Deed.

London, March 14.—The remains of Joseph Kennedy, who committed suicide in Brantford Jail, after being sentenced to life imprisonment and 75 lashes for assaulting little Irene Cole, were turned over to the London Medical College by the order of the Provincial authorities, and when the clothing of the dead man was searched yesterday morning a note written by Kennedy was found.

In it Kennedy does not deny having committed the crime, but devotes himself to a contradiction of some details of the evidence given against him. He claimed that he did not have a chicken on the day that Irene Cole met her death in the "Willows," but admits that he made a purchase of a chicken the preceding day and disposed of the meal by 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

He says also that it is untrue that he was in a lumber yard near the "Willows," and that it was there he secured the poultry on the day the girl met her death. He says further that he had no idea at the time of his first arrest that he was charged with the murder of Irene Cole, the police of Brantford leading him to believe that he was wanted merely for sleeping in a barn.

The Russ Army Is Shattered.

Gathers Within Tie Pass for it Knows Not What.

Rumors Current of a Wide Eastward Flanking Movement to Cut off Retreat—Japs Press Onward, and by This Movement They Expect to Force Battered Enemy Into Plains and Take it Into Camp.

St. Petersburg, March 14.—Russia's grand army, with the exception of thousands killed or taken prisoners on the plains around Mukden, is gathering slowly behind the fortifications of Tie Pass, which were built as a refuge before the battle of Liaoyang, and is feverishly engaged in the work of reorganization and further strengthening its lines.

According to the general staff, the main body has already completed its retreat, and the rear-guard southward is falling back slowly, keeping in touch with pursuing columns of Japanese. In the complete absence of further information yesterday, it is difficult to say whether the pursuit has slackened or is being conducted by only a portion of the Japanese.

Every Man Is Valuable.

To the Russian army every man now is valuable, and the footsore and disheartened detachments have been given scarcely an hour's rest before being set at work with spade and pick, improving the defences of the pass. It may be, however, that even now they are being turned out of their positions. Rumors are current that a wide eastward flanking movement, begun before the battle, still is in progress and on the other side it is feared that columns are moving north of Fakoman to take a position in the Russian rear.

50,000 Wounded Carried Off.

Gen. Kuropatkin still holds command. An officer of the general staff said today that probably he will not retire until some semblance of order has been restored. The question of his successor is undetermined. There are indications that the food supply at Tie Pass is none too large, immense quantities having been burned at Mukden; and Russian correspondents telegraph that they have had nothing to eat for two days.

Gen. Kuropatkin now admits that 50,000 wounded were carried off, but says nothing as to how many killed, wounded and prisoners were left behind; and from his picture of a little handful of two officers and 150 men of the Imperial Rifles marching off, led by their gallant colonel, clinging to their standard, can be derived some idea of the losses sustained by the regiments that bore the brunt of the fighting. The exploit of the 500 at Balaclava pales beside this.

The Russian army is so badly crippled that offensive operations are impossible.

NOT OUT OF DANGER.

Victory-Flushed Soldiers of the Mikado Will Take Tie Pass.

London, March 14.—Russians who have reached Tie Pass, worn out from days of fighting and retreating, are not out of danger. The Japanese, it is reported, have already started another turning movement, which will force the Russians on to the plains north of Tie Pass, where, in their disorganized state, they would be easy prey for the victory-flushed soldiers of the Mikado. The men who escaped are strengthening the fortifications in Tie Pass, but it is hardly possible that the pass can be held in the face of overwhelming forces opposed to the Russians, and it is not likely that Oyama will rest satisfied with his victory at Mukden, as he did after Liaoyang.

KAULBARS IN THE HILLS.

Has Not Extricated Himself, But He Has Lost 28,000.

St. Petersburg, March 14.—Emperor Nicholas has summoned a War Council for to-day, at which the whole situation will be considered. Little information was vouchsafed at the War Office yesterday. Gen. Linevitch's army, although its units were scattered and confused, got off with the fewest losses. Gen. Kaulbars was the heaviest loser, leaving 28,000 prisoners in the hands of the Japanese. Kaulbars himself, with the remnant of his army, had a narrow escape. When the Japanese drove their wedge across the railroad above Mukden he just managed to pull clear by withdrawing south of the city and then moving southwestward into the mountains, barely in time to avoid Gen. Kuroki's columns, which were already at the Hun River, bombarding Fu Pass. According to the latest advices, Gen. Kaulbars is being pursued, and has not succeeded in extricating himself from the mountains. Gen. Meyendorff, commander of the First Army Corps, was wounded in the shoulder.

ALL THE JAPS IN PURSUIT.

Capture the Colors of 162nd, Engaged in Three Previous Wars.

Tokio, March 14.—Army Headquarters makes the following announcement:

"All our forces have advanced north, pursuing the enemy in all directions, and inflicting heavy damage, and they have defeated the enemy who attempted resistance at various places.

Abandoned Their Supplies.

"Our forces have completely cleared the enemy out of the districts 25 miles north of Mukden, and on Sunday were still pursuing them. The Russians abandoned countless carts of supplies and ammunition in the district for 13 miles from the vicinity of Kaolitun, south of Chiulikotzu, west of the railway, and sixteen miles north of Mukden. No time has yet been had to count them.

Colors of the 162nd Captured.

"One of the colors captured belonged to the 162nd Regiment, from the Vilna District, which had been engaged in three previous wars. Our Sinmintin garrison has arrested a paroled Russian officer from Port Arthur, who broke his parole at Shanghai, and proceeded to Sinmintin. Additional stores intended for the Russians have been seized at Sinmintin."

Chinese Celebrate Victory.

Newchwang, March 14.—Just as the Koreans celebrated the Japanese victory at the battle of the Yalu, so the Chinese at Newchwang are now in a spirit of great jubilation celebrating the fall of Mukden. Japanese and Chinese are parading the streets hand in hand.

JAPAN WILL WELCOME PEACE.

Will Name Terms if They Will Be Seriously Considered.

Washington, March 14.—When the Czar calls his War Council to-day he will be able to inform them that Japan will welcome peace on reasonable terms, and will promptly name her conditions, provided she receives trustworthy assurances that they will be seriously considered.

This the Emperor has learned from friendly chancelleries in Europe, as well as the general terms acceptable to Japan. These, it is said, include the retention by Japan of Port Arthur, a Japanese protectorate over Korea and an indemnity. From a high official the Associated Press hears that Russia has recalled her second Pacific squadron. An attache of a Russian Embassy in Europe as quoted as expressing the belief that Kuropatkin's recent defeat will force Russia to ask for peace.

PEACE IS EXPECTED.

Change Noticed in Japanese and Russian Embassies in London.

London, March 14.—While reports of peace negotiations are not confirmed at the Foreign Office or the Russian or Japanese Embassies, a distinct change of opinion obtains in diplomatic circles. Where heretofore talk of propositions for peace always have been minimized, now peace evidently is expected. This change particularly is noticeable at the Russian Embassy, where it was stated yesterday that it was probable, however, that Emperor Nicholas, influenced by public sentiment, might consent to negotiations. The Embassy said the St. Petersburg despatches yesterday summed up the situation correctly. It was said at the Embassy that certainly no negotiations had hitherto been attempted by either of the belligerents, but, "when negotiations commence it will not be through another power, but direct with Japan." At a neutral Embassy, however, the opinion was expressed yesterday that the German Emperor would be the peacemaker for Russia.

FRUIT GROWERS' REQUEST.

Hon. Mr. Monteith Promises Consideration—Succession Duties Increase.

Toronto, March 14.—The Co-operative Committee of the Ontario Fruit Growers' Association asked the Minister of Agriculture yesterday afternoon for a grant to aid in establishing a system of co-operation in packing and shipping fruit, four new power spraying machines and the appointment of an expert to assist packers and shippers. Hon. Mr. Monteith promised them consideration.

The succession duties for the past two months amounted to $177,000, an increase of $129,000 over the corresponding period last year.

The Ontario Government has commenced well. The Commission for the construction of the Temiskaming Railway has in the past, under the Ross Government consisted of five highly paid commissioners. This Commission has been dissolved and a new one appointed, consisting of but three, thus saving the salaries of two commissioners. The new Commission consists of—

Cecil B. Smith, of the city of Toronto, in the room and stead of Robert Jaffray, resigned;

Dennis Murphy, of the city of Ottawa, in the room and stead of E. Gurney, resigned;

Jacob L. Englehart, of the town of Petrolea, in the room and stead of F. S. Leonard, resigned.

Mr. Smith was selected because of his professional knowledge of engineering. He was formerly roadways engineer under the City Engineer, and left that post to accept full charge of the large contracting works of Mr. M. P. Davis, of Ottawa. He superintended all the masonry construction for the new Quebec bridge, and had charge of the contract for the works of the Canadian Niagara Power Company at Niagara Falls; and is regarded as one of the most expert practical engineers in the profession, whose advice on the Commission will be of very great value.

Mr. Dennis Murphy, of Ottawa, was Conservative candidate in the recent Provincial contest, but met defeat.

Mr. Englehart, is from Hon. Mr. Hanna's constituency, is a gentleman of fortune, and has a wide experience in the control of affairs.

On the whole the Commission is an exceptionally good one.

TIMELY TOPICS.

A seat on the New York Stock Exchange sold for $84,000, whereas, judging by appearances, you won't be able to get a seat at the Belleville ballot-box trials for love or money.

What does this mean? The Brockville Times says: They do say that some of the evidence at the bogus ballot-box trial beginning at Belleville to-morrow will be very interesting to Brockville people.

Let's see: Brockville. Brockville. Oh! yes, that's the town Mr. Geo. P. Graham lives in.

The Municipal World favors the publication of assessment rolls. The information thus presented, it says, would enable any intelligent ratepayer to determine the fairness of the assessor's appraisals throughout the municipality. Some Ontario councils have been publishing their assessment rolls, and no doubt many find benefits from so doing. This course was advocated in The Intelligencer long ago.

There is a world of wisdom and pathos in the following, which a correspondent sends to the Hamilton Times for publication: I don't often moralize, but one day this week I was called to the criminal court building on a matter of business and witnessed a scene that set me to thinking with an almost painful reality. The jury was out on the case of a young man, a mere boy, on trial for burglary. The baliff told me the case was a straight one, and conviction certain. The boy sat in a dazed condition beside his well dressed, and evidently refined father, a little sister prattled innocently on his knee, and wanted to know "When is oo cumin' home, bruver?" while the sad old grandmother, who was taking the place of the boy's dead mother wept silently as they all waited for the verdict which meant so much to the wayward boy and them all. Soon the jury came and the verdict was handed to the clerk, and the one word, "guilty," was all anyone heard, and it sounded the death knell to all the hopes, the ambitions, the pride and the very life of that family. I made inquiries and found that the lad was simply accounted "a little wild," not particularly bad, but the policeman solved the whole problem when he said, "Poor boy, he was allowed to run the streets at night and fell into bad company, and that sends many a boy here."

Twenty People Burned in New York Tenement.

Election Protested—Smallpox in Prince Edward Co.

(Special to The Intelligencer.)

Birmingham, Eng., March 14.—The Post hears that an important despatch regarding the possibility of peace was received to-day by Lord Lansdowne from M. Delcasse, French Minister of Foreign Affairs, based upon a special report from M. Compard, French Ambassador to St. Petersburg.

It is stated that communications are passing between London, Berlin and Paris with the object of finding a way out of the tragic impasse in Manchuria.

Burned to Death.

New York, March 14. — At least a score of people were burned to death, several were so badly hurt that they may die, and 420 others received slighter hurts, in a fire that practically destroyed a five-storey tenement house in Allen street, early to-day. Thrilling rescues and daring leaps for life marked the fire.

Scores were carried from the blazing building. Firemen climbed the walls on their scaling ladders, braved the flames and reached the imperilled tenants.

Of the badly injured several may die, as they are in a terrible condition from burns.

The tenement houses were occupied principally by Hebrew families.

Bigger, Better, Broader.

Those three words will in part form the meaning of our decorative painting — paperhanging and wall paper departments for the year 1905.

1904 was the largest trade in our history for any one year notwithstanding the several small stocks shown in opposition.

Ample evidence this that the purchasing public favor the large assortment from which to select.

This year already we have placed in stock nearly sixty thousand rolls of the newest and finest of wall papers possible to find and with twenty years of hunting we know where to find the game—.

For your convenience and our profit we have a staff of workmen engaged for 1905 numbering twenty. Expert workmen in their several branches—of Paperhanging — painting, decorating, graining, etc.

At the present time we have a number of our workmen executing decorative work in Toronto — we go anywhere for business — no city too large, no village too small Worn Out? Run Down?

I Will Gladly Give You a Full Dollar's Worth of My Remedy to Test.

Nothing to deposit. Nothing to promise. The dollar bottle is free. Your druggist, on my order, will hand you a full dollar's worth and send me the bill.

Why do work and worry and excess and strain and over-indulgence break down constitutions and make men and women worn out and run down and restless and sleepless and discouraged and morose? Because they weaken the tiny, tender nerves on which life itself depends.

Not the nerves you ordinarily think about—not the nerves that govern your movements and your thoughts.

But the automatic nerves that, unguided and unknown, night and day, keep your heart in motion —control the digestive apparatus — regulate your liver—operate your kidneys.

These are the nerves that worry wears out and work breaks down.

It does no good to treat the ailing organ—the irregular heart—the disordered liver—the rebellious stomach—the deranged kidneys. They are not to blame. But go back to the nerves that control them. There you will find the seat of the trouble.

It does no good to take stimulants and narcotics, for theirs, at best, is but a temporary effect which merely postpones the final day of reckoning.

There is nothing new about this—nothing any physician would dispute. But it remained for Dr. Shoop to apply this knowledge—to put it to practical use. Dr. Shoop's Restorative is the result of a quarter century of endeavor along this very line. It does not dose the organ to deaden the pain—but it does go at once to the nerve—the inside nerve — the power nerve—and builds it up, and strengthens it and makes it well. That is the end of all vital troubles. That is the end of sleepless nights and restless days. That is the end of "nervousness," the end of brain fag and fatigue.

If you are worn out, run down and have never tried my remedy, merely write and ask. I will send you an order on your druggist, which he will accept as gladly as he would accept a dollar. He will hand you from his shelves a standard sized bottle of my prescription, and he will send the bill to me. This offer is made only to strangers to my remedy. Those who have once used the Restorative do not need this evidence. There are no conditions—no requirements. It is open and frank and fair. It is the supreme test of my limitless belief. All that I ask you to do is to write—write to-day.

For a free order for a full dollar bottle you must address Dr. Shoop, Box 69 Racine, Wis. State which book you want.	Book 1 on Dyspepsia. Book 2 on the Heart. Book 3 on the Kidneys. Book 4 for Women. Book 5 for Men. Book 6 on Rheumatism.

Mild cases are often cured by a single bottle. For sale at forty thousand drug stores.

Tim's Tactics

By CECILIA A. LOIZEAUX

Copyright, 1904, by Cecilia A. Loizeaux

It all began when Mr. Jones-Brown brought Tim home one evening and laid the dog in the open arms of his pretty wife. She received him enthusiastically and bought him an elaborate collar. He was a cute dog. Even Mrs. Robinson-Smith, who lived next door and hated dogs, admitted that—that is, she said he wasn't bad for a mongrel. And it must be admitted right here that the dog wasn't of any particular breed; he was just a dog.

He was soon in high favor in the neighborhood, especially with the Robinson-Smiths, who were intimate friends of the Jones-Browns. Both couples were newly married, and during the day while their husbands were in the city the young wives sewed, talked and called together.

But to come back to the dog. In time he passed the stage of puppy fireworks and was old enough to know better. Then Mrs. Jones-Brown's sister came to visit her. And during the same week Mrs. Robinson-Smith had a card from her nephew that he was coming down to spend a month with her. He was nearly as old as his aunt, who admitted that he was called a "catch" in town.

The expected guests arrived almost simultaneously—Ethel Herriot with a large trunk and Jack Marvin with divers battered suit cases. They were duly ensconced with their respective relatives, and then the trouble began. On the second evening Mr. and Mrs. Robinson-Smith trailed their nephew across the lawn to call on their nearest neighbor. The two young people were introduced. Ethel, as Mrs. Jones-Brown afterward said, was unnecessarily embarrassed for a girl who had been three seasons "out."

In the horribly irritating way of young married people the neighborly quartet immediately began to talk of domestic affairs, leaving Jack and Ethel to take care of themselves. They did not notice that there was an awful silence, during which Ethel was threatened with mental hysteria and was saved only by Tim, the thoughtful, who opportunely appeared and jumped into her lap. She began to talk to him, and the day was saved temporarily. Still patting the dog, Ethel finally said to the man:

"Why did you follow me out here?"

"I didn't follow you," said Jack promptly. "If I had known that you were in this neck of woods you don't suppose I'd have disturbed it, do you?" Then he added, "Why did you come to stay next door to my aunt?"

"How was I to know you had an aunt out here?" Ethel asked indignantly.

"Well," said Jack, "I guess we're both innocent, so we need not quarrel over that."

Then there was another silence. Tim jumped down from Ethel's lap and leaped into Jack's. Jack grinned.

"Nice doggie!" he chuckled, petting him effusively. Ethel knew he hated small dogs. She tried to think of something crushing to say, but before the words came Mr. and Mrs. Robinson-Smith rose and said good night, and their dutiful nephew rose with them. He put out his hand, and Ethel was forced to let hers touch it for an instant, while he said:

"So glad I've met you, Miss Herriot. It's awfully jolly that we know so many of the same people."

Ethel smiled, though her eyes were blazing wrathfully.

"Isn't it?" she said. "Good night."

When Mrs. Jones-Brown turned to speak to her sister she found the girl's chair empty and a moment after heard her ascending the stairs.

Late that night Ethel rose, lit the lamp and took from her trunk a package of letters which she sat down to read. Long before she had finished them she was crying softly, and when she did go to bed again it was to lie wide eyed and staring till nearly morning. She was awakened by Tim, who was licking her hand. She patted his head.

"Naughty Tim! Did the missus let you in?"

Rising on her elbow, she saw that the door was ajar and supposed that her sister had sent the dog to wake her.

Tim seemed full of spirits of puppyhood this morning. He would worry the bedclothes with his teeth, dash wildly across the room to catch some unseen thing and then rush back upon her, frantic with delight.

Ethel lay staring at the ceiling. Her head ached, and she felt utterly miserable. She wondered how she could get away from her sister's house and that man next door. Tim, finding himself unwatched, worried awhile at something he found on the floor beneath the table, then took it in his mouth and ran off with it.

"If he only wasn't so glad," thought the girl, referring to the man, not the dog. "He shows so plainly that he's glad it's off!"

Before she got up she determined to show Jack that he wasn't the only one who didn't care. She would treat him as a stranger, and she would flirt with him, too, and make him sorry. She descended the stairs, explained that her pale face was due to a nervous headache, for which she would try a long walk, and departed in a smart blue skirt and white shirt waist and very pretty slippers.

During this walk it was her intention to map out her campaign, and her thoughts were busy as she strolled along. Finally she climbed a high bank by the roadside, walked along the grassy ledge for awhile and then sat down on the brink of an old stone quarry. She was swinging her small French heels and throwing stones into the blue water far beneath when somebody behind her whistled a well known strain. She answered before she thought and then started, almost losing her balance, and clutched at the bank to save herself. Her face was hot, and she felt some one seize her from behind, for it had all happened too quickly for her to be frightened. Jack dragged her back and then lifted her to a sitting posture. She scrambled to her feet and faced him.

"What do you mean by sitting on the very edge of a place like that?" Jack questioned angrily. "Suppose the bank crumbled?"

She looked at him, wistfully at first, and then her glance turned wrathful as she saw nothing but anger in his face.

"I was all right until you came and frightened me."

"I whistled to let you know I was coming and you answered," he retorted.

"I presume your coming to this especial place was purely accidental, like your advent in this town?" she remarked sarcastically.

"Not quite," he confessed. "I followed you because I wanted to talk to you. Sit down and cool off."

She reflected that this was her first opportunity to make him sorry, and she sat down gracefully, while he arranged himself at her feet and searched a plot of clover for a lucky omen. She took off her white duck hat and let the wind ruffle her thick, fair hair. He looked up at her meditatively.

"You have more freckles this year than you had last," he announced.

"Yes," she agreed, "and more sense."

"I imagine your experience has taught you something," he remarked.

She sat up. This was not teaching him to be sorry.

"Ethel," he asked suddenly, "you burned all my letters, didn't you?"

"Of course I did." But her heart beat furiously as she thought of the night before.

"I supposed you had," he said. "I only wanted to make sure." He put his hand absently to the pocket of his blue serge coat. "You see, love letters after there isn't any more love are such assinine things," he explained; "just twaddle."

"Yours were rather twaddly," she admitted; "at least the ones I had. But they're burned."

Again he felt in his pocket. She saw the gesture and misinterpreted it.

"Light it if you like," she said.

"Light it? Ah, yes," said he, drawing the pipe from quite another pocket. She watched him fill it, frowning a little at the tobacco pouch, which was one she had given him. He leaned over to strike a match.

"Your bald spot is certainly much larger than it was last year," she remarked critically.

"How observing you are!" he drawled. Then he turned suddenly.

"Will you love me when I'm bald?" he sang.

"As much as I do now," she answered meaningly.

"Not as much as you did last night?" he queried.

"Last night!" she echoed, the blood rising to her face. "What are you talking about?" He turned again and took a letter from his coat pocket, holding it up where she could see the address in his writing, "Miss Ethel Herriot."

Her heart beat wildly. The envelope was worn and old looking. He drew out the sheets of thin paper. There were blisters — fresh blisters — upon them.

Ethel sat paralyzed. The tears rolled down her cheeks, and she did not try to wipe them away. Her fingers dug into the grass on either side.

"Poor old letter!" he said pityingly. "How did you escape the flames?" Then he heard a sob from Ethel. He turned. He saw the tears, and mentally he called himself a cad. He had never seen Ethel cry before.

"Ethel," he said, "I'm a brute, but I don't mean to be. I came out here to tell you that I love you better than ever and to own up that I was wrong and to ask you to take me back to your favor. Ethel," he had her in his arms now, "Ethel, dear, you do love me, don't you?"

"Take it out on Tim, dear, for it was his fault. He brought the letter and dropped it at my feet. And then I knew that you had been doing just what I've done nearly every night for a year, reading over the old letters. Ethel, aren't you glad—a little—that Tim found the letter?"

And Ethel's answer, though muffled, seemed to satisfy him. They went slowly home.

As Good as Her Word.

Old Mr. Makepeace was in a reminiscent mood. "Did I ever tell ye what mother said to me when I got up spunk enough to ask her—in words—if she'd have me?" he began, to the delight of his grandson, Fred.

"No, but something bright, I'll warrant," chuckled Fred, with a glance at the old lady, who calmly regarded them from her rocking chair by the fireplace.

"I can't recall the preliminary remarks," Mr. Makepeace continued, "and, anyway, I think they were a trifle mixed. But finally, after I'd said something about my prospects, to make it business-like, I began to think it strange she didn't say anything, and I was afraid I was getting it all wrong.

"'I'll make ye a good husband, Betty,' I said, hoping that was the right thing.

"'If I should marry you, John,' she said, and it was the first time she had opened her lips, 'I will attend to making a good husband of you.'

"And she has!" laughed old Mr. Makepeace, the corner of his eye on his wife.

Forests and National Prosperity.

As a living example of the consequences of deforestation we need simply look to Spain, a country which centuries ago was rich in timber and agricultural products, a proud seafaring nation of world conquerors. Spain's decadence dates from the time when her timber supply became exhausted, her shipbuilding relaxed and her barren, unprotected soil ceased to bear fruit.—Forum.

A Long Way Around.

A man with a large family of daughters on his hands may profit by the following suggestion: An old lady who had several unmarried daughters fed them largely on a fish diet because, as she ingeniously observed, "fish is rich in phosphorus, and phosphorus is useful in making matches."

Her First Dinner.

"Yes," said Newliwed, "my wife and I are housekeeping now. She prepared our first dinner last night with her own fair hands."

"How was it?" asked Bacheller.

"Well, the nuts and raisins were fine."

Waterproofing Dress Goods.

One of the most important processes used for waterproofing dress materials is on the lines of the old alumina process. In this case the factor used is rosin dissolved in a large bulk of petroleum spirit. The fabrics to be proofed are passed through a bath of this solution and dried to drive off the solvent. Following this, the goods are treated by pressing with hot polished metal rollers. This last process melts the small quantity of rosin which is deposited on the cloth and leaves each single fiber with an exceedingly thin film of rosin on it.

SHE MADE A CHANGE.

A Charleston Mother Did so With Advantage to Herself and Children.

A mother living in Charleston, Mass., the happy possessor of four children writes: "Every fall and winter I have laid in a stock of cough remedies, croup mixtures and throat medicines for my children, for somehow or other they never seem to be free from colds, coughs or sore throat.

This fall I made a change in the usual program. I had myself been cured of an obstinate catarrh, from which I suffered for years, by Stuart's Catarrh Tablets, and as they were pleasant to take I determined to try them with my children. Our family physician told me he knew them to be perfectly safe and nothing better could be used for catarrh, coughs and colds.

So I gave them to the children and have continued to do so ever since, whenever there is the least sign of croup or sore throat and I no longer dread the approach of cold weather as I once did.

Stuart's Catarrh Tablets not only cured me of chronic nasal and throat catarrh but they have saved me many an anxious night with my little ones. The children like the taste of them and it is really wonderful how quickly they break up a croupy cold or an obstinate, deep seated cough."

People who have used sprays, inhalers, salves or washes for catarrh and have found how useless they are, will be agreeably surprised at the results following the use of a pleasant, convenient, internal remedy in tablet form. Druggists everywhere admit that Stuart's Catarrh Tablets which sell for 50 cents full sized package, is the safest, most effective and popular of catarrh medicines.

Fortune knocks once; then goes away. Adversity will pound all day.

HER STRANGE DEATH

Straw Stack Fell and Smothered Mrs. Lowry.

Returned From Church Sunday Evening, She Went to Help Husband at the Barn to Get Out Bedding for the Horses, When the Stack Toppled Over Upon Her, With Fatal Results.

St. Thomas, March 14.—A strange death was that of Mrs. George Lowry, wife of a young farmer near Port Dover. On returning from church on Sunday evening, she went with her husband to the barn, and while he was throwing the hay she went to the straw stack to get out the bedding for the horses.

Just how it happened is not known, but in some manner the straw stack toppled over and the whole weight fell on the young woman. There was considerable snow and ice on the top of the stack, which, added to the weight and rendered the woman's fate a terrible one. When her husband reached her only her feet were visible, and despite all his efforts, he could not release her. He was alone on the farm and had to saddle a horse and ride half a mile before he could get help.

When at Length Mrs. Lowry was released she was quite dead. It is thought that she was suffocated almost instantly, her body being a mass of bruises from the terrible weight that had fallen on her. Mrs. Lowry had been married only a year. Her maiden name was Steele.

CAUGHT BY A COG.

Robert Moore Badly Injured at Millbrook on Monday.

Millbrook, March 14.—Yesterday morning Robert Moore, late of Minden, and now in the employ of Needlers Mills, met with a serious accident. He was oiling the machinery, when in some manner the back of his sleeve became entangled in a cog, which wrenched his arm and mutilated the upper part so badly near the shoulder that he was unable to extricate himself.

It was a long time before his cries for assistance were heard. The mill was going. When the employes on the ground floor heard his cries and realized what was wrong, the mill was immediately closed down. The unfortunate man was released. Dr. Turner was quickly on the spot. Amputation was found to be necessary. The young man is doing as well as can be expected.

NOT YET COMPLETE.

But Canada's Offer to Provide Garrisons Will Soon Be Ready.

London, March 14.—(C. A. P.)—In the course of the debate on the army estimates in the House of Commons, the Secretary of State said the Dominion Government had offered to assume at an early date the entire responsibility for garrisoning Halifax and Esquimalt, providing Canadian troops for the purpose, and until those troops were ready, paying the cost of the Imperial troops retained at those stations.

"Arrangements for this are not yet complete, but I have no doubt a satisfactory conclusion will soon be reached."

For British Postage Reduction.

London, March 14.—(C. A. P.)—Sir Gilbert Parker will on Thursday present a deputation of Members of Parliament, from both sides of politics, to the Postmaster-General, and place before him the case for the reduction of rates on British magazines and weekly papers to Canada. Sir Gilbert Parker will also hand to the Postmaster-General the petition signed by the President of the Canadian Press Association and other heads of important public bodies in Canada, praying for a reduction of the magazine rate from fourpence to a penny.

Sunday Cars Ran.

Port Arthur, March 14.—Port Arthur operated its street cars through Fort William Sunday, despite the objection of Mayor Rutledge of that town, who stated that he would not sanction the operation of the cars through the town on the Sabbath. The action of Port Arthur is the result of the recent decision of the Supreme Court. Superintendent McGayley informed Mayor Rutledge that Sunday cars would be operated through Fort William. The Council will take action to stop the service.

War on the Beef Trust.

Chicago, March 14.—The Daily News yesterday says: "War to the knife between the Big Five of the beef combine and 26 firms and corporations, classed as independent packers, will, it is asserted, begin in Chicago on March 20, when the special Federal Grand Jury begins its investigation of the affairs of the alleged beef combination. A fund of $3,000,000 has been raised to carry on the fight against the alleged beef combine, and set the claims of the independent packers squarely before the public.

Heavy Sentences Imposed.

Winnipeg, March 14.—A sensation was caused yesterday by the heavy sentences meted out by Judge Richards to two highwaymen convicted before the Grand Jury, and who, for some time, terrorized the city. John Sanderson was given fifteen years and seventy-five lashes, and William Macdonald ten years and seventy-five lashes. The severity of the sentences is due to the brutality of the men to the victims they held up. They kicked one man in the face after robbing him.

Britain's Army Estimates.

London, March 14.—The army estimates for 1905-06, issued yesterday afternoon, total $149,065,000, an increase of $4,915,000 over the last estimates. The increase is due to the provision of $6,065,000 for the re-armament of the artillery. Otherwise there would have been a decrease. The estimates provide for a total force, home and colonial and exclusive of India, of 221,300 men. The expenditure for the North American and West Indian stations is estimated at $3,125,810.

Railway Commission Meets.

Ottawa, March 14.—The Railway Commissioners left yesterday morning for London, St. Thomas, Niagara and Toronto, where meetings will be held.

An Irishman gave his wife away by talking in his sleep. That is nothing. Plenty of wives give their husbands away by talking while awake.

It is worse than madness to neglect a cough, or cold which is easily subdued if taken in time but becomes, when left to itself, the forerunner of consumption and premature death. Inflammation, when it attacks the delicate tissue of the lungs and bronchial tubes, travels with perilous rapidity; then do not delay, get a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, the medicine that grasps this formidable foe of the human body, and drives it from the system. This medicine promotes a free and easy expectoration, subdues the cough, heals the diseased parts, and exerts a most wonderful influence in curing consumption, and other diseases of the throat and lungs. If parents wish to save the lives of their children, and themselves from much anxiety, trouble and expense, let them procure a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, and whenever a child has taken cold, has a cough or hoarseness, give the Syrup according to directions.

What is that which is lengthened by being cut at both ends? Answer—A ditch.

A Liniment for the Logger.—Loggers lead a life which exposes them to many perils. Wounds, cuts and bruises cannot be altogether avoided in preparing timber for the drive and in river work, where wet and cold combined are of daily experience Coughs and colds and muscular pains cannot but ensue. Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil, when applied to the injured or administered to the ailing, works wonders.

What black thing enlightens the world? Answer—Ink.

Signals of Danger.—Have you lost your appetite? Have you a coated tongue? Have you an unpleasant taste in the mouth? Does your head ache and have you dizziness? If so, your stomach is out of order and you need medicine. But you do not like medicine. He that prefers sickness to medicine must suffer, but under the circumstances the wise man would procure a box of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills and speedily get himself in health, and strive to keep so.

Name something with two heads and one body. Answer—A barrel.

The Most Popular Pill.—The pill is the most popular of all forms of medicine, and of pills the most popular are Parmelee's Vegetable Pills, because they do what it is asserted they can do, and are not put forward on any fictitious claims to excellence. They are compact and portable, and they are easily taken, they do not nauseate nor gripe, and they give relief in the most stubborn cases.

Why is bread like the sun? Answer—Because it rises from the yeast.

Many inherit weak lungs, and as disease usually assails the weakest point, these persons are continually exposed to attacks of cold and pulmonary disturbances. The speedy use of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup will be found a preventive and a protection, strengthening the organs so that they are not so liable to derangement from exposure or abrupt atmospheric changes. Bickle's Syrup is cheap and good.

If you were to ride a donkey what fruit would you resemble? Answer—A pair.

Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator is pleasant to take; sure and effectual in destroying worms. Many have tried it with best results.

What coat is finished without buttons and put on wet? Answer—A coat of paint.

Why go limping and whining about your corns when a 25 cent bottle of Holloway's Corn Cure will remove them? Give it a trial and you will not regret it.

"I—I don't know!" she breathed with labored breath. "The—the hut fell in as I entered— Oh—I—am going! Hold me!"

He held her tightly to his breast, and, not knowing what he was doing, put his lips to hers.

It was a kiss—a kiss of infinite pity rather than passion—but, weak and distraught with fear as she was, Nina was conscious of it.

The blood burnt in her face for a moment, then left it pale and wan.

"I—I am all right," she faltered, struggling feebly to free herself from his grasp. "I—I am more frightened and faint than hurt."

"Are you sure—are you sure?" he demanded hoarsely. "You do not know yet. The beam may have fallen on you. Don't try to stand. Lean on me. Oh, poor girl, poor girl! And it was my fault—mine! I heard the storm. I ought to have come with you to have seen that the hut was safe."

As he spoke he pressed her to him still more closely, and so great was her weakness that she yielded to his embrace—for it was nothing less—and, half unconscious as she was, found a subtle pleasure, comfort, in the yielding.

"I'll take you to the other hut," he said. "No, you can't walk. I must carry you. Ah, let me!"

She struggled faintly, feebly, but he lifted her in his strong arms and carried her into his hut and laid her on his bed.

"Now rest there. Try and sleep!" he exhorted her in a low and gentle voice. "Let me see if you are hurt. Where did the beam fall on you—your arms, your chest?"

She shook her head and feebly strove to put his hands from her.

"I don't think you are badly hurt. It must have been the shock, the fright. Tell me, do you feel any pain?"

"No, no!" she gasped. The gentle, commisserating touch of his strong hands was like an anodyne and hypnotized her. "I am in no pain; I am not hurt. If—if you will go now—"

He rose at last, but still bent over her, his face lined with anxiety.

"All my fault!" he muttered. "Let me put the pillow higher for you. Oh, God, if there were only a doctor to see you! I don't know whether you are hurt or not!"

"No, no, I'm not hurt!" she gasped once more, but in so low, so feeble a voice, that he bent low on his knees to catch it. "Go—now."

He went at last, slowly, reluctantly, and with a backward glance that held pity—and was it something warmer?—in it.

The storm fell as suddenly as it had risen; and Mannering slowly and with immense calm and patience rebuilt Nina's hut. His heart was full of pity for her—of something warmer, of which he was only partly and dimly conscious. He did not know that he had kissed her, that his words, his actions had been full of love, of a man's love, for the woman.

And Nina! She lay awake tossing from side to side—on his bed. The memory of the kiss burnt in her consciousness. She had lain in his arms; she had yielded herself to him; she had, though he did not know it, been glad of his embrace, the touch of his lips.

Maiden shame burnt like a fire within her bosom—a fierce, merciless fire. Had he known, guessed at, the thrill of surrender that had run through her at his embrace? Had he known what his kiss meant to her? Like a flash of lightning from the rent skies she knew that she loved him. This man who had saved her life at least twice—first from the sea and secondly from the Lascar—who had watched over her, guarded her, provided for her life's daily needs, was more to her than life itself—was the being one means when one whisper "lover." And he was her husband by the caprice of Fate—her husband against his will.

Had he kissed her or did she imagine it? If he did it made matters ten thousand times worse, for he had kissed her in pity, not in love. Not in love, for did he not carry in his breast the portrait of another woman?

She rose, feverish and parched with thirst; but above her physical suffering towered her mental, spiritual agony. She loved him and he— The fair face of that other woman rose before her mockingly, tauntingly, and embittered, poisoned the glorious, wonderful dawn which rose as a daily miracle upon the fairy island.

As if impelled by the spirit of her maidenly pride, which would not let her rest, she went down towards the beach. On her way she had to pass the saloon, and, after a moment's hesitation, she opened the door and looked in.

Mannering lay at full length before the fire, his head resting on his arm, on which was the blood of a wound caused by one of the falling beams. His face was troubled, his breath came short and painfully. Her own grew labored and painful as she bent over him, and her love for him welled up in her heart and ran over, so that it was hard for her not to touch him, if with her finger tips only. As it was, she bent so low that her lips nearly touched his, and her breath stirred his hair. But alas, and alas! at that moment he moved in his sleep and she heard him murmur, "Judith, Judith!"

She rose as if somthing had stung her, and in a conflict of emotions went down to the beach. It was high tide and the raft tugged at its moorings. She gazed at it thoughtfully, then the color rose to her pale face and her eyes glowed with an idea.

She knew that if she remained on the island with him her love would betray her. Why should she not go? Here were the means—the Providential means—of escape. The provisions which Mannering had prepared were close by the raft; it was as ready for use as on the day he had intended that she and poor Fleming should set sail. Why should she not go?

She might reach the group of islands of which Mannering had spoken; on the other hand she might not. At any rate she would have saved her self-respect—would save herself the shame of revealing her love for this man.

The idea, the thought, sent the blood to her face. She ran up to the hut and put her spare clothes in a bundle, and wrapping the marriage certificate and Fleming's diary in a piece of oilcloth, put them in the bosom of her dress, then returned to the beach and the raft.

But she could not go without a word of farewell. She was fleeing as much from herself as from him, but she owed him a word of explanation—of good-bye.

She tore a blank leaf from Fleming's journal and writing on it, "I am going for both our sakes. Remember our promise. Nina," fixed it with a stone to the rock nearest the spot where the raft floated. Then she took the box of provisions on board, set the raft loose from its moorings, ran up the sail to the mast, and pushed off into the rolling sea.

Mannering did not awake until some hours later. His phenomenally hard work of the previous day and the stress and strain of the events of the night had exhausted him. He worked with the guilty consciousness of being "late," and he went about the routine tasks of the morning.

He laid and lit the fire and filled the can with water; and all the time he was performing the tasks he was doing so mechanically, with the memory of last night's experiences humming in his brain. He had held Nina in his arms. Had he—had he kissed her? Had he spoken a word of the love for her that welled up in his heart?

He would know when he saw her—when he looked into her eyes. Would she be angry, resentful? he asked himself. Poor girl, poor girl! Should he tell her that he had learned to love her, that he wanted her for a wife in more than name?

He went up to the hut intending to call her—to get her outside and have it out with her there and then. After all, she was his wife. His wife! He murmured the words to himself fondly, with a thrill of passionate longing. His wife! How much it meant to him!

But he would not call her. No doubt she was tired. He would wait, and at breakfast, as they sat opposite to each other, like husband and wife, he would open his heart to her—would tell her that he loved her, would—yes, claim her!

He went back to the saloon. No breakfast was laid; but he made up the fire and sat down to wait patiently. Half an hour passed, then, thinking that he had better call her—that she would be angry if he did not do so—he went up to his hut and knocked at the door.

No answer came, and after knocking again, he strolled down to the beach. He missed the raft in an instant and stared with surprise at the place at which it had been moored. Then the piece of paper fluttering under the stone on the rock caught his attention. He went to it, took it from under the stone and read it.

Read it not once or twice, but a dozen times; then stood gazing with unseeing eyes and torture-racked heart out to the sea on which the frail raft had ventured, bearing away from him the girl he had learned to love as only strong men can love.

CHAPTER VIII.

Mannering sank on to the rock on which Nina had placed her farewell letter, and, covering his face with his hands, sat motionless as a statue of grief. He did not think of himself—of the awful solitude to which her flight had doomed him. Only one thought racked him, and that was that she had flown because she was afraid of him. She had preferred to trust the treacherous, murderous sea rather than him.

It was a hideous reflection, and it nearly drove him mad. She had not waited until the boat had been launched, but had taken the raft—had run all and every risk rather than remain another day on the island with him or confide herself to his care in a joint voyage.

Hours passed and he still sat staring with vacant eyes at the sea. It did not occur to him to launch the boat and attempt to follow her. What good would it be if he came up with her? She would probably throw herself into the sea at his approach, she was to proud, so mistrustful of him. He got up at last and wandered about with the air of a man distraught. Every now and then he plucked a flower or picked up a shell and gazed at it as if it were of the most intense interest to him, but he was scarcely conscious of what he held in his hand. He felt neither hunger nor thirst; but after a time a strange feeling of exhaustion, of craving for sleep, came over him, anh he dropped down just outside his hut and fell into a deep sleep.

It probably saved his reason and prepared him for the still heavier blow that Fate was to deal him.

He slept right through the night and past the dawn; and it was the soughing of the wind and the harsh crash of the waves of the beach that awoke him. It had been raining heavily and he was wet through, but he did not feel cold, for fever was warming his blood with a baleful heat. As he stretched himself back came his misery with a sharp torture; and with a groan he dropped his arms to his side and looked round as if he were trying to persuade himself that it was a dream, and that he should see Nina coming swiftly toward him.

But instead of the vision of her fair, fresh grace and beauty, his burning eyes fell upon something on the beach. Long before he had reached it he saw what it was.

It was the raft, or rather the remains of it. The sail had gone, the mast was broken, half the logs had been torn away; the thing had been wrecked in the storm which had raged while he slept, and the incoming tide had cast it at his feet.

And Nina! While he stared from the wrecked raft to the sea and back again from the sea to the raft a small object floating on the water caught his eye.

He fixed his gaze on it, beginning to tremble and shake, flung himself into the water and swam for the thing. When he came back with it clutched in his hand, his face was white and his eyes starting.

It was the little woollen cap Nina had worn.

Panting with his exertion and the agony that the assurance of her death caused him, he lay full length on the sand, his face upturned to the sun which broke out suddenly and mocked him pitilessly.

It was three days after this that in a dogged, sullen fashion he hauled the canoe down to the beach, and, putting in some provisions, made ready to sail. He was going, not because he had any desire for life or to go back to civilization, but because the island had become intolerable to him. You see, it was impossible to forget her in a place of which every feature kept her vividly, agonizingly in his memory, and he knew that if he remained any longer brooding, brooding over his loss and the tragic circumstances attending it that he must inevitably go mad. Once or twice, in his terrible solitude, a devil in his brain called "Suicide" had whispered alluringly to him. He was going because there was just enough of the spirit of a man left in him to make him shrink from insanity and self-destruction.

For the last time he wandered over the familiar scene, the exquisitely beautiful place which his dawning love had been rapidly transforming into Home but it was a hell now. His lack-lustre eyes fell upon the heap of gold quartz which lay outside Nina's hut, but it did not keep his attention for a moment, and it never occurred to him to take even a specimen. Of what use was wealth to a man who had lost all hope in life and only craved a natural and painlessdeath?

Instinct rather than any desire to choose a favorable time made him wait until the turn of the tide; then he got into his canoe and, keeping his gaze fixed seaward, set sail. The weather was more favorable to him than it had been to poor Nina, and carried him due south. Once or twice he thought how full of joy and hope he would have been if she had been with him in the boat, and he sighed with callous indifference to his good fortune. Why had Fate not spared her instead of him—her so full of life and the joy of living? Why had it struck down so rare and beautiful a creature and left him to drag on an existence of anguish and futile remorse?

For a couple of days the weather remained fine, then the wind changed and grew rough. His cramped position, the solitude of the sea and the glare of its sun-flecked surface, which produced an almost intolerable burning of the eyes, began to tell upon him. His small supply of water was rapidly diminishing, and he had to put himself on short rations.

On the fourth day he caught himself holding snatches of conversation with Nina, but shook himself and tried to pull himself together; but again and again he relapsed into this form of delirium, and when the trading schooner, Eliza Anne, bound for the port of London, almost ran down the canoe, it picked up a half crazy man who laughed and cried in a breath and implored the captain with frantic gestures and broken accents, to put the ship about and search for "Nina."

The captain was a good-hearted fellow, and, thinking that there might be a basis of reason in the castaway's ravings, he hove about for some time in the latitude in which the canoe had been found, but he came across nothing to reward his humanity and while Mannering was prostrated in his bunk with brain fever, the Eliza Anne got on her course again and made for London.

Three months later Mannering was one night wandering along the Strand. It was just after eleven and the theatres were pouring out their crowds into the already congested thoroughfare. Mannering had not reached London destitute, for, all unconsciously, he had brought with him the small amount of money he had with him on the Alpina; but he had, since his disembarkation, lived with little regard for comfort or appearances, and as he moved slowly with the crowd he looked, in his old serge suit and weather-stained cap, so much like a tramp that now and again the policemen eyed him with something like suspicion and one had actually bidden him "move on."

Mannering obeyed mechanically, looking neither to the right nor the left, but drifting aimlessly with the crowd which surged along the wet pavement. The crush, the noise of the cabs and carriages, the shouts of the 'bus conductors and the talk and laughter of the people acted as a narcotic and soothed him after a fashion. But in the midst of the turmoil he could hear the boom of the sea on the sands of the island and hear Nina's voice calling to him "Dinner is ready!" or "Will you bring me some wood for the fire?" and the commonplace phrases took to themselves a mystic, sacred, significance.

Presently he found himself brought up against the Gaiety Theatre. The people were just streaming out and Mannering was standing by a lamp post waiting for an opportunity to go on, and, looking absently at the beautifully dressed women and the "smart" men emerging from the illuminated doorway when one of the gentlemen said:

"Hi, my man, will you get a cab for us?"

Mannering looked round and saw that the request was addressed to him by a gentleman by whom a lady richly dressed was standing. A grim sense of humor seized Mannering, for he knew them both, and he forced his way down the street and got a cab.

"Thanks!" said the gentleman, and he held out a shilling; then, as Mannering laughed mirthlessly, the gentleman threw up his head and looked at the supposed cab-runner, and broke into a low exclamation of amazement.

"Mannering! Good Heaven!" he cried; and before Mannering could reply or step away, the gentleman caught him by the arm and, turning to the lady, said in eager consternation:

"Blanche, it is Mannering! Get into the cab; I'll follow."

He still kept his grip of Mannering's arm, and when the lady, too startled to do anything but stare at the pair, had gone, he called another cab and almost pushed Mannering toward it.

"Get in, get in, for Heaven's sake!" he said: "Why, Mannering, you, and here in London, and in this—this state! Why, we all thought you'd gone to Australia. We've been searching for you. What's happened? You're ill, aren't you? Where have you been? What— But you sha'n't answer any questions till I get you home."

Mannering gazed before him at the crowd with its canopy of umbrellas, the flashing, ever moving lights of the cabs and carriages. This man's voice was like a voice from the life of the past—the past he had left behind—lost.

"I was wrecked, Letchford," he said, hoarsely, as if he had only just been picked up in the canoe.

Sir Charles Letchford looked at him keenly, curiously, and not a little pityingly.

"Wrecked! But, no, you sha'n't tell me till we get home. Have a cigar, old chap!"

It was a subtly wise and kind suggestion. Mannering's hand closed on the cigar, and lighting it he leant back and smoked himself into calmness; he had not been able to afford a cigar for the last fortnight.

The cab drew up at one of the handsome houses in Sloane Court and Sir Charles led Mannering into the dining-room. It was as exquisite as modern taste and lavish expenditure could make it. Sir Charles looked round.

"Blanche— You remember her? We were married two months ago—" Mannering nodded in an absent way, and Sir Charles scanned him, aghast. "She has gone to her room. Come to my dressing-room and have a wash. Supper is laid. The servants have gone to bed."

He took Mannering to his dressing-room, then went into the bed-room to Lady Letchford.

"Great heaven, Blanche!" he exclaimed. "I scarcely knew him! I took him for a tramp. The man has aged, is broken down—looks as if he were drugged! You remember what he was!"

"Poor fellow! Oh, yes, I remember! Of course I remember. Did—did you tell him, Charles?" she asked in a low voice.

"No! There hasn't been time! He's washing his hands. You must help me, Blanche. I'll go to him!"

He found Mannering seated at the dressing-table absently fingering the silver-backed brushes, and took him down to the dining-room. Lady Blanche, in the splendor of her evening dress, came to meet him cordially but half fearfully, for there was a strange, hunted, strained look in his eyes.

"I am so glad to see you back, Mr. Mannering. And of course you remember me—Blanche Favasom"—she blushed as she gave her maiden-name—"Judith Orme's great friend, you know."

Mannering's eyelids flickered as he bent over her hand.

"I remember," he said in the deep, hollow voice with which he had spoken since the day of his great loss.

"Sit down," said Letchford, with a warning glance at his wife, a glance that said, "Let him alone for a time; leave him to me."

Mannering did not look down at his unsuitable attire, did not appear conscious of himself or his surroundings, but sank into the chair and accepted a plate of the soup which had been kept warm at the fireplace.

"Rattling good piece at the Gaiety," said Letchford; and he went on to speak of it, addressing his wife rather than Mannering, and studiously avoiding looking at him.

Mannering got through his soup and some cutlets in silence, glancing in the same absent-minded, preoccupied way at his host and beautiful hostess. Presently Lady Blanche rose, but her husband signed to her to remain.

"Don't go, Blanche," he said with the nervousness of the man who relies on his wife in difficult moments. "We want to have a chat with Vane. Now, old chap"—he leaned forward and laid his hand on Mannering's arm—"tell us your adventures!"

WHY YOU SHOULD USE
Red Rose Tea
Because of Its Flavor.
Why do you buy certain varieties of fruit and vegetables? Is it not because you like the flavor of some better than others?
Flavor is the special quality which stamps one brand of food product as superior to another, and is the quality that always commands the highest price.
The delicate, fragrant flavor of Red Rose Tea is the result of scientific study and methods on the tea plantations, and in the tea testing and blending rooms.
It has what might be called a fruity taste—a rich, ripe flavor that is very pleasing to the palate—a taste you won't forget.
The Blue Label is recommended.

FARM AND FIRESIDE.

Timely Hints Which Will be Appreciated by the Progressive Farmer and His Housekeeper.

HOME BUTTER MAKING.

In the manufacture of first-class butter there are certain things that must be observed, the neglect of which will result in disaster. With proper management the wide-awake dairyman should be able in a short time to work up a special line of customers who will buy his butter all the year round, and willingly pay him a cent or two in advance of the market price. It costs no more to make good butter than bad; it requires no more cream, no more of anything, except intelligence. The progressive dairyman must practise this method if he would succeed, surrounded as he is by vigorous competition. The following rules are necessary: First, cleanliness must be observed — from the barn to the market. This is the foundation upon which all else rests. Second, the process of ripening cream for the churn must be understood. This step must be well learned, as a large amount of bad butter is due to oversour or bitter cream. Third, the thermometer must be frequently used and studied. Four, use only the best kind of dairy salt, the common grocery kind is unfit. Six, learn how to work the butter; get an experienced hand to teach you the way. Don't work it too much, but preserve the grain. Overworked, greasy butter is an abomination. Seven put it in attractive packages, neatly made up, and each wrapped in good parchment butter paper, which can always be purchased at The Intelligencer office, Belleville, where they keep on hand the genuine German parchment paper. No better than this can be secured. Avoid cloths of all kinds; customers do not care to pick threads out of butter — their presence suggest carelessness, and carelessness and dirt generally go hand in hand.

GRAFTING MATERIALS.

A great many fruit growers prefer buying stocks and selecting scions from bearing trees for grafting to buying the trees two or three years old from the nurseryman. There are many more who do a little grafting in the tops of old "natural" or on undesirable trees.

Those who have been doing a little in the line of grafting, and who have been using the old beeswax, resin and tallow wax, feel the need of a cheaper ingredient than beeswax. Beeswax has steadily advanced in price until the good pure wax costs anything inside of a dollar a pound. The ordinary grafting wax, as is well known, consists of 4 lb. resin, 2 lb. beeswax and 1 lb. tallow. Though there are many other waxes on the market, this one seems to be the general favorite in most localities. A wax much cheaper, which has been used at the Massachusetts Experiment Station with the best of results has paraffin substituted for the beeswax. The paraffin may be purchased at any grocery or drug store at not over 25 cents a pound. This wax is put together and heated in the same way as the wax made according to the beeswax formula. The wax made after this formula works as well or better than the common wax on either cloth, paper or string. For indoor work and for outdoor work it is to be preferred, in many respects, to the old-style wax. The one difficulty with the wax seems to come from the fact that the paraffin does not run evenly, and after the ingredients have been put together one often has to add more resin or paraffin to make it harder or a softer wax, as the case may be.

For wrapping materials we have used string, strips of paper and strips of cloth. There are several reasons why the grafter does not like to use twine as a means of wrapping, one of the principal being a loss of time, as compared with the paper or cloth. We have had the best success with thin, shelf-worn cloth from some dry goods store. Sometimes whole bolts of cloth may be had for almost nothing, and often some such material as a dress-lining will be so rotten as to tear almost as easily as paper. Rotten cloth like this has the advantage over stronger cloth that it can be torn off after the graft is wrapped, without disturbing the union of stock and scion.

With paper, we have practised cutting ordinary manilla wrapping paper in three-inch strips, two or three feet long. We wax one side only. This is done by holding both ends of the strip and running the lower side through the wax until it is well coated, when it is removed and the surplus scraped off. The strips are then hung across a board or line to cool. These strips are cut into inch strips, and the wrapping is done as it is with the cloth.

THE VETERINARIAN.

Tuberculosis.—Kindly tell me if a bull having tuberculosis can transmit the disease to its offspring. (The question is susceptible of a lengthy answer; but, in brief, there is no probability of such transmission; and calves immediately removed from tuberculous mothers after birth may be raised free from the disease.)

Spavin.—Is a blood spavin an unsoundness? (1) What can be done for same on young horse, when spavin has been formed only a short time? (2) Does the hollow in front of the hock joint ever swell or fill out when the cords are strained? (3) (1 It is an unsoundness. 2 If any pus or heat is present, hot fomentations or clay dressing is good, or in warm weather shower it with cold water half an hour twice a day. After inflammation has subsided apply blister. 3 Yes, and from other causes also.)

Skin disease.—Several cows have a peculiar skin disease. The hair disappears in spots, and the skin has a rough, wart-like appearance. In most cases it affects the head on top, and around the eyes especially. It seems to have no effect on the health of the cattle, but a calf that has the disease is not making satisfactory growth. We have never had anything like it in the dairy before. A heifer that we had out to pasture with a herd of full-blood Holsteins caught it some way, and thus it has spread through the herd. This heifer recovered without treatment, but the affected spots (more on the body in this case than elsewhere) are not covered with hair. What is it, and what can we do for it? (The disease is due to vegetable spores. Feed a large tablespoonful of sulphur twice a day. Apply a little blister to all affected parts, rubbing it in well with the finger. Cover a little more of the skin that appears to be diseased. If it is practicable, keep the affected ones away from the others.)

Bloody Milk.—Cow about five years old began giving bloody milk four days ago from one quarter. The other three are slightly affected now. It is thin, there being no lumps or stringy matter with it. Thought it due to injury, but can find no indications on the udder. She is due to freshen in March, and her feed has been ensilage, mixed hay, corn meal, distiller's grains and oil meal. Have given epsom salts and ginger; also half an ounce of saltpeter once a day in a bran mash. (Mix in feed twice a day an ounce of powdered sulphate of iron. Give as a drench 3 oz. spirits turpentine and 8 oz. linseed oil; mix. Repeat next day, and again four days later.)

Teat Cut.—Two-year-old heifer about two months ago had one of her teats cut nearly half off, about an inch from the end. It healed quickly, but left an opening into the milk duct through which the milk, now that she has calved, runs when she is milked. Can you give me any method of treatment that may enable me to heal the opening entirely, so that the milk can be drawn from its natural outlet? (Had you sent this inquiry soon after the injury it might be a sound teat now; but inasmuch as she has freshened, it will be difficult to treat it successfully. Try a nitrate of silver point. Wet the point and give it one turn in the sinus every third day. Use a safety milking instrument to draw the milk.)

THE HORSE—ITEMS FOR HORSE OWNERS.

Feed the brood mares liberally and see that the hay is of good quality, not too ripe when cut, and well cured. Many a well-bred foal has been ruined for lack of nourishment before birth.

Brood mares that are worked moderately or jogged on the road regularly up to the time of foaling, usually produce the straightest, strongest and most active foals.

See that the floors of the stalls in which colts are kept are dry and covered with clean, dry bedding. Wet, filthy stalls are pretty sure to cause thrush.

Remember that drinking heartily of very cold water is one of the most frequent causes of abortion in mares.

A tablespoonful of linseed meal (ground flaxseed) mixed with the grain ration of colts morning and night, is a profitable feed. It will keep the bowels in good condition and make the colt lively and glossy.

Don't allow ice to accumulate on the ground around the tubs and troughs where the colts are watered. Failure to observe this precaution is liable to result in a broken leg or other serious injury.

Nerve force is to the trotter what the mainspring is to a watch. If the wheels are all perfect in construction and adjustment, but the mainspring faulty, the watch will be unsatisfactory as a time indicator. So with the trotter the instinct may be strong, the conformation and action perfect, but if there be a lack of nerve force, the animal will never be distinguished as a race winner in fast company.

Size is a valuable attribute in a horse, but the breeder who attempts to increase the size of his animals by sacrificing beauty, style, finish and quality will find when he offers them for sale that he has made a grave mistake. A handsome, stylish, 14.3-hand animal, that is a prompt roadster, that is well finished, and shows a high degree of quality, will sell for more money than a coarse, ungainly sixteen hand horse. Combine size with beauty, style, finish and quality if possible, but never sacrifice those attributes for size alone. — Horse Breeder.

FEEDING THE COLT.

If the colt lacks exercise there is danger of feeding him too much, but if he is getting all the exercise he will take every day I do not think he can be over-fed. One of the best colts I ever saw had a self-feeder and all the oats he wanted and also had a great deal of exercise and he grew up wonderfully well proportioned, well muscled and boned colt. I would say not to feed any more oats than he can relish and will take readily and greedily, but enough to keep him smooth. The colt only had the self-feeder until he was a year old. The first year they are the most easily stunted and therefore they should be most carefully and liberally fed.

If I had a colt stunted in growth I would give him skim milk, if I had it, and put some oil meal and bran into his feed. I would feed him some roots if I could, but would not advise buying the patent stock foods.

Colts should be weaned all the way from three to five months old. A three or four-year-old colt should not be worked hard, because he is shedding teeth and is likely to get into a feverish condition that requires careful feeding, including some roots or oil meal, and such laxative hays as part clover and part alfalfa. If the colt gets badly run down in condition a little flaxseed will be good and turn him into a good pasture.

THE MARKET FOR GINSENG.

Why Call it a Gold Brick?

I noticed in a recent article a gentleman calls ginseng a gold brick. I wish to take a few exceptions to his article, as it is only fair that both sides of a question should be heard.

The writer says that the only reason for the high price of genseng roots is their scarcity. Now he admits that the price is high and the visible supply is small. Following the natural law of supply and demand, there certainly must be a market for the product or the price would not be high. The scarcity of the roots strikes me as being a good and sufficient reason for the high price.

Again, we find in the article that the only user of the root is the ignorant Chinaman, who, if he can buy a piece, carries it in his pocket as a charm. These same ignorant Chinamen, I believe, invented and had in use such articles as gun powder, printing presses, etc., some thousand years before we even thought of them.

In another place, ginseng growing is called a "get-rich-quick" scheme. If the gentleman has grown ginseng, or is correctly informed on the subject, he could hardly use that phrase consistently. He must know that it takes from five to eight years, and even longer, to raise marketable roots. That does not strike me as getting rich very fast. If there is not a ready market for the product, why does the price increase each year? We have reliable government reports to show that such is the case.

To go back to John Chinaman, I think the gentleman's statement is wrong, and that he will find, on investigation, that ginseng is put to many uses in China. However, let us figure on the basis that each Chinaman who has the price biys a small piece for a charm. There are some 400,000,000 Chinese in existence. If only one-quarter of them bought ginseng, it would create a market that, at the high prices obtained, would be enviable for any product.

It seems to me that it takes a lot of hard, intelligent work, the same as it does to raise anything grown on a farm, to raise ginseng successfully. I have none for sale, but am writing this article simply to give the ginseng growers' side of the story. As near as I can judge, the situation stands this way: The demand is good, the price high, and the market unlimited. Where then does the term "gold brick" apply?

POULTRY DEPARTMENT.

Duck Raising For Profit.

This branch of the poultry business holds special inducements for those whose yarding space is limited or circumscribed; for the reason that ducks are quiet creatures. An inclosure twelve inches high suffices for duckling harbors, and a two, and at the most, a three-foot-high fence for large ducks.

More pounds of duck may be raised to the square foot than of any other fowl. In three months twenty-five ducks will market between 125 to 150 pounds and produce about five pounds of fine deathers and down. The 25 birds can be raised in a 12x12 inclosure.

Ducks mature more quickly and get out from under the mother wing sooner than our other standard varieties of poultry. The ducklings are independent little creatures. After the first month or six weeks they require very little attention from the parent bird.

Broilers were my first venture in the poultry business. There is only about a half acre available for a poultry plant, though there is available nearby a fine river range for a mature breeding flock, of perhaps over one acre. I never found that broilers were handily a practicable product, if the birds ran free, and too much expense for yarding and so on if they were confined.

Ducks were then tried and have been found very satisfactory. On a quarter of an acre we annually raise between one and two thousand birds. The rest of the place, except the river, is left at peace.

I used hens for incubating the eggs, at first having five female ducks, and a drake and about a dozen good motherly hens. About four hens were set at a time, nine eggs under each hen. In about ten days the eggs were tested out, the nests doubled up so each still held nine eggs. In this way we secured a good-sized flock of the same age, that at about six weeks of age were separated from the hens, yarded and fed together.

Ducks need little exercise, on an extended range; especially where preparing for market. But they need clean, dry bedding at night and shade from the sun during the day and they must not be exposed too long, cold rain storms. They do well in feeding from a V-shaped trough and the same for drinking. There may be a slat running lengthwise through the centre, so as to keep the birds all but their bills, out of the trough. They need a pan or box of warm sand, or fine grits, in the yards, near the feeding troughs.

Regarding their housing, or shelter: When it is possible, a good roof is a great comfort to the caretaker, and a floor space protected from the rains, but they can be raised outdoors in roomy packing boxes quite successfully.

Mortality among ducklings is mostly due to over and improper feeding and the chilling of the young birds. They can be fed to good advantage four times a day, all that they will eat up clean and quick in about ten minutes. The troughs should be sufficiently roomy to give each bird an equal chance at the food and no danger of the weaker being crowded away and losing the nourishment that it specially stands in need of. It is better to water the birds after, not before, they are fed. The drinking vessels should be sufficiently deep to submerge the entire bill so the little fellows can squirt water through (and thus cleanse out) their nostrils. Otherwise the nostrils become clogged and the birds are liable to smother. When in this condition they throw back their heads, tumble over on their backs, a few kicks and they are among the yesterdays. The same symptoms accompany indigestion and sunstroke.

Indigestion is due to a forcing diet and over-feeding. Also a sudden chill—the change from a hot brooder to cold outer atmosphere, especially at feeding time. Ducks require more fresh air, and will stand more cold than chicks. It is the sudden changes and the fetid brooder atmosphere that is injurious.

Feeding. — A good diet for the 1st week is one-third wheat bran, one-third brown middlings, one-third corn meal, to which is added a tenth of coarse sand or fine grit, all mixed into a creamy mass. For the balance of the first month to the above, add five per cent. or one-twentieth of fine beef scrap or blood meal. During the second month increase the beef to one-tenth (in weight nine parts of grain and one part beef), and add about one-fourth in bulk of green stuff; cut clover, lettuce, grass or so on. During the last two weeks of the third month give one part bran, one part middlings, two parts coarse meat and one-seventh of beef with same proportion of green stuff till within a week of marketing, when the green must be discontinued.

The Finish for Market. — Ducks will only stand this last high-forcing diet about two weeks and must be then promptly marketed, else they fall back in flesh, and it is never possible to get them up to as good weight again, besides the extra expense. During the high forcing it is very important to watch their feed and keep them a little hungry all the time, because when once fully satisfied they will not take hold and eat heartily, but fall off on their feed.

Starting With Geese.

Geese for breeding purposes should be bought in February or March, as the laying season begins early. Hens can be used for hatching the eggs and the eggs are taken away from the geese they will lay another lot. When hatched under hens, it is desirable to sprinkle the eggs twice a week. The hen need not be disturbed at hatching time.

Let the goslings remain under the hen several hours after hatching, then give them an outing if the weather is sunny, and provide fresh water and food. The coop should be removed to fresh ground every day. Feed table scraps, cracked corn and vegetables, including a large amount of green food. The goslings are soon able to take care of themselves and may be taken away from the hen after they are two weeks old. They should have plenty of fresh drinking water which should not be allowed to become muddy. When growth is extremely rapid plenty of food is needed, but never feed so much grain with a good appetite. The goslings are ready for market at two to three months and are then called "green geese." Grain, meat and grass are the best fattening foods, with plenty of drinking water.

Salt in the Poultry House.

Salt is very cleansing and purifying as well as sure death to some forms of insect life, and used judiciously in the poultry house it will be found very beneficial.

For cleansing houses where there has been chicken cholera, it is one of the best things known. After cleaning out the house, and removing perches and nests, make a strong brine and spray it thoroughly in every part of the house. Scrub perches and nest boxes with it, and see that every crack and crevice is filled with it. If it can be applied hot it will give still better results.

If all infected birds are removed from the house before this work is done, there will be no more cases.

The same treatment is a valuable remedy for red mites which are so troublesome to the fowls. After two week repeat the treatment, as by that time all the eggs of the mites will be hatched. After that a light application two or three times during the season, will keep them from causing trouble.

Shippers of poultry and eggs should be very cautious about responding to new commission men who quote prices higher than the regular market. These are very likely to be irresponsible parties who fail and defraud shippers as soon as they have received any considerable quantity of goods. The best trade of the cities is mostly commanded by the older and long established firms, and these are able to pay as high for the goods as anybody. New concerns which quote very high prices usually do so at the expense of reliability.

DOMESTIC HINTS.

Beef Soup With Barley.

Take two pounds of beef from the round. Remove the fat, cut the meat into small pieces and then chop it very fine. Put it into a soup pot and pour over it two quarts of cold water. Showly heat the liquid to the boiling point, skim carefully, and then cover it closely and set it back where it will simply bubble for 3 hours. At the end of that time add an onion, a small slice of carrot, a stalk of celery, two cloves and a bay leaf. Then simmer for another hour. When the meat is first put over take one-third of a cupful of well-washed barley, put it into another saucepan with a pint of cold water and let it cook until the soup is done, then strain the soup and add the cooked barley. Let the whole boil up once after this and thicken with a tablespoonful of flour and one of butter stirred together over the fire. Season highly with salt and pepper. Serve very hot.

Cut in small bits sufficient celery to make a heaping cupful, then cut in pieces of similar size the same quantity of cheese (do not use cheese that is too new) and serve with a mayonnaise dressing and garnish with stuffed olives cut in halves.

FLESH BUILDER

The liver of the cod fish produces oil that is a wonderful flesh builder. No fat or oil can compare with it in that respect. To get the best out of it, it must be emulsified and made like cream. In Scott's Emulsion it is prepared in the best possible form to produce the best possible results. Thirty years have proven this.

Lay half the mushrooms on this and put on the rest of the oil, breadcrumbs, seasoning and parsley. Bake half an hour and just before serving dust with cayenne pepper.

Mock Oysters. — To the contents of a can of corn add a half cupful of milk, two eggs, a half teaspoonful of salt and flour enough to make stiff batter. Drop by spoonfuls into hot lard, and fry a nice brown.

Peanut Sticks. — Roll to a paste a sufficient quantity of peanuts to make a cupful; add the grated rind of a lemon, the yolks of four eggs, six tablespoonfuls of sugar and a good half cup of sifted flour. When smooth add the beaten whites of the four eggs. Roll out on the board, cut into strips, twist and fry in hot lard.

Rice Muffins. — One-half-pint of soft boiled rice, one spoonful of butter, two eggs, two spoonfuls of yeast, salt, three pints of wheat flour. Mix at night and bake in rings in the morning.

HINTS TO HOUSEKEEPERS.

To clean white furs, take two or three handfuls of flour and put it in the oven to bake for a few minutes. Place the fur on the table and rub the flour into it well with a piece of wadding. Leave it for half an hour, then shake all the flour out well from the fur and it will look like new.

Orange frosting for cake is made by grating the rind of an orange and squeezing the juice and a tablespoonful of lemon juice over it. Gradually beat into the mixture confectioners' sugar until the proper constituency is reached.

To make meat tender put a tablespoonful of vinegar in the tin with the meat, or over it if hung, and it will make the toughest piece of meat tender.

When peeling onions begin at the root end and peel upwards, and the onion will scarcely affect your eyes at all.

For perspiring feet dissolve an ounce of sulphate of soda in a pint of hot water and rub the feet over with this every night and morning. Dust a little boracic acid into the stocking.

Anaemia may arise from lack of exercise, or it may be occasioned by mental depression, anxiety, disappointment, trouble, acute excitement of the emotions or passions, or spinal irritation.

Hard-boiled eggs, with cheese sauce, is a favorite luncheon dish in a certain nursery. The eggs are served hot, broken in two with a fork, the hot cheese sauce poured over them. The sauce is made with butter, flour and milk, cooked into a white sauce, and having a generous quantity of grated cheese stirred into it just before it is done.

In addition to the weekly scrubbing of the refrigerator, it is a good plan to occasionally take out the shelves and boil them with a handful of washing soda. The wash boiler may be used for this purpose.

A sponge or face flannel which has become slimy through constant use of soap should be well rubbed with salt and then rinsed in cold water. By this process it becomes practically new.

Rust on steel may be removed thus: Cover the steel with sweet oil, rub it in well, and let it stand for forty-eight hours; then rub the steel with unslacked lime, finely powdered, till all the marks have disappeared.

A diet of young carrots is said to be excellent for the skin and all its appendages of hair and nails. This is attributed to its anti-scorbutic salts, its oily matter and the iron which exists in all red-colored vegetables and fruits.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

"LORD CHUMLEY" TO-NIGHT.

After several seasons of success in New York, Cecil De Mille, son of the playwright, H. C. De Mille, who, with David Belasco, wrote "The Wife," "Men and Women," "The Charity Ball," and many other plays, including that masterpiece, "Lord Chumley," will appear in the last named comedy at the Carman to-night. Although only twenty-five years of age he has attained an eminence in the histrionic art which many an older man might envy. "Lord Chumley" was written for E. H. Sothern, who played the title role continuously for more than two years, and it was at his earnest request that Cecil De Mille, who had been his understudy, and whose perfect conception of the part appealed to him, undertook to star in the production. Eastern critics of unbiased judgment say that Cecil's interpretation of the part compares favorably with that of Sothern, and the hearty reception he everywhere receives would denote that the audience are of the same opinion.

A Good Record

The Public School Inspector's report for February shows improvement in attendance, as compared with the corresponding month last year. The total registered was 993; last year 848. The per cent. of average attendance was 86; last year 79. The total days attended was 16924; last year 15,336. Cases of lateness 108; last year 171.

BOGUS BALLOT-BOX CASES ONCE MORE.

Spring Assizes Opened at 2.30 This Afternoon—The Judge's Charge to the Grand Jury—All the Principals in the City—Distinguished Lawyers for the Defence—Belleville's Cause Celebre Now in the Limelight.

"Looks as though there was another ballot-box case on," said one of the clerks at the Quinte last night, with a smile, as he glanced round the rotunda.

It did, indeed. The room was pretty well filled. Detectives Parkinson and Chamberlain were picking their teeth in a self-satisfied way, after evidently enjoying the Quinte's cuisine; the newspaper men were button-holing people; Mr. McCamon and the County Crown Attorney, Mr. Anderson, were engaged in an animated conversation, sitting side by side. Perhaps they were discussing that famous apology, which, like the equally famous letter in the song, "never came."

"That's Sam Harryett over there," said a gentleman: "he with the pipe, up against the wall."

The genial ex-police magistrate looked "as fine as silk," to use a slang phrase. He wore a calm and meditative expression, a slight limp when he walked, showing that the effects of the injuries received in the woods last fall were still with him.

A small-sized gentleman, with a rather careworn look, passed across the floor. Why, yes, that's Editor Bremner, of Bancroft. He has grown a beard since we saw him last. The chilly winds of Jan. 25 possibly gave him throat trouble. as he passes Mr. Harryett the latter bestows on the back of his head a deep glance of affection. Damon and Pythias, 'tis said, were not to be compared in brotherly love to Messrs. Bremner and Harryett.

The door opens, and a truly, good-natured looking chap comes in. It's Phil Lott, with a complexion like an autumn sunset. To the newspaper men Phil explains that he has been out after foxes—got six in three days, he says, with justifiable pride.

"Hello! Phil," chorus the detectives, "where did you get that complexion?" and the brother of Byron O. and the limbs of the law are soon engaged in an animated conversation.

Of course there were many rumors in the air.

"Something startling will be brought out at this trial," said one party, with a knowing look; "Phil Lott has some more to tell."

"The case will fall flat in a day or two," said another; "those big Grit lawyers will put a different complexion on matters."

So the talk went on; the crowd passed to and fro.

One more day and the curtain would go up on the last act of the melodrama which, for audacity of conception, dwarfs anything before attempted in this county. The writer left them all smoking and talking and laughing, and went home to dream that Phil Lott brought a great big ballot-box into court, opened the false side, and out jumped his brother Byron O.!

The Premier's Attitude.

In conversation with Mr. E. Guss Porter this morning it was learned that Hon. Mr. Whitney, Attorney-General for Ontario, is personally interesting himself in getting out evidence for the conspiracy cases. This course, it may be pointed out, is in direct and marked contrast to the course adopted by the late Attorney-General, Mr. Gibson.

To-Day's Proceedings.

It was 2.30 when the court opened There was noticeable, at the proceedings this afternoon, an air of judicial sternness, if one might go so far as to say that, which was absent at the preliminary investigation. The Grand Jury, all seeming deeply impressed with the solemnity of their office, sat waiting for something to happen. The petty jurors and witnesses comfortably filled the rest of the court room. The press seats, this time, were next to the prisoner's dock.

It was learned that the parties charged with conspiracy will be tried separately. Reilly's case, it is understood, will come up to-morrow. Mr. O'Flynn, of this city, will defend Whalen, of Prescott, and will also be associated with Mr. W. R. Riddell, K. C., of Toronto, in the defence of Ed. Ruttan, of Harrowsmith, the man who, with Robert Emmet Harpell, drowned the Frontenac bogus boxes in Sydenham Lake. Mr. Shepley, K. C., of Toronto, is associated with Mr. Hellmuth for the prosecution. He (Mr. Shepley) represents the Dominion Government. Col. Sherwood and the two detectives were all in court.

"Order in the Court!" said the crier, in stentorian tones, and you could have heard the proverbial pin drop as the Judge came in.

The Grand Jury answered to their names, which have already been published in The Intelligencer. They retired into the Grand Jury room and selected Mr. Morden Bird, of Stirling, as foreman.

THE JUDGE'S CHARGE.

The Judge then addressed the Grand Jury. He directed the most of his remarks to the conspiracy charge, which, he said, from the number of accused persons, and the large amount of territory covered, was evidently one of large dimensions. The false ballots and false ballot-boxes were only the means to an end. The principal parties who had conspired to use them were candidates for Parliamentary honors, and it was charged that the boxes were to be used to defeat the candidates opposed to Mr. W. J. Shibley and Byron O. Lott. Neither of the former candidates were now in this country, and could not be tried, yet it was necessary that these names should appear in the indictment. The Judge then recapitulated the story of Reilly, given at the preliminary investigation. Shibley and Reilly were the two first who were involved in the charge. The visit of Reilly and Shibley to Watertown was described. The learned Judge told the story very clearly. If the statement which appeared in the depositions were true, it would be plain what Mr. Shibley's object was. Reilly was Shibley's confidant and friend all through the affair. Twenty ballot-boxes were ordered, and if twenty ballot-boxes were ordered and secured, they could see what an effect they would have, if found to work as favorably as Shibley and Reilly believed they would. When the boxes were finished and shipped, the young man Whalen appeared on the scene. He was asked to bring the boxes from Ogdensburg to Prescott and ship them, ten to a man by the name of Kerfoot, in Kingston, which was a fictitious name. They were taken from a hotel by a Mr. Ruttan, who afterwards sunk them, with another man's assistance, in a lake, where, he said, "the devil could not get them. "Perhaps," said, the learned judge, "the devil does not go into the water." The other ten boxes made, the Judge said, were shipped to Hastings County, six to Phil A. Lott and the other four to a man named Bremner, at Bancroft, who turned them over to a Mr. Harryett, late Police Magistrate at Bancroft. The evidence showed that Philip A. Lott was the medium of communication between Shibley, Reilly, and his brother Byron O. Lott. Phil Lott's visit to Mr. Porter was described, when the existence of the bogus boxes was made known. The main facts in the "plot," as His Lordship called it, were clearly and plainly brought out. Bremner admitted receiving the case which contained the boxes, but denied knowing what the case contained, though he since acknowledged that he was suspicious. Harryett received the case from Bremner and the fact that he hid them went to show that everything was not perfectly "above board." There might be several indictments against the prisoners charged with conspiracy. It was not apparent from the evidence at the preliminary examination, the Judge said, that the plotters had been able to secure any fraudulent ballots. This was, the Judge said, a very serious charge. The attempt to steal an election was an attempt to do a great wrong and deprive people of their legal rights. The crime of conspiracy was then described to the jury, it being, the Judge said, a case when two or more persons conspire together to do an unlawful act by lawful means or a lawful act by unlawful means. Conspiracy was the essence of the charge; if that were proved, whether the object were attained or not, the accused, ought to be convicted. There were some persons accused who were not connected with the case when it first started, but if it was proved that they were brought into the case before it ended, that would be sufficient, and they were equally guilty of conspiracy with those who started it. His Lordship then urged the Grand Jury to carefully deliberate on the matter, which was costing the County a great deal of money, but which was in the public interest.

The case of Onslaw Wynne, charged with stabbing, was then taken up and explained.

There was also on the docket a charge of criminal libel, but His Lordship said he would wait till the conspiracy matter had been deliberated upon before he charged them in connection with the criminal libel case.

The Grand Jury then retired to deliberate.

A Why? Service.

The Bridge Street Church Epworth League met last evening in its regular weekly meeting, which was favored by the presence of some of the Albert College students, who took charge of the service, the subject chosen being "Why." Mr. Gifford, in the chair, opened the meeting by a short song service, prayer and scripture lesson. He then called on Mr. Morton, who gave some very helpful reasons on "Why I am a Christian." Mr. Webb then sang a solo, "My God and Father," after which Mr. Buckingham gave a very instructive and interesting address on "Why I should reverence the Bible." These meetings of the League have been gaining in interest and the regular attendance is steadily increasing.

Mr. Luton's Successor.

A meeting of the School Management Committee of the Board of Education was held last evening. The object of the meeting was to consider the applications of teachers who wanted to take the place of Mr. J. T. Luton. A number applied for the position, among them being some females. HOCKEY.

Youngsters Played a Close and Exciting Match Last Night.

A large number of spectators were present at the rink last evening to witness a hockey match between the Greys and the Lock Factory teams. It proved to be a close and exciting finish. When but three minutes of the playing time was left the score was a tie, both teams having 4 goals to their credit. The Lock Factory boys, however, proved to be the victors scoring the winning goal just before the bell sounded. It was an interesting game to witness, as the teams are quite evenly matched. The play was not particularly rough, but two of the Greys received injuries, also one of the Lock Factory boys. The most serious was that to Allen, of the Greys, who had the misfortune to have his nose broken. Spangenberg, a member of the same team, had an ugly gash inflicted over the left eye, whilst Phillips of the Hardware team was laid off temporarily by being put in the face during a scrimmage about the goal. Mr. J. Conley was referee, and whilst a few off-sides escaped his notice he did his duties impartially. The youngsters played surprisingly good hockey, and either one of them would have given this year's junior team a good run for first place. The line-up was as follows:

Greys		Lock Factory.
E. O'Flynn	Goal	Phillips
Donald	Point	Lee.
Robb	Cover	Saunders
Burke	Rover	McGuire
Allen	Centre	Bone
Spangenberg	Right Wing	Robinson
J. O'Flynn	Left Wing	Rowe

NO NEED FOR A CHANGE

Relations of Canada and Britain Are Satisfactory.

So Declares Sir Wilfrid Laurier in Reply to Col. Sam Hughes' Resolution and Speech in Favor of a Full Partnership Union With the Mother Country—Interesting Debate in the House of Commons.

Ottawa, March 14.—Col. Sam Hughes yesterday projected into the deliberations of the House a question which led to a long discussion. He moved, "That in the opinion of this House, the best interests of Canada and the Empire at large would be advanced, and the peace, progress and prosperity of humanity be assured, by a full partnership union of Great Britain and her colonies, wherein there would be a united Imperial Parliament, empowered to deal with inter-Imperial, international, commercial, financial and other necessary national problems; but leaving to the existing Parliaments their present powers, functions, control of tariff, and other matters necessary for their own purpose.

E. F. Clarke to Have Seconded.

Col. Hughes reflected sadly on the circumstance that E. F. Clarke was to have seconded the resolution. He said he was no pioneer in the movement for a full partnership union of Great Britain and her colonies. As early as 1846 a great Nova Scotian, Hon. Joseph Howe, took a strong stand on the question, and predicted a day when the British Empire would be a united whole.

It had been said that Britain and her colonies were divided by great stretches of ocean. The ocean, he argued, was really a bond of union. What was needed was a high tone in the national life of the country. A continent which begets pride in the country's flag. A closer union was essential in the interest of the Mother Country. Britain had reached the climax of her greatness.

It was in the interest of the colonies also to enter a closer union. The colonies were loyal to the core, they were growing to manhood, and it was absurd to say that they must remain as they are to-day. If there was no union it would not be the fault of the colonies but of the Motherland. Of the various courses open to Canada, including independence and annexation, Col. Hughes' preference was strongly for a full partnership union.

Discussing annexation, Col. Hughes said it was commonly supposed that Canada would have to bear less war tax as a portion of the United States than as part of the British Empire. This was a mistake. In the last hundred years the United States had spent for the purposes of war four billion dollars more than Great Britain. Canada was now paying $2,500,000 a year for defence. As a portion of the United States we would have to pay $30,000,000 annually. Canada would be in a position to protect herself. It was an insult to say that the United States would protect us against invasion. The spirit of Canadians would not tolerate such a thing.

As an independent nation, Col. Hughes figured out Canada would have to pay during the next thirty years from sixty to a hundred thousand dollars a year to be on a par with the commonest second rate power in the world.

Col. Hughes thought the full partnership union scheme would do away with racial and creed differences all over the Empire, would reduce freight rates and promote immigration to Canada from the British Isles, and promote also the importation of colonial products to take the place of articles now purchased by Great Britain from foreign countries.

As to how this Imperial Federation would be brought about was not for him to say. There was to be an Imperial Conference, which he hoped the Prime Minister would attend, and from which he hoped Sir Wilfrid would return in better health than from the last conference. Doubtless plans and proposals would be submitted there from which the most practical methods would be selected.

Recalled the Khan.

Robert McPherson of Vancouver made a violent attack upon those who, he said, were given to proclaim their own loyalty at the expense of that of their neighbors. He accused Colonel Hughes of indulging in the inuendo that there were annexationists and independents in Canada, declared that the worst rebels were those who threatened to take up arms to coerce their fellow-citizens of other races or religion, and proclaimed his own loyal sentiments by reciting one stanza of "Men of the Northern Zone."

Mr. Cockshutt, Brantford, in the course of a lengthy argument, emphasized the fact that Canada was not contributing a cent toward the maintenance of the British navy. Such conditions, he said, could not exist long. Some day Canada might have to shoulder responsibility for her own protection.

Mr. Burneau of Richelieu criticized the resolution and summoned history to support his argument. He declared in favor of the Nationalist policy, which was not Britain first, Britain afterwards and Britain always, but Canada first, Canada afterwards and Canada always.

No Solution Yet.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier said the question introduced by Col. Hughes had engaged the minds of some of the best men of the Empire. So far no solution of the problem had been reached. The Imperial Federation League, which took up the question, finally agreed that there were no practical means of realizing its objects. He would say to Col. Hughes that there was no solution of the question on the four corners of his resolution. He did not see how we could have complete partnership in the union of the Empire and at the same time leave the Colonial Parliaments with the powers which they already enjoy. In this respect the resolution was contradictory. Sir Wilfrid said he did not think any of the self-governing colonies would be willing to part with any of the powers which they now possess. He was proud to say that the relations between Britain and the colonies were satisfactory. While they remained satisfactory it was idle to suppose that any changes would be made.

It was only when a grievance was found to exist that the British people made the necessary changes. If present conditions no longer answered the purposes of the British Empire, no doubt means would be found to remedy these deficiencies.

No Change Expected.

"But," said Sir Wilfrid in conclusion, "so long as they are found satisfactory, so long as there is contentment in every part of the Empire, as there is to-day, I am sure that all efforts to change these relations will be futile. The British Empire to-day is composed of nations; it is an aggregation of nations all bearing allegiance to the same Sovereign, and there is this difference between the British Empire of the present day and the Empire which has been seen in the past, namely, that whereas the Empires of the past rested on force, the Empire of to-day, so far at least as the great colonies are concerned, rests altogether on the will of the colonists themselves."

Sir Wilfrid asked that, while the question was one which could always be treated advantageously even though at the present time it seems premature, the resolution be withdrawn.

Mr. Borden Replies.

"I am very glad," observed R. L. Borden in reply, "that the Right Hon. gentleman regards the relations of Canada with the Empire as so entirely satisfactory, for it is not more than 18 months ago that he himself announced in this House that they were absolutely unsatisfactory, that we must attain to a greater share of the treaty-making powers." (Hear, Hear.)

Continuing, Mr. Borden said that it was time development of relations with the rest of the Empire came around by a process of gradual evolution. It was also true that in respect of all these matters the initiative had been taken by the people of Canada through the public men of Canada. It was, therefore, an interesting question, and one well worth deliberating upon, that Col. Hughes had brought to the attention of the House.

As to the financial features of the resolution, Mr. Borden said that he for one had been of opinion for a number of years that the material prosperity of the Empire and the ties which bind its different portions together might be improved and strengthened by a system of mutual trade preferences within the Empire. That policy for Canada he had advocated in the House and on the platform. Mr. Chamberlain's movement, which was bound to come, so far as it touched the material welfare of the people of the British Isles, was entirely a matter for the British people.

In Sympathy With Chamberlain.

"But," continued Mr. Borden, "speaking for myself as a Canadian, I am heartily in sympathy with the movement, and I believe that the people of Great Britain, the people of Canada and the people of dependencies of the British Empire could come together upon a business basis and make an arrangement by which each would give certain advantages in trade matters which they do not extend to other countries. If this could be accomplished, it does not seem to me there is room for doubt that it would result in great benefits, not only to Canada, but to all portions of the Empire. I for one sincerely hope that many who are now within the sound of my voice may live to see that great project an accomplished fact. (Cheers.)"

Col. Hughes expressed his gratification at the Prime Minister's and Mr. Borden's expression of opinion, and withdrew his motion.

After some cross-firing over the Separate School petitions, the House adjourned at 11.30 p. m.

DOUBLE PERMANENT FORCE.

Increase From 2,000 to 4,000 for All Arms in Canada.

Ottawa, March 14.—(Globe Special.)—Owing to the assumption of the fortifications at Halifax and Esquimalt by the Dominion, the permanent force will be increased from 2,000 to 4,000 of all arms. An amendment to the Militia Act will be required this session to permit of the augmentation. Of the additions to the force, at least 1,000 men will need to be infantry.

Sir Charles Parsons will shortly come to Ottawa from Halifax to talk over the matter of the transfer with Sir Frederick Borden. It will then be settled how many Canadian troops will be needed for the two places by July 1.

In anticipation of the demand for garrison purposes upon the permanent corps, recruiting is now going on actively. There is considerable speculation as to the officers to be selected to command at Halifax and Esquimalt.

Big Robbery in Montreal.

Montreal, March 14.—When Mr. Larose, foreman with L. T. Michaelson & Son, jewelers and diamond importers, entered the workroom at 411 St. James Street, yesterday morning, he found the door of the large safe amidst a heap of refuse on the office floor, and all the valuable contents gone, the loss being estimated at something between $3,000 and $4,000. The detective force is on the track of the robbers.

ASTHMA

Won't you let us send you a free sample of the remedy that will cure you?

We want you to try it—to see what instant relief it gives—to prove that Clarke's Kola Compound is a positive and permanent cure for Asthma. Surely you must know that we could not afford to do this if we did not know absolutely that Clarke's Kola Compound would cure, and cure completely. Just write us that you want a free sample. We'll send it without cost to you.

"For more than twelve years, I had been troubled with Asthma and during the last two years, the attacks became so severe and frequent that I had to lay off work for weeks at a time. Many nights I could not sleep lying down. Nothing gave me relief until the C.P.R. doctor prescribed Clarke's Kola Compound. I took three bottles which helped me from the start, and by the time the third was finished, I was completely cured. I have not had an attack of Asthma for three years."

BEHRING SEA FISHERIES.

United States Makes an Offer for Canadian Rights.

Ottawa, March 15.—It is learned that the United States Government have made an offer of between two and three millions for the purchase of Canadian rights in the Behring Sea fisheries. The offer will come before the Government, but it is thought will not be entertained.

The Marine Department has purchased a number of quick-firing Nordenfelts from the British naval stores at Halifax and Esquimalt. The price paid was a nominal one, as the Imperial authorities were desirous of getting rid of them for more modern guns.

Reception to the Canada.

Ottawa, March 15.—The new cruiser, the Canada, has been splendidly received by the British authorities at her various ports of call in the West Indies. At Barbados, on arriving, the Canada fired a salute, when the Governor sent out two A. D. C.'s to call upon her commander. Capt. Knowlton was invited to luncheon at Government House and royally treated. The Canada is allowed to coal from the depots in the port she enters just as though she were a vessel of the royal navy.

The King Fire Cases.

Toronto, March 15.—One of the most important cases that will be tried at this sitting of the Criminal Sessions was commenced yesterday before Judge Morgan and a jury. Thomas Godson, his son Joseph, his daughter Susan Bateman, and her husband, Hamilton Bateman, are on trial, charged with setting fire to the buildings, hay and straw stacks of James Bell. All the parties live in the Township of King. The actual value of the property destroyed was nearly $6,000. The case will last all week.

War Council For Russia.

Tsarskoe-Selo Conference Decides to Prolong Fight.

But France Rebuffs Russia and Refuses to Make a Loan—This Act Speaks Louder for Peace Than Even Kuropatkin's Defeat—Then the People Are to be Reckoned With in Mobilization of New Army.

St. Petersburg, March 15.—The War Council held at Tsarkoe-Selo yesterday, at which War Minister Sakharoff, General Dragomiroff and others were present, is understood to have decided the question of continuing the war in the affirmative.

RUSSIAN LOAN REFUSED.

French Banks Postpone the Issue—Financiers Are Afraid.

Paris, March 15.—Enquiry yesterday at three banks, principally interested in the proposed new Russian loan, brought the response that it had been decided to postpone the issue. A representative of one of the banks said the postponement was for such an indefinite period that it was not likely the issuance would occur for some time to come. The postponement was attributed to the uncertainties of the war situation.

The Temps says: "It was quite natural that the Paris bankers should refuse to sign a contract in view of the conditions in Manchuria, and the entire ignorance of the financiers concerning the real intentions of the Russian Government."

The paper declares the postponement will continue until Russia's intentions become clear.

The Journal De Debate, in its financial article, says: "Many people consider the adjournment to be evidence that Russian has reached the end of her resources.

Can't Raise New Army.

London, March 15.—The correspondent at St. Petersburg of The Daily Telegraph predicts that the Russian authorities will have to battle with an angry sea of troubles in connection with the mobilization of a new army.

The correspondent relates as an example that a few days ago an attempt to mobilize Cossacks in the Kuban district of the Caucasus met with flat disobedience, and that the employment of force led to serious bloodshed.

The Times correspondent at Tokio reports that a conspiracy has been discovered at Seoul to induce the Emperor of Korea to repudiate the Japanese convention and seek refuge in a foreign legation. The conspirators, it is added, have been arrested.

The correspondent at St. Petersburg of The Petit Parisienne reports that Gen. Kuropatkin's resignation has been accepted, and that Grand Duke Nicholas Nicholaievitch has consented to take chief command in Manchuria.

HAVE REACHED TIE PASS.

Fighting With Rear Guard Continues—Russians Must Take Stores.

General Kuroki's Headquarters in the Field, Monday, March 14.—(Via Fusan, March 15.)—The greater part of the retreating Russians are supposed to have reached Tie Pass. The pursuing Japanese have frequent encounters with the rear guard. Gen. Kuropatkin must remove the supplies from Tie Pass if he plans a retirement to Harbin, as they will be necessary to maintain the army during their march. The Russians have no stores between Tie Pass and Harbin.

Russian General Hurt.

St. Petersburg, March 15.—General Kuropatkin, in a despatch dated March 14, says he has received no further report of any fighting between organized bodies of troops, and announces that the Japanese are making reconnaissances. In a despatch filed the previous day the Russian Commander-in-Chief notified the Emperor that General Meyendorff fell from his horse on March 10 and fractured his collar bone.

Can Russia Raise Men?

New York, March 15.—A Berlin despatch to The Herald says: The St. Petersburg correspondent of The Cologne Gazette declares that further mobilization is impossible in Russia at present if the mass of people should declare itself against the continuance of the war.

JAP ADVANCE SLOW.

But Wide Turning Movement May Be in Progress.

Tie Pass, March 14.—As after the battle of Liaoyang, the advance of the Japanese army against the new positions of the Russians at Tie Pass is slow. The leading columns are eight or ten miles southward, and in touch with the Russian van posts, but the operations at present are not serious. Field Marshal Oyama shows slight intentions of pressing his advantage in an immediate attack on Tie Pass.

It is possible, however, that a wide turning movement, of which reports are current, is in progress. In such operations the Japanese have the immense advantage of several bases and lines of supply, to which is now added the Sinmintin road, while the Russian army necessarily is dependent on one base and one line of communication, and, therefore, may be outflanked easily.

In the grand army, order is being brought out of chaos with remarkable celerity. The plain in front of Tie Pass, which, on March 11, seethed like a nest of ants with the dense and confused mass of transport, artillery and troops, corps, divisions and regiments being scattered and parties inextricably mingled, has been cleared and the regiments reorganized.

The struggle for the possession of Mukden cost both sides close upon 200,000 men. The Russian loss of officers includes a large proportion of the regimental commanders and field officers.

All the newspaper correspondents, with the exception of three or four, have left for the north, because there is been nowhere to live and nothing to eat.

It is possible now to give a general view of the battle, the connected story emerging out of the confusion incident to the evacuation of Mukden and the forced retreat to Tie Pass.

On the night of March 9 came the order to evacuate Mukden station and city, with directions that the movement of trains northward must be completed by 5 a.m. The enormous task was completed in nine hours, including the hasty embarkation of wounded, who crowded the station platform and occupied the hospitals. Many had already left in the morning, when the private trains of Kuropatkin, Kaulbars, Sakharoff, Bildering and Scabelin departed, but thousands remained. At 9.40 p.m. eight trains were despatched and a call was sent to Tie Pass for thirteen locomotives. At 3 a.m. the second string was started northward and at 9.45 a.m. the last train of the third string of sixteen departed. All the trains had from fifty-two to fifty-five cars.

Foreign Attaches Captured.

General Kuroki's Headquarters in the Field, via Fusan, March 15.—The country is swarming with hungry, disheartened Russians, who are surrendering in squads to any pursuing Japanese they meet. Leading Japanese officers have refused to criticize the lack of mobility displayed while driving the Russians beyond Tie Pass. Most of the foreign attaches with the Russian army, including two American and British officers, were captured at Mukden.

REVOLT CAUSES TERROR.

General Rising in Central Russia Is Threatened—Not Directed Against Czar—Landlords Slain.

St. Petersburg, March 15.—Nine proprietors have been slaughtered in the Province of Kursk. A mob of 8,000 surrounded the country seat at Vitobsky, half killed the inmates, and sacked and burned the house. An official was beaten and imprisoned in the local jail. The alarm has even reached Moscow and Nijni Novgorod.

Forming Town Guards.

The threatened cities propose to form town guards, fearing that the police and soldiers will not protect them. The movement is becoming a general rising against landlords and officials, but it is not directed against the autocracy. The peasants think that the Czar is the victim of foreigners, as the manufacturers are mostly foreigners. The recent imperial manifesto, which was read in the churches, impressed the villagers with the idea that the Czar wants help against internal as well as external enemies.

Coercing the Reservists.

The Government has notified the reservists among the striking employes of the state factories that they would be immediately sent to Manchuria if they did not remain at work. The result was that these men at once returned to work. The Government will hereafter regard all striking employes of works executing state orders as reservists, and will act accordingly.

Half Million Loss.

Kharkoff, Russia, March 15.—A fire Monday night, supposed to be of incendiary origin, destroyed shops to the value of $400,000. Nine persons were severely injured.

FEW PROTESTS.

There are fewer protests arising out of the last local elections than have followed any general election for years past. Only five Liberals and two Conservative seats in the Legislature are protested. The list is as follows:

Liberal—North Norfolk (Mr. Atkinson). Sault Ste Marie (Mr. Smith), Port Arthur and Rainy River (Mr. Kennedy), Kingston (Mr. Pense), and Monck (Hon. Richard Harcourt.)

Conservative—North Norfolk (Mr. Pratt), South Ontario (Mr. Calder).

Of these protests, only three were filed in Toronto, Kingston and Port Arthur and Rainy River, the others being filed in the local offices just before the expiry of the statutory time on Saturday last. This is a new departure in Provincial protests, for in the past they have been generally handled by the two central party organizations. The petitioner in South Ontario is Mr. John Dryden, and in South Norfolk, Mr. W. A. Charlton. Cross-petitions may be filed at any time within the next fifteen days.

An honest election law, administered by an honest Government, will result in a less number of protested elections in the future.

Be very careful what you eat,

It's Lent.

Cut out the bonbons too, my dears,
Although you give them up with tears—
It's Lent.
And dances now you all must shun,
Be good as can be, every one—
It's Lent.

Go leave indulgence in the lurch
And hurry off at once to church—
It's Lent.
You all must mend your sinful ways,
Be good at least for forty days—
It's Lent.

The Hamilton Spectator, moralizing on a remark let drop by the Montreal Gazette to the effect that the law in regard to fortune-telling was passed for the protection of fools, says: "People are very fond of making laws for the protection of fools. Laws prohibiting lotteries and gambling generally, are of the fool protective class. So are restrictive liquor laws, and many others. But, inasmuch as the fools are always with us, these laws seem to be necessary. It might be better to chloroform the fools, and thus deprive the rogues of their visible means of support: but there may be prejudice against that way of elevating the standard of sense in the country. But, while the fool deserves to lose his money, it is not expedient to punish him as well as the rogue. When the fool and the rogue—parties to the same transaction — are alike punishable it is difficult to get evidence against either the one or the other, and it is therefore expedient to allow the fool to go free — punished only by the loss of his money, and direct the batteries of justice against the rogue, using the fool to procure conviction."

That popular officer and genial gentleman, Major W. W. Pope, was this morning shaking hands with his legion of friends in this city. To-day Major and Mrs. Pope bade good-by to Belleville and moved to Montreal, where they will in future reside. Belleville people, one and all, who have come into contact with Major and Mrs. Pope, will regret exceedingly that the exigencies of business should call them away from our city. In social circles Mrs. Pope will be greatly missed. It will be pleasant news to many people to learn that Major Pope does not intend to sever his connection with the Fifteenth, but will still retain his position as senior Major of that Regiment. In conversation Major Pope stated that the large number of Belleville boys in Montreal are all doing well and carrying themselves in a way to reflect credit on the old city of their birth. Assuredly they can have no better "guide, philosopher and friend" than the gentleman who to-day takes his leave of us, and who, with his estimable wife, will take with him the best wishes and respect of all who were honored with their acquaintance.

THE ORANGEMEN'S PAPER.

THE SENTINEL WILL BE CONTROLLED BY THE ORDER.

It is understood that should the widow of the late E. F. Clarke, M.P., who was the owner and manager of The Sentinel, the official organ of the Orange Order, desire to dispose of that paper, Dr. Sproule, M.P., Grand Master and Sovereign of the Order in British America, has made arrangements to take the paper over and continue it in the interests of the society. He has, it is believed, secured the concurrence of the leading officers and members of the Order for this plan.

Naturally he and his colleagues are desirous that it should remain under the control of members of the Order, as it is considered it could not continue the official organ of the society if some one or more gentlemen who were not members of the Order controlled it.

"THE GLOVE THROWN DOWN."

CHRISTIAN GUARDIAN, THE METHODIST WEEKLY, PUBLISHES A STRONG EDITORIAL ON THE SCHOOL QUESTION.

Under the heading, "The Glove Thrown Down," The Christian Guardian publishes this week a strong editorial against the efforts of the Roman Catholic Hierarchy to limit the rights of the two western provinces so soon to be admitted into Confederation.

The circulation of petitions in Quebec last Sunday is regarded by The Guardian as an unqualified and open challenge, and an indication that "the intolerant ecclesiastical oligarchy dominating Quebec is making a supreme effort to tyrannize over the democracy of Canada." Throwing aside the usual policy of subtlety, "the hierarchical champions of mediaevalism ride into the open field and challenge to combat the Protestantism of Canada."

Continuing, The Guardian says that the gauntlet will be taken up gladly, because it is time to teach that Roman Catholicism is simply a sect among sects, that it has no special privileges, and that its sinister influence on public men will not be longer tolerated. The watchword must be, "No Compromise and No Surrender."

The editorial points out that the present issue is one of provincial rights, but there is also the question of the class of immigration to be attracted to Canada. If there is a dual school system, the people from Catholic Europe and the members of reactionary religious organizations recently expelled from France would be likely to come, and they are not wanted.

The Guardian closes by quoting the Huntingdon Gleaner concerning the driving of Protestants from Quebec.

Death at Shannonville.

Eliza M. Valleau, wife of A. B. Randall, for fifty years a resident of Shannonville, died at her home there on Wednesday, 8th inst., after four days' illness as a result of pneumonia, at the age of 77 years and 9 months. She was the youngest of a family of nine girls and two boys, all of whom predeceased her years ago. Her father, Col. Hildebrand Valleau, was one of the U. E. Loyalists, who settled in Prince Edward Co. He was married in 1800 to Elizabeth Campbell. Mrs. Randall was a life-long Methodist and a sincere Christian and always loyal to God and His cause. The funeral took place from her late residence on Friday, the 10th inst., and was largely attended. She leaves a husband and two daughters to mourn her loss, Mrs. W. R. Pennock at home, and Mrs. M. E. Findlay, of Toronto. Her niece, Mrs. Hortense Armstrong, of Melita, Man., had been visiting her after an absence of 18 years and had just taken the train for home when Mrs. Randall was taken with her fatal illness. She died trusting in her Saviour.

A Dollar's Worth Free To Any Rheumatic Sufferer.

I ask no deposit—no reference—no security. There is nothing to risk—nothing to promise—nothing to pay, either now or later. Any rheumatic sufferer who does not know my remedy may have a full dollar's worth free to try.

I willingly make this liberal offer because I know that Dr. Shoop's Rheumatic remedy may be relied upon ALWAYS to bring the utmost relief that medicine can. Years before I discovered this remedy, I studied the nature of Rheumatism. For rheumatism is really

CRYSTALIZED POISON.

Your blood is always full of poison—the poison you eat and drink and breathe into your system. It is the purpose of the blood to absorb and carry off this very poison. And the kidneys, which are the blood filters, are expected to cleanse the blood and send it back through the system clean, to gather more poison which, they, in turn, will eliminate.

But sometimes the kidneys fail. And sometimes, from some other cause, the blood gets so full of poison that they cannot absorb it all. This is the start of Rheumatism. The poison accumulates and crystalizes. The crystals look like little grains of sugar or of fine white sand. The blood carries them and they increase in size. Then, when it can carry them no longer, it deposits them in a joint—on a bone—anywhere.

The twinge in your leg—the dull ache in your arm on a rainy day—these are the outward signs of, the unseen crystals. And the twisted limbs and unspeakable anguish of the sufferer who has allowed his symptoms to go unheeded and unattended for years these are the evidences of what Rheumatism, neglected, can do.

Rheumatism includes lumbago, sciatica, neuralgia, gout—for all these are the results of rheumatism poison in the blood.

Plainly, the first thing to do is to remove the poison. But this is not enough. The "formation" of the poison must be stopped, so that nature may have a chance to dissolve and eliminate the crystals which have already formed. Unless this is done there can be no cure—no permanent relief.

I searched the whole earth for a specific for Rheumatism— something that I or any physician could feel safe in prescribing—something that we could count on not only occasionally, but "always." For the ravages of Rheumatism are everywhere and genuine relief is rare.

I spent twenty years in experimenting before I felt satisfied that I had a certain remedy for this dread disease—a remedy which would not only clean out the poison, but one which would stop its formation.

CERTAIN RELIEF.

The secret lays in a wonderful chemical I found in Germany. When I found this chemical, I knew that I could make a Rheumatic cure that would be practically certain. But even then, before I made an announcement—before I was willing to put my name on it—I made more than 2,000 tests! And my failures were but 2 per cent.

This German chemical is not the only ingredient I use in Dr. Shoop's Rheumatic Cure—but it made the remedy possible—made possible an achievement which, I doubt not, could have been made in no other way.

This chemical was very expensive. The duty, too, was high. In all, it cost me $4.90 per pound. But what is $4.90 per pound for a "real" remedy for the world's most painful disease?—for a "real" relief from the greatest torture human beings know?

I don't mean that Dr. Shoop's Rheumatic Cure can turn bony joints into flesh again—that is impossible. But it will drive from the blood the poison that causes pain and swellling, and then that is the end of the pain and swelling—the end of the suffering—the end of Rheumatism. That is why I can afford to make this liberal offer—that is why I can afford to spend the FIRST dollar that Rheumatic sufferers, the world over, may learn of my remedy.

SIMPLY WRITE ME.

The offer is open to everyone, everywhere, who has not tried my remedy. But you must write ME for the free dollar package order. I will send you an order on your druggist, which he will accept as gladly as he would accept a dollar. He will hand you from his shelves a standard sized package and he will send the bill to me. There are no conditions—no requirements. All that I ask you to do is to write—write to-day. I will send you my book on Rheumatism besides. It is free. It will help you to understand your case. Address Dr. Shoop, Box 69, Racine, Wis.

Mild cases are sometimes cured by a single package. On sale at forty thousand drug stores.

In my extremity a friend advised me to use Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. I took two doses that afternoon and could not believe my senses when I found the next morning the inflammation had largely subsided. I took several doses that day, kept right on talking through the campaign, and I thank this medicine that I won my seat in the Council. This remedy is for sale by all druggists.

Resolution of Condolence

To Mr. Robert Elliott, Bethel, Ont.

Respected friend and brother,—The officers and members of Holloway L.O.L. 251, learning of your sad bereavement in the death of your beloved wife, do hereby send their heartfelt sympathy to you. It has, indeed, been a heavy blow, and we scarcely know how to talk of consolation under so bitter an affliction, but think of one who careth for us all and doeth all things well. We must remember also that light some time will break through and there will be a glad and happy reunion in the great beyond. We know you cannot help but grieve, but let your grief be softened with the glad hope of the resurrection, when we will all meet again and reign with him, and then God will wipe away all tears from our eyes and there shall be no more death. He has prepared a bright and beautiful home beyond the grave, and the spirit of your dear friend will only wait a brief period when in sweetness and in love she will meet you to part no more. And then you know blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth, yea, saith the Spirit, for they do rest from their labors and their works do follow them. May the Lord, who doeth all things well, sustain you in your great affliction. We can say no more; human consolation is weak. May God bless you in your hour of sorrow, is the wish of your friends. Signed on behalf of L.O.L. No. 251,

STORIES FOR THE LADIES

DRAWBACKS OF THE LONG ENGAGEMENT.

Agatha has been engaged to Thomas nearly four years. Thomas is in receipt of a good salary, quite sufficient to support a little home in comfort, and he is constant and devoted in his attentions to Agatha. His calls, four or five evenings a week, have become as much a thing of course as the striking of the clock. A little after 8, in walks Thomas. A little after 10, out he goes. Tender good nights are exchanged at the door. Agatha slips away to bed. Thomas strolls homeward.

"How long is this philandering to go on," mutters Agatha's father to her mother, in the privacy of their chamber. For two years they have been obliged, after our American fashion, to exile themselves from the living room, or parlor, whichever they call it, and spend their evenings in the dining room or their own room upstairs. Agatha and her fiance talking, talking, talking, in low tones like the rippling of a brook, have monopolized that part of the house. It seems to the parents after awhile that the long engagement is telling unfavorably on their daughter's health and spirits and they think it time that affairs reached a crisis, that they culminated in a wedding.

Agatha thinks so, too. She is beyond words annoyed with and weary of the situation. The most devoted pair of engaged lovers, in the course of several years, exhaust their topics of conversation. They are in danger of drifting into a state of morbid and unwholesome ennui. Were they married, a host of common, practical interests would draw them closer and give them a basis on which to build their house of joy. The management of the home, the cooking for two, the mending, the making, the identification of the husband and wife as one family in its front to the world, help to bind them into that union which is strong as life itself.

A long engagement, dragging slowly and interminably on, when there is no apparent reason for a delayed marriage, is a very trying experience to a girl. She knows that her friends discuss her and wonder why the wedding is deferred. She attends the weddings of other friends. She begins to be socially, pardon the slang, a back number. An engaged girl cannot compete in social intercourse with her friends who are still free. Very likely she has been preparing her store of linen, and there are piles of sheets and towels over which she lingers with that housewifely yearning, known to women when they are planning a new home. I knew one girl who waited eleven years, while her tardy lover continued his visits, never even faintly alluding to marriage. The memory of her girlish "yes" was growing remote, when her young sister announced her engagement, shyly adding: "Edwin wants to be married in three months. I don't see how I can be ready." "You might be ready if Edwin wanted you to marry him to-morrow," said the older woman. "You shall have my things," and the elaborate trousseau, as well as the beautiful stock of fine linen was forced upon the blushing bride-to-be. The first engagement was broken as it should have been long before.

Our English cousins allude to the loosely-managed betrothals that over here so often dissolve in mist, as "dangling." It would seem that "dangling" is a thing unworthy an honorable man.

Agatha's prospective mother-in-law, if she be a selfish woman, may be at the bottom of Tom's postponed marriage. Mothers sometimes hate the idea of parting with sons, and move heaven and earth to keep them single. A son who is fond of his mother, has, it may be, not the manhood to break her bonds. In proportion as he is a good son, he dreads hurting her feelings. If the mother is very tactful and a little unscrupulous, she may manage her son without his suspecting it, and in one way or another preserve her ascendancy over him, and keep "that girl" waiting an indefinite time.

To tell the plain truth, Agatha is in a very delicate and difficult position. She cannot take the initiative. No girl who respects herself can beg her lover to name the wedding day. This is his prerogative, not hers. He should beg, and she grant the favor of an early marriage. A man should be sure of his own mind, and purse, before becoming engaged. Once engaged, he should not be the one to defer and defer and defer the wedding day. If he does, the young woman may sever the bond. This is her privilege. But she cannot plead for a change of behaviour on his part. An unwilling bridegroom would be a shamefully insulting mate for any woman.

Should a man, as may happen, discover too late that he has made a mistake, that his love is on the wane, that instead of anticipation, foreboding is the mood and temper in which he regards his coming marriage, his only honorable course is to be candid with the girl he has sought. He would do her a great wrong if he married her, when his heart was full of reluctance. Few girls hesitate to release a lover who made this explanation, humiliating to him, and heart-breaking to the hearer, but frank and honest, and therefore worthy. The girl will recover from her heartache. The man steps forth with dignity. There is no dignity in remaining in a false position.

Generally speaking, engaged couples should marry as soon as they can. The income may be a tiny one, but marvels can be wrought by good management, and there is endless fun and endless contentment, too, when young people who love one another, are in the midst of their early, hopeful years, living frugally and sharing the loaf and sup. Self-denials bind them as extravagant expenditure never can. Agatha means the world to Thomas. She is at his back. He braves everything for her, is a better business man, a better citizen on her account. A married pair are worth much more to the community than several couples of engaged lovers, dawdling and dreaming, and wasting their time in sentimental moonshine. If it is want of money that delays anybody's marriage, let him summon up courage, and go on. The money will come when it is deserved and most wanted.

I know well that this is not the advice of prudence, nor would prudent people indorse it without a protest. Yet again and again, I have seen young people marry on very small means and go on, steadily increasing their income until they reached a condition of ease. What constitutes a competence can be determined only by young people themselves. The essentials of a home are really very few, and people have before now kept house creditably in two or three rooms, and have had no need to be ashamed of the result of their joint endeavors. The fatal mistake is to begin on too large a scale. A girl never wishes this, if the man she loves is frank with her, and tells her precisely what he can afford, and with perfect openness asks her help in making ends meet.

HUMOR

HER CRIME.

Mrs. Empson's Stolen Book and How She Adjusted Matters.

"It is the easiest thing in the world," said Mrs. Empson, "to be a shoplifter. I turned one myself today. I stole a book called 'Happy Thoughts For Happy People.' I didn't mean to steal it. I picked it up by mistake and walked away with it. I didn't know I had it until I got almost home."

"In that case," said Empson, "I suppose you will take it back."

"Y-y-yes, I suppose so. The only difficulty about that is that I don't know where to take it. I don't know where I got it. I was in the book department of half a dozen stores and at every counter I looked at a 'Happy Thoughts' book. I don't know which place it was that I really turned thief."

"It was probably the last place you were in," suggested Empson. "At any rate, I advise you to go there and explain your mistake. They will probably know their own goods."

Mrs. Empson promised to attend to the restoration of purloined literature early the following morning. Evidently his wife's misdemeanor weighed heavily on Mr. Empson's mind, for his first question that night was about the book.

"Did you take it back?" he asked.

"Yes."

"Belonged where I thought it did, I suppose?"

"Yes—that is, the floorwalker thought it was theirs."

"That's good," said Empson. "I'm glad you've got it settled. I've worried about the matter all day. I see you made good by buying more stuff as well as returning the book. Bought this there, didn't you?"

Empson took a short length of lace from the table and dangled it before his wife's eyes.

"Yes," she said. "You see, it was awfully hard to explain, the floorwalker seemed so cross. I was afraid he wouldn't understand and would have me arrested or something, so when he said the book was theirs"—

She looked at Empson appealingly.

"Yes," he said, "and then"—

"Why, then, I didn't have the courage to confess that I had stolen the book. I pretended that I wanted to make an exchange, so he gave me a credit check for 98 cents, and I bought this lace with that."—New York Press.

YOUR CLOTHES.

Those That Should Be Bought to Last and Those That Shouldn't.

It's a mistake to buy everything with an eye to its enduring qualities even if you've an extremely limited pocketbook. It depends entirely for what purpose you choose your gown whether or not it should last.

A fairly safe rule to go by is that the staple sort of clothes, made in conservative ways, should be bought with a very distinct idea of "long life" and that evening gowns, especially if you're a good deal of a butterfly, should be got with almost the sole idea of effect.

We've all known the unpleasant sensation of putting too much money in a gown and then feeling that we must "get the wear out of it" even though it be a conspicuous style or soils at its first wearing. And the woman with little money is the one who suffers most of all in such an experience.

Evening gowns oughtn't to last too long; business and street clothes can't—always supposing it's the woman with the small purse who is considering the purchase. And street clothes should be of quiet, rather neutral colors—the kind "you don't get known by," as one woman put it.

Afternoon gowns get hard wear—as hard as the street clothes in reality—so they should naturally be made of materials that can hold their own and yet not stretch nor shrink nor get out of shape. They must be got to last, for the "set" and the "hang" must last as long as the gown.

And furs! The woman who can't afford to have changes made in the style of her fur coat or her neck piece and muff doesn't want to put all her money in an extreme, unusual fur piece, which by its very individuality is likely to "go out" in a short time, but should stick to the most conservative furs, made up in the most conservative ways.

After all, conservatism, not cost, is the greatest help in eking out a small clothes allowance, and conservatism consists as much in having an inexpensive little gown that is put on and worn out soon and replaced as in getting things that last overlong.—Philadelphia North American.

DRAPING A LIBRARY WINDOW.

Wavy Hair.

Of very great assistance in attaining that desirable waviness which nature has denied some heads of hair is tar water. The deprived ones may apply this liquid once a day. It cannot hurt the hair, for it is a tonic as well as a sure wave producer. To make it get from the druggist a five cent box of white pine tar; pour the contents into a bottle (a quart size) of hot water; let stand until cold. The tar will cling to the bottom of the bottle. Do not shake, as you will get the full substance and strength of the tar without shaking. Just use the water from the tar. To use put a little in a small vessel and rub into the scalp of the head and on the hair with a brush. One a little larger than a toothbrush will do. While the hair is wet push it forward and press it with the fingers. When the water is all used replace with hot water again. The same tar should last for three months, with renewals of water when necessary.

Letter Writing.

Should anybody ask me what general accomplishment the present day women lacked I would not need a moment for consideration. I stand ready with my answer—the art of letter writing. There are undoubtedly many women who can write interesting letters, with well expressed thoughts and correct spelling, but I fancy you would be surprised at the smallness of their number. Wealthy women hire secretaries to conceal their deficiencies in this direction when they have them, and women whose business requires much correspondence rely upon the typewriter and its presiding genius.—Minneapolis Tribune.

White Chiffon.

White chiffon washes perfectly, but a better way to clean it is by a dry method. Use two parts of finely powdered starch to one part of powdered borax. Spread the chiffon on a clean muslin and rub the mixture well into it. Shake this out and sprinkle liberally with clean flour and borax. Cover and leave overnight. The next day brush and shake every particle of powder from the chiffon. It should be found quite spotless.

MAY SEE A FLARE-UP.

(Ottawa Citizen.)

The leader of the Opposition, Mr. R. L. Borden, sits for Carleton County, certain of whose influential residents are busy declaring by resolution against the education clauses of the autonomy bills. Sir Wilfrid Laurier says that Mr. Borden is not quite certain where he will plant his batteries. Mr. Borden replies that at least they will not be planted within the lines of Torres Vedras. Now Carleton County is no Torres Vedras so far as the School question is concerned, so that one day soon we may see a real flare-up in the House.

SUPERIOR MERIT.

Remarkable Curative Properties of a Remedy for Indigestion and Stomach Weakness.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, a preparation for the cure of dyspepsia and the various forms of indigestion and stomach trouble, owes its great success as a cure for these troubles to the fact that it is prepared for disease and weakness of the stomach and digestive organs only, and is not recommended or advised for any other disease.

It is not a cure-all, but for any stomach trouble it is undoubtedly the safest, most sensible remedy that can be advised with the prospect of a permanent cure. It is prepared in tablet form, pleasant to taste, composed of vegetable and fruit essences, pure pepsin and Golden Seal, every one of which act effectively in digesting the food eaten, thereby resting and invigorating the weak stomach; rest is nature's cure for any disease, but you cannot rest the stomach unless you put into it something that will do its work or assist inthe digestion of food.

That is exactly what Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets do, one grain of the digestive principle contained in them will digest 3,000 grains of meat, eggs or similar wholesome foods, the ywill digest the food whether the stomach is in working order or not, thereby nourishing the body and resting the stomach at the same time, and REST and NOURISHMENT is nature's cure for any weakness.

In persons run down in flesh and appetite these tablets build up the strength and increase flesh, because they digest flesh-forming food which the weak stomach cannot do, they increase the flow of gastric juice and prevent fermentation, acidity and sour watery risings.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets can be found at all drug stores at 50 cents per package.

HONEST BOX OF APPLES

Mr. Fisher's Resolution For Uniformity of Size Passes.

Only Change Made That These Boxes Shall Only Be Required for the Export Trade—Little Hostile Criticism on Principle, But Considerable Difference as to Details—Anti-Separate School Petitions Presented.

Ottawa, March 14.—(Special)—A large number of petitions protesting against saddling the new provinces of the northwest with a separate school system were presented at the opening of of the house to-day.

Mr. Fisher varied the performance by presenting two petitions praying that in granting autonomy to the northwest territories a clause should be inserted prohibiting the maunfacture, importation and sale of liquor in the new provinces.

The house went into committee on Mr. Fraser's resolution providing for uniformity in size of boxes in which apples are packed for export trade.

Mr. Fisher added some explanations of the bill. The only change which has been made in the resolution is one providing that uniformity in the size of boxes shall be required only for the export trade. Mr. Fisher said many apple growers were in favor of uniform boxes for the internal as well as the export trade, but it had been decided to take one step at a time.

There was very little hostile criticism of the general principle of the resolution, but objection was taken to some of its details.

An Honest Bushel.

R. L. Borden submitted for the consideration of the minister a letter, in which the suggestion was made that the size of the box should be 20x12x9 1-4, which would give a box of 2220 cubic inches. The imperial bushel contained 2,218 inches, and the box proposed would allow for paper and still give our British customers an honest British bushel.

The minister of agriculture said the box proposed in the bill was a compromise arrived at for the sake of giving dimensions without fractions, and was only 18 inches short of the imperial bushel.

The resolution was then adopted and the bill founded upon it introduced and read a first time.

After recess, the vote of $388,000 for the St. Lawrence ship channel was discussed in supply and Mr. Prefontaine explained the contemplated improvements, including the construction of a supply boat at a cost of $160,000, to be used in winter as an ice breaker. He claimed that the ice-breaker Montcalm had been successful in breaking the ice jam above Quebec, so that navigation would be open three weeks earlier in the spring.

The item, after debate, was passed, and the house adjourned at 11 o'clock.

A Field Day.

There will probably be a field day today in the House on the Northwest autonomy bills. The leader of the opposition has given notice to the Government that on the motion to go into supply, he will bring up the subject of the open letter of Premier Haultain to Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Suggested Phone Legislation.

Sir William Mulock gave notice that he will move the following resolution:

"That a select committee, composed of Messrs. Burrows, Smith of Nanaimo, Johnston of Cape Breton, Grant, Demers of St. John-Iberville, W. F. Maclean, Sir William Mulock, Boyce and Roche of Marquette, be appointed to enquire into and report regarding the various public telephone systems in operation in Canada and elsewhere, as the committee shall determine, and to consider and report what changes, if any, are advisable in respect of the methods at present in force for furnishing telephone service to the public, such committee to have power to send for persons and papers, to examine persons under oath, and to engage stenographers, clerical and other assistance."

From all appearance the unfortunate man had placed the stock of the gun on the ground and the muzzle against his body, and, leaning over, had pulled the trigger. Mr. Blute was a man about 55 years of age, and had not been feeling well for some time.

It is worse than madness to neglect a cough, or cold which is easily subdued if taken in time but becomes, when left to itself, the forerunner of consumption and premature death. Inflammation, when it attacks the delicate tissue of the lungs and bronchial tubes, travels with perilous rapidity; then do not delay, get a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, the medicine that grasps this formidable foe of the human body, and drives it from the system. This medicine promotes a free and easy expectoration, subdues the cough, heals the diseased parts, and exerts a most wonderful influence in curing consumption, and other diseases of the throat and lungs. If parents wish to save the lives of their children, and themselves from much anxiety, trouble and expense, let them procure a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, and whenever a child has taken cold, has a cough or hoarseness, give the Syrup according to directions.

What is that which is lengthened by being cut at both ends? Answer—A ditch.

A Liniment for the Logger.—Loggers lead a life which exposes them to many perils. Wounds, cuts and bruises cannot be altogether avoided in preparing timber for the drive and in river work, where wet and cold combined are of daily experience Coughs and colds and muscular pains cannot but ensue. Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil, when applied to the injured or administered to the ailing, works wonders.

What black thing enlightens the world? Answer—Ink.

Signals of Danger.—Have you lost your appetite? Have you a coated tongue? Have you an unpleasant taste in the mouth? Does your head ache and have you dizziness? If so, your stomach is out of order and you need medicine. But you do not like medicine. He that prefers sickness to medicine must suffer, but under the circumstances the wise man would procure a box of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills and speedily get himself in health, and strive to keep so.

Name something with two heads and one body. Answer—A barrel.

The Most Popular Pill.—The pill is the most popular of all forms of medicine, and of pills the most popular are Parmelee's Vegetable Pills, because they do what it is asserted they can do, and are not put forward on any fictitious claims to excellence. They are compact and portable, and they are easily taken, they do not nauseate nor gripe, and they give relief in the most stubborn cases.

Why is bread like the sun? Answer—Because it rises from the yeast.

Many inherit weak lungs, and as disease usually assails the weakest point, these persons are continually exposed to attacks of cold and pulmonary disturbances. The speedy use of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup will be found a preventive and a protection, strengthening the organs so that they are not so liable to derangement from exposure or abrupt atmospheric changes. Bickle's Syrup is cheap and good.

If you were to ride a donkey what fruit would you resemble? Answer—A pair.

Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator is pleasant to take; sure and effectual in destroying worms. Many have tried it with best results.

What coat is finished without buttons and put on wet? Answer—A coat of paint.

Why go limping and whining about your corns when a 25 cent bottle of Holloway's Corn Cure will remove them? Give it a trial and you will not regret it.

Author of "The Verdict of the Heart," "A Heritage of Hate," "Nell of Shorne Mills," "Paid For," "A Modern Juliet," Etc.

Mannering looked from one to the other, first with a kind of suspicion, then blankly, and he sighed, the sigh of a man who has been living to himself for months.

"Adventures? I haven't had any. Ah, yes; I was wrecked. The Alpina lost her course, struck and went down."

"Good Lord! And you—you were picked up?" exclaimed Letchford.

Mannering was silent for a moment then he said, as if mechanically, "Yes; I was picked up!"

"But you suffered a great deal? I can see that you did. You—you look the shadow of your former self, Vane! You must have had a bad time!"

"Yes—I suffered," assented Mannering, staring at the table-cloth and fingering his fruit-knife. "Oh, yes—I suffered!"

"And was no one else saved?" asked Letchford.

"No—no one else was saved. She—" His voice died away, and his head sank on his bosom.

Lady Letchford leant forward, all tender pity and anxiety; but Letchford rose and got some cigars.

"Smoke, old man," he said. "Blanche doesn't mind; in fact, she likes it."

Mannering took the cigar as eagerly as he had taken the one offered him in the cab; and as he smoked his face cleared of some of its gloom.

"And—and so you came to London?" said Letchford with seeming casualness. "And have you seen anyone, any of your people, the Lesborough lawyer, anyone?"

"No, no one," said Mannering.

"That's—that's strange, and—and it's a pity!" murmured Letchford.

Mannering raised his eyes. "Why? Why should I see them? I didn't want money. I have some still left." He put his hand in his pocket and took out a few, a very few, shillings.

Letchford stifled an exclamation.

"My dear fellow, my dear Vane! Do you mean to say that you have been wandering about London in poverty, in—in this condition; and that you didn't know—oh, good Lord, help me, Blanche!"

Her face flushed as she leant forward and put her white hand on Mannering's hard but shapely one.

"Mr. Mannering, Charlie is trying to tell you something, to break something to you; and he wants me to help him. And I don't know how!"—piteously—"but I must try, I must try, and you—you must be patient with me."

Mannering looked at her with scant interest, and with a sigh she went on:

"You have not been down to Lesborough?"

Mannering shook his head.

"No; why should I?"

"I know that you and your uncle, Lord Lesborough, were not—good friends," she said, "but I thought you might have gone down, might have heard—"

Mannering shook his head again

"No. I've not heard anything. What—is it?"

Letchford rose and went to Mannering's side and laid a hand, at once soothing and warning, upon his shoulder.

"It's—it's bad news, Vance," he said, gravely. "Pull yourself together. The earl's dead!"

Mannering nodded and his lips twitched.

"I'm sorry," he said in his deep, hollow voice. "I—I—liked the old man, though we never got on together. He thought me too independent—I wouldn't accept his money. Poor old fellow! He was a good sort! Dead! And so Augustus is the Earl of Lesborough!"

Letchford drew a long breath, shrugged his shoulders and looked helplessly towards his wife, and of course she came to his relief.

"There is still—worse news, Mr. Mannering," she said in her sweet, gentle voice. "Lord Augustus and his boy—you remember him, he was at Eton? You were fond of him."

Mannering nodded. "Yes; nice boy, Harry. The only one of the family I cared for," he said, thoughtfully.

"—Were going down to the funeral. There—there—"

"There was an accident to the train," Letchford took up the burden of the story as her voice faltered and broke. "A bad accident. Fifteen killed. Amongst 'em was—was Augustus and his boy—"

Mannering looked up and from one to the other.

"Killed! The boy killed! I'm—I'm sorry!" His voice grew hoarse. "A nice boy; we were great friends! Killed!"

The husband and wife exchanged glances and Letchford's hand closed more firmly on Mannering's shoulder.

"Yes, it's bad, shocking bad!" he said, slowly and impressively. "And—and it alters things for you, old man, doesn't it!"

Mannering looked round at him.

"Alters things? How?"

"Good heavens, don't you see, don't you understand!" said Letchford. "The old earl is dead, and Augustus, and the poor boy, and so—and so—"

"Mr. Mannering, you are the Earl of Lesborough," said Lady Blanche in a low voice.

Mannering looked from one to the other dully, then he began to tremble, and presently his head was bowed in his hands, and his great, gaunt frame was shaken by tearless sobs.

CHAPTER IX.

The storm did not break upon Nina upon her raft until the favoring wind had carried her far out to sea; and it may safely be said that she did not realize the rash nature of her enterprise until the first flash of lightning and the first clap of thunder; for, like most of her sex, she had acted on the impulse of the moment, and without counting the cost.

But as the sky grew inky black and broken only by the weird streaks of lightning, terror and remorse assailed her in equal proportions; terror on her own account, remorse on Mannering's; for here she was on the raging sea, and she had left him to the awful solitude of the island.

She had picked up enough of seamanship to lower her sail, and she lay, or rather crouched, on the raft, drawing the sail over her to afford her partial protection from the rain and the wind. Presently she felt rather than saw that the raft was becoming disintegrated, and, rising to her knees, she reached for the sheet, the rope attached to the sail, and, winding it round her, fastened it to a couple of the poles of which the raft was composed. She did this mechanically, and after, half unconsciously, asking herself what Mannering would do if he were in her plight. It was singular how, even in this moment of her solitude and extremity, she relied upon him.

It was well that she had taken this precaution, for, the storm growing more furious, the raft soon after broke up and she found herself floating on the smaller portion. The howling of the wind, the dull roar of the sea deafened, and the salt and spume of the waves blinded her, and she closed her eyes and prepared for death; but instead of the death which she would have welcomed there fell upon her a kind of swoon, the stupor of exhaustion and terror.

The storm fell as suddenly as it had arisen, and she opened her eyes to see the sun shining through a thick mist. The sea was quite calm now and the logs to which she was tied floated almost motionlessly. She was parched with a thirst which made hunger of no account, and she knew, in a subtle fashion, that her brain was giving way. Just as Mannering had done, she found herself talking and holding conversations with him; she went through the whole of the marriage ceremony with him, re-enacted the scenes in the saloon, lived over again the life in the island. Then she fell into a profound unconsciousness, but after a time she came to again, and found that she was still floating in this dream-like mist. Her whole past life seemed like a dream. Was this wide sea, the island, her marriage, only a dream?

How long she floated on the calm mill-pond of a sea she did not know, but presently the mist was penetrated by the sound of music. With closed eyes she listened. Was she dead, and was this the music of the heavenly choir? If so, she was at rest in the bourne from whence no traveler returns. But Mannering, her husband—he was still on his desolate island. Oh, how could she have left him!

The music grew louder and more distinct, and it seemed to her more earthly; she heard a voice, a deep, stentorian voice, call: "Man overboard! Stop her!" Then her senses slipped from her slowly, easily, and when they returned and she opened her eyes again they met the pitying ones of a young girl who bent over her with anxiety eloquent in every curve of her body.

"Are you better? Can you understand? Oh, I hope you have come to!" said the voice belonging to the body.

"I—I am better," said Nina; and, as if it were a formula, she asked, "Where am I?"

"On board the Island Queen—one of the Weldon Line, you know," replied the voice.

Nina did not know, but she sighed and turned her head away.

"We found you tied to a part of a raft," said the voice, which sounded nearer now, "and we are all so anxious about you! But you mustn't try to talk. The doctor said that if you came to I was to keep you quiet."

"Who—who are you?" asked Nina, but without any great display of interest.

"Polly Bainford," replied the voice. "It was I who first saw you. I was leaning over the taffrail, or whatever they call it. But there! I shall have the doctor on me if I talk to you. Try to go to sleep."

Nina turned over and endeavored to obey, and presently fell into a deep sleep.

When she woke the girl, Polly Bainford, was still sitting by her side, and she nodded approvingly and encouragingly.

"That's right! Why, what a sleep you've had! Eighteen hours by the clock. And you look so much better! Hush! Here comes the doctor!"

The ship's doctor, a young man, came in rather shyly and felt her pulse.

"You are much better," he said; then he started as Nina thrust his hand aside and, sitting up, exclaimed:

"The island! Where is it? I want to go back! You must find it! He is there! You must rescue him, take him away. I—I left him—alone, all alone!"

"Hush!" murmured the doctor; but as she still continued to rave he went off for the captain. The captain had five daughters of his own, and he stood beside Nina's berth and looked down at her fever-flushed face with paternal pity and tenderness.

"What is it my dear young lady?" he asked, soothingly.

"The island!" panted Nina. "It is close by; you can find it! He is there alone—in solitude—quite alone! In pity, I implore you, I beg of you to go back and bring him away! I—I—left him. I was foolish—mad—"

The captain patted her hand and glanced at the doctor.

"What island?" he asked, gently.

"I don't know! How should I know?" she murmured. "It has no name. We were wrecked—"

"My poor girl, we picked you up on the open sea," said the captain, pityingly. "And that's days and days ago. We can't put back—"

"Leave her to me," broke in the doctor. "She's raving. Very probably there is nothing in it—no island whatever. Leave her to me."

Nina relapsed into delirium and Polly Bainford and he nursed and attended her. It was a week before she recovered full consciousness, and by that time the vessel was nearing England.

Nina, when she came back to her senses, lay with closed eyes and aching heart, listening to the wash of the waves against the ship, mingled with the sounds of music and singing. They reminded her of the sounds she had heard as she tossed on a portion of the raft.

"What are they singing? What is the music?" were almost her first words.

Polly smoothed the bed clothes.

"It's the company—Mr. Harcourt's company," she replied. "They're singing one of the songs of our last success, 'My Lady's Pride.' Does it disturb you? I'll get them to stop. I'm sure they will, for they are most anxious about you; and they're all a good sort."

"No, no," said Nina. "Don't stop them. And are you one of them?"

"Yes," said Polly. "I'm one of the company. But I'm not a principal. I've only got a small part—what's called a 'Singing Chambermaid.'"

Nina looked at her uncomprehendingly, and Polly laughed.

"Oh, it means that I'm only small potatoes. You see, I haven't much of a voice, and so I take a back seat. We've been touring in Australia and we're going to do the provinces—and London—if we've luck."

"I see," said Nina, with a sigh that was a little envious; for this girl with the bright eyes and the mobile lips had her future marked out for her, while she, Nina, was adrift on the world, homeless and friendless. She closed her eyes, Polly stole away, and Nina pondered deeply. In her delirium she had implored the captain to turn from his course and search for the island. It had been a hopeless prayer then; it was still more hopeless now. Besides, even if she could achieve the impossible and persuade them to turn back, they might not be able to find this particular island among the group, and if they did, Mannering would probably have left. He had the canoe, and she knew him too well to think he would remain there in solitude. Then, again, there was their mutual promise. She had pledged herself to keep their marriage secret, and how could she do so if she told them about the island?

The captain and the doctor visited her a little later, and when the captain rallied her on "her island" she colored, bit her lip and turned her head aside, and she heard him say to the doctor as they left the cabin:

"I told you so! Just a fancy on her part. People talk like that when they're in her state. She must have been wrecked from the Alpina that's missing."

The doctor nodded assentingly.

"Better let her alone, and say no more about it—uless she does," he said, sagely; and, meeting Polly on deck, he cautioned her to refrain from questioning the patient.

"As if I should!" retorted Polly, with a toss of her pretty head.

But she had to ask one question, and she asked it the next time she went to the cabin.

"Don't think I want to bother you with questions, or that I'm a bit curious, dear," she said, "but I—I don't know what to call you."

Nina hesitated a moment and a blush rose to her face, which Polly, looking straight before her, affected not to see. Nina thought: "If I give my real name it must be Nina Mannering—but I don't know whether I am properly married, and there is my promise." She was almost as reluctant to give her maiden name, and, on the spur of the moment, she replied:

"My name is Decima Wood." It was one belonging to an ancestor on her mother's side.

"It's a very pretty name, almost as pretty as its owner," remarked Polly, with a brisk nod. "And now Miss Wood, you've got to get well and strong and come up on deck as soon as ever you can. I can see you have had a bad time—"

Nina looked at her a little piteously. "Ah, if you knew!" she breathed.

"But I don't know, and I don't want to know, unless you want to tell me"—Nina drew a long sigh—"and I see you don't. I've undertaken to ask no questions, dear, and I'm sure you won't be bothered by any one else; so you needn't look so anxious and unhappy."

In a few days Nina was strong enough to leave the cabin, and the doctor and Polly helped her on deck and ensconced her in one of the long deck chairs in a corner warmed by the sun and sheltered from the wind.

The vessel was crowded, and her appearance created a great deal of interest and curiosity; but the passengers with the consideration which is one of the few good things for which we have to bless the modern civilization, did not intrude upon her, but left her alone in her nook to look on dreamily at the life on board a ship.

Every now and then as she watched the promenaders, the gay and noisy groups playing at deck quoits and similar games, her hand stole to her bosom, in which still lay hidden the oilskin pocket containing Fleming's diary and her marriage "lines," as if she were trying to realize by actual touch the reality of the past.

All day the theatrical company made the ship gay by laughter and snatches of song, and in the evening there were informal concerts in the vast saloon, to a corner of which Nina sometimes stole to listen and look on unobserved, as she listened and looked on from the nook on deck which had tacitly been reserved for her.

Sometimes the captain approached and spoke to her, or one of the passengers offered the stereotyped courtesies, but Nina seemed to shrink from them all, save Polly, and, recognizing her reticence and reserve, they gradually ceased to address her.

But they were nearing England, the voyage was drawing to a close, and on the last evening the captain pulled up beside her and in his gruff voice, which his kindly smile fully discounted, he said:

"We shall be in port to-morrow, Miss Wood. Can I wire to your people to meet you? You are in my charge, you know."

Nina colored and looked down for a moment; then she raised her eyes bravely.

"No, thank you," she said; "I—I will not trouble you."

The captain tried not to look surprised, and Nina hurried on:

"My passage—I must pay for that. I—I ought to have spoken of it before."

The captain laughed and shook his head.

"Never mind the passage money, my dear young lady. The Weldon Line hasn't dropped down to asking fare from a castaway. Why, we're only too proud to have picked you up and carried you with us!"

Nina drew a sigh of gratitude and relief, for she knew that her slender purse—the small stock of money which she had brought with her from the island—would have been exhausted by the heavy fare.

The captain hung about for a moment or two, shuffling from one leg to the other awkwardly; then he said, as gruffly and with as tender a smile as before:

"If—if there's any difficult about your people meeting you, Miss Wood, I'm sure my wife would be glad if you'd come home to us. I've got five girls of my own, and you wouldn't feel lonely."

But Nina pictured those five girls plying her with friendly, sympathetic questions, and, with moist eyes, thanked him and declined the offer.

"My plans are all made out," she said.

The next morning Polly came and sat down beside her.

"I suppose the captain will wire to your people to meet you," she said; "but if anything happens, if they don't turn up in time, how would you like to come home with me? I've got diggings in Chelsea. They're quite the 'humble cot' kind of thing, far too small and modest for a swell like you, Miss Wood—'

Nina smiled at her and laid her hand—the fever had left it thin and white, very different to the brown "paw" of the island—on Polly's arm affectionately and gratefully.

"I'm not by any means a swell, Polly," she said. "I am very poor—"

"A great many swells are," interrupted Polly, with a worldly-wise nod of her curly head.

"And I shall have to work for my living; but"—repeating the words with which she had declined the captain's offer—"my plans are all made out, and—"

"All right!" broke in Polly, with a nod of comprehension. "I didn't mean to intrude. Anyway, here's my address, and if you can you'll look me up, won't you? I rather think Harcourt intends taking a London theatre; if so, I shall be settled there"—she put a card in Nina's hand—"for some time; and if I go into the country with the company the landlady will give you my address."

Nina glanced at the card, and, trying to express her thanks, put it in her pocket.

"And now can I help you to pack—" She stopped awkwardly, as Nina, with a laugh and a blush, shook her head.

"You forget that I haven't anything—why, even this dress and other things are yours! I will send them to you when—when I get some others."

"That's all right," said Polly. "But I'd rather you come yourself then send the things, for—well, I've got fond of you, you see, if you don't mind my saying so."

The last day of the voyage was one of bustle and confusion, lightened by the electric gaiety of the company of actors, who sang from morn to night, and got up another charity concert, in which they performed with an enthusiasm far and away beyond that which they would have displayed on the ordinary and professional stage.

When the vessel glided slowly into port Nina said her grateful good-bye to the captain and Polly and shook hands with some of the people who had been kind to her, and in the confusion slipped away.

With the clothes she stood up in—and they were mostly Polly's—and a small handbag, also Polly's, she found herself in the whirl of the crowded thoroughfare. She had remembered a cheap and quiet hotel in one of the streets in the Strand—Durham Street—at which she and her father had stayed many years ago, and she went there in a cab, and was fortunate enough to obtain a room. It was a small one, near the roof, and she sat down on the bed and

A SCOTCH MOTHER.

How Her Last Words to Her Emigrant Boy Produced a Citizen Canada Is Proud Of.

"Be a brave laddie."

As she said it she placed her arm around his neck and kissed him. Donald was going away. He had never been far from home before, but he had heard of Canada and her great rivers, her great lakes, her great prairies, and her greater possibilites. He had dreamed of the land beyond the sea in his early morning hours; he had dreamed of it before sleep came and often in the stillness of the night, and in the quiet of the night he sat thinking of the new land, and Scotland seemed small and narrow. And now he was on the threshold to leave.

"Be a brave laddie." When she said it Donald noticed a tear in her eyes and felt a dimness in his own. He watched her as she stood in the doorway, for the road was clear; he watched her till the smile was lost, till the face grew indistinct, till the waving arm was discernible no longer, till the figure left and the door was closed.

Life was before him. He was free; he was his own master; he could do as he pleased.

A day later Donald was in London, that maelstrom of humanity, waiting for the boat to sail for America, and in that little Scottish home, in the quiet of her room, a mother prayed.

"Lord, keep my laddie safe."

And Don, was lonely in this great city, this pulse of the world; he saw much to tempt; he saw much to lead; but over its roar and din he was conscions of the words: "Be a brave laddie," and took heart again.

Two days later he stood on the deck of the vessel and watched those who were left behind as they waved goodbye to the ones they loved. But no eye searched him out, no handkerchief fluttered for him; he was alone in the world, and the world seemed wider than he had thought.

Donald watched the home land fade, watched it disappear into space, even as his mother disappeared in the doorway of his cottage home.

Donald is older now, his face is bearded and his voice is firm and his action resolute.

He found it hard when he came to Canada—he found it difficult, he found that even in this land there were 20 men willing for one who was needed and capable.

He often became discouraged, but the voice of his mother was stronger than the discouragement. He was often tempted bitterly, but the same voice was stronger than the temptation, and if he fell, it bid him rise again, for he heard the words, "Be a brave laddie," and often fancied that he felt the imprint of that kiss and that gentle pressure of her arm about his neck.

He felt that he was held. He did not know how or why, but could he have visited the little home, could he have listened at the door of her bedroom, he would have heard the words: "Lord, keep my laddie safe."

She is dead now, but Donald lives, a prosperous and respected citizen of this Canada of ours, and his children wonder that when sometimes the old home is mentioned his voice becomes soft and his eyes moist and his head is turned away.

She is dead now, but Donald is kept by the Power Invisible.—Charles F. Raymond, in Toronto Star.

Cave Temples of India.

Among the interesting sights of that land of mystery, Hindoostan, are the Karle Caves of India, artificial temples of worship, which were cut out of the solid rock a century before the Christian era, it is claimed. These wonderful artificial caves are found in the mountain region of the seacoast, 32 miles from Poona, a few hours' railway travel from the City of Bombay. It is a most picturesque region. The Western Ghats (clifflike mountains) form the great sea wall of the Bombay Presidency, leaving only a narrow strip of land between their soaring heights and the sea.

In many places they rise in magnificent precipices and headlands, looking at a distance like a series of colossal landing stairs and visible afar from the ocean. In many places these spectral shapes rise abruptly from the shore to an altitude of three thousand or four thousand feet, proudly capped at intervals by peaks from seven thousand to eight thousand feet high. In the parklike plateaus encircled and often enclosed by these mighty upheavals are occasional clusters of hills and miniature mountains of solid rock. For ages nature has been carving them into a thousand fantastic shapes.

It is among these Titanic formations that explorers have discovered the gigantic temple caves of the ancient worshippers of Buddha.

Why the ancient builders constructed their ancient temples in the solid rock of the mountains is not explained, except that they were supposed to be more lasting than the Pyramids of Egypt or the other great temples of India built in the ordinary fashion.

It is certain that there was no lack of material and no bad quarries to interfere with the supply of stone for the great work. Neither lime, mortar nor hodcarriers were required. Whether the temples were blasted or simply chiselled from the mountainside there are no records to show.

The Original Mrs. Grundy.

A writer tells of the origin of Mrs. Grundy and says that "What will Mrs. Grundy say?" occurs in Morton's comedy "Speed the Plow," written in 1789. One of the characters, Farmer Ashfield, growing weary of constant references to Mrs. Grundy, a character in the play, by his good wife, suddenly turns upon her with:

"Be quiet, will ye? Always dingdonging Dame Grundy into my ears. What will Mrs. Grundy say? What will Mrs. Grundy think?"

The phrase tickled the public ear at the time, and is still in fashion.

London Taking Out Its Tonsils.

In London tonsils are being removed wholesale from the parish schools. There shall be no more tonsilitis, as no more appendicitis, if surgery can prevent such unpleasant and unnecessary disturbances. Parents and guardians may be exercised in their minds as to the wisdom of depriving the race of its tonsils, but if human beings get along precisely as well without their tonsils why complain of this prevention, which is better than a pound of cured sore throat?

A DANCING DUEL.

Relays of Partners for a Twenty-Four Hour Waltz.

Mr. Helps, a young London dancing master, has accepted the challenge of a Liverpool professor of dancing to "dance to a finish," says The London Express.

A Frenchman at present holds the world's dancing record, having danced without a break for 18 consecutive hours, and the two competing dancing masters hope to establish an English record by dancing twice around the clock.

W. F. Hurndall, the well-known dancing instructor, has all the arrangements in hand for the extraordinary duel.

"The contest, provided the Liverpool challenger accepts the conditions, will begin at noon on March 6," says Mr. Hurndall.

"The time throughout will be sixty bars a minute, and the waltz will be the dance selected. The competitors will dance in an inner track in the ballroom, and dancing couples who come as spectators will dance in the outer ring to a band. Whenever the band stops an automatic piano will immediately begin to play.

"From noon on the 6th to the hour on the 7th when the dancers finish the competitors will be on the move. Relays of lady partners will be provided, and food and drink will be taken while dancing.

"Mr. Helps will train for the dance by taking long walks and by dancing. At first he will dance for half an hour without a break, and then the time will be increased by slow stages until he can dance for hours together."

A Carpet Factory Earl.

In taking over the business of the famous old Wilton carpet factory, which is threatened with ruin by foreign competition, the Earl of Pembroke is actuated more by public-spirited motives than by the desire to add to the big income he derives from his ancestral acres.

It was only after he had failed to induce some of the great London firms to come to the rescue that, with the aid of Lord Radnor and some other friends, he purchased the ancient factory, to the delight of the weavers, who have long regarded the family, which owns 40,000 acres in Wiltshire, as hereditary guardians of their industry.

The nobleman, however, is only following historic precedents. Something like 150 years ago, another Earl of Pembroke, the tenth of the name, saved the business from extinction in much the same fashion when it was beset with financial difficulties.

For more than three centuries the Wilton folk have made carpets. Now working in the factory are lineal descendants of some of the men whose names appear in a charter granted to the factory in 1700.

At the same time the Earl intends to run the factory on business lines, and little doubt is felt of his ability to make it pay. A younger brother, with apparently scant prospects of succeeding to the earldom, he sat for many years in the House of Commons, and familiarized himself with business matters. It was his talents in this direction which, on his accession to the title in 1895, led to his appointment as Lord Steward of the King's household, with the snug salary of $10,000 a year.

Miss Maude Lawrence.

The Marquis of Londonderry, President of the Board of Education, says The London Times, has appointed the Hon. Maude Lawrence to a newly-established post of Chief Woman Inspector under the Board of Education. Miss Lawrence is the youngest daughter of the first Lord Lawrence, Governor-General of India, who was Chairman of the first School Board for London. She was for many years chairman of a committee of managers under the London School Board, and was a member of the London School Board from 1899 to 1904, serving on the Committees for School Management, for Works, for Domestic Subjects, and for School Accommodation, and being Chairman of the Special Schools Sub-committee. In May, 1904, she was placed by the London County Council upon their Education Committee; and she is Vice-Chairman of their Special Schools Sub-committee and a member of two other subcommittees.

Miss Lawrence will direct a staff of women inspectors of special qualifications and varied experience, who will assist the board in dealing with many questions for the treatment of which they have hitherto been somewhat imperfectly equipped.

Burns as a Poet of Life.

The birthday anniversary of Robert Burns calls forth in some quarters the usual critical remarks as to Burns' true place in the ranks of the world's poets. Among other things, it is said that his view of life was defective. He sang of life as he knew it, and his view finds an echo wherever his verse is read, and that means in almost half of the civilized world. A "feature of nature" is what a critic of past years called the Ayrshire singer, and his very naturalness makes him great. Nature is the one great fact of the universe, and the pen of Burns speaks for man what man feels about nature and cannot himself express.

Verses which come to the mind in the everyday wear and tear of life as pat as the well-worn texts of the Bible or the aphorisms of popular folklore cannot be set down as second rate unless there are grades in truth, which is impossible. Burns' epigrams and full-fledged sentiments well up from the heart to the brain—are felt before they are spoken. If life is a normal and true manifestation of nature's forces, then Burns' view of it is not defective, since his utterance rings true to what the millions feel and think.

Cholly—D'you know, I'm sometimes inclined to think— Clara (encouragingly)—Why don't you do it, Cholly? It's not such a difficult thing if you really try.

Limit to Rights.

Even the free citizen of a free country may not have in all cases the right to do what he pleases with his own property.

Not So Enjoyable.

Friend—Your wedding breakfast was a delightful affair. Mr. Honeymoon (with a sigh)—Yes, but we've had others since.

DUBLIN JARVIES.

The Happy Go Lucky Hackmen of the Irish Metropolis.

The Dublin jarvies are not what you would call good whips. They drive, as unladylike people say, like the divil; they cut around corners featly enough and go slashing up heartbreaking hills, but nine out of ten of them drive with a loose rein. They talk to the fare, and the little horse runs on, doing the best he can and following his own dauntless will. I lay no fault upon the jarvy. The Irish horse shares Paddy's gragh for independence. Of him, too, it may be said that he serves without servility.

The jarvy—light hearted lad, be he young or old—gains in the run of the days an average of 6 shillings. The fares are jolly cheap. For a "set down" within the boundary the charge for two persons between 9 a. m. and 10 p. m. is only sixpence. By time the charges are one and six an hour, with an added sixpence for each succeeding hour. Still the jarvy does fairly well. Barney, who is no better than the others, took me to his home. It was in Spring Gardens, where there are rows upon rows of neat little red brick cottages, with gardens and stables. They rent at £20 a year. Owning his car as he does, Barney pays no car rent to any one, and if he drives Lawler's mare 'tis more for love than profit. Year in and year out he puts by a bit, for the "childer, God bless 'em!" are growing and will have need of education. In his smart little home, with his smart little wife, there are unluckier men than he.

"If 'twere not for the fightin'," says Mrs. O'Hea, "a better man than Barney never pulled a shirt over his head."

Barney, it seems, believes that animosities should be cultivated. Being a good man with his hands and blithe and gay in battle, he colors the week's end with riot.—Vance Thompson in Outing.

SEA GAZING IN BERMUDA.

Wonderful Life of Crystal Depths as Revealed to the Observer.

It was a little parrot fish that started out so briskly on this summer morning. Whether he was eager to keep an appointment or had been unexpectedly summoned to a distant part of his world one will never know, but one may be certain that the matter was of the greatest consequence so far as the little fish was concerned. Keeping his bright eyes fixed straight ahead, he passed a corner of the reef where the coral was incrusted with mollusks and sea urchins and where a pair of beautiful squirrel fish, deeply engrossed in sentimental affairs, turned to look after him wonderingly through their enormous eyes. Below in a deep pool a school of spotted trunkfish played heedlessly, while under a projecting plate of staghorn coral a huge grouper waited expectantly, but as the parrot fish, warned of his danger, turned quickly away he gave his attention to a pair of gray snappers—great, quiet, ghostly figures that seemed like two shadows drifting along far down through the green waters.

A few feet farther on and the hurrying parrot fish passed a tall sea fan, around which three dainty butterfly fish, clad brilliantly in yellow, were peering into each nook and corner in their search for small prey, while a sober cowfish, with his two conspicuous horns, looked on sedately. Suddenly the parrot fish turned sharply aside to avoid a spot where the reef was broken by jutting rocks covered with green ulva. Around this a school of bright little zebra striped sergeant majors were sporting, while just to the right an anglefish, whose blue body tipped with gold first attracted the attention of the mariners so many centuries ago, sailed from under a purple gorgonia with a disdainful air.—Metropolitan Magazine.

Flow of Spirits In Youth.

How unaccountable the flow of spirits in youth. You may throw sticks and dirt into the current and it will only rise the higher. Dam it up you may, but dry it up you may not, for you cannot reach its source. If you stop up this avenue or that, anon it will come gurgling out where you least expected and wash away all fixtures. Youth grasps at happiness as an inalienable right. The tear does no sooner gush than glisten. Who shall say when the tear that sprung of sorrow first sparkled with joy?—H. D. Thoreau in Atlantic.

The Rose and Its Thorns.

This is the old legend of how the rose came by its thorns: One day in paradise Cupid was flying over a garden of roses. Blossoming there was a beautiful pink rose. Cupid bent to kiss it when a bee hidden in the flower stung him on the lip. Crying with pain, Cupid fled to Venus, his mother, demanding vengeance. Venus, to pacify him, gave him a bow strung with captive bees and set the stem of the rose with stings torn from the poor bees. Thrse stings now are called thorns.

His Appearance Under Difficulties.

"Robbed by footpads, were you? It must have made you feel like 30 cents."

"Yes, and I'll bet I looked like 12 o'clock."

"How do you mean?"

"Hands up."

Corrected.

She—Oh, you men, with your proverbs! You say that knowledge is power, yet— He—Well, isn't it? She—Knogledge! No; it's the way you do your hair.

The object of art is to crystallize emotion into thought and then fix it in form.—Delsarte.

HAD BLOOD POISON 12 YEARS

The New Method Treatment Cured Him after Drugs, Mercury, Hot Springs, &c., all failed.

Wm. H. Patterson, of Saginaw, Mich., relates his experience: "I do not like notoriety and especially of this kind, but I feel I owe this much to Drs. K. & K. for the great good they have done me. I had a serious blood disease when 21 years of age. The skin and blood symptoms gradually developed. Pimples and ulcers formed, running sores broke out, hair became loose, pains in the bones and joints, dyspeptic stomach, foul breath, itchy skin, etc. It is needless for me to say I tried doctors. I grew to hate the looks of one. I visited Hot Springs twice for four months each time. It helped me temporarily, but in six months after returning home I was as bad as ever. Finally a Doctor friend of mine advised me to see Drs. Kennedy & Kergan. He said he had known of them for over 20 years, and as they made a specialty of these diseases and treated the worst cases by the hundred they ought to be expert in curing them. I was afraid of advertising doctors, but I took his advice. They agreed to treat me under a guarantee or no pay. I investigated their financial standing and found they were perfectly responsible, so I commenced the new method Treatment. The eruptions disappeared in two weeks, the bone pains in four weeks and in four months I was entirely cured. Yes, sir, I can recommend the New Method Treatment for Blood and Skin Diseases."

Wedding Bells.

A very pretty wedding took place in S. S. Peter and Paul's R.C. church, Rochester, N. Y., on Wednesday morning, March 1st, at 6.30 o'clock, when Miss Lilliian Genereau, formerly one of Belleville's most popular and estimable young ladies,' and Mr. Frank Gerstner, of that city, were united in the holy bonds of matrimony by the Rev. Father Scheid. A nuptial mass was celebrated. The bride looked very pretty in a travelling costume and white picture hat. The bridesmaid, Miss Minnie Webber, also looked quite pretty in similar attire. Mr. E. Gerstner, brother of the groom, was best man. After the ceremony the happy couple drove to the home of the bride's mother, 236 Caledonia avenue, where a sumptuous wedding breakfast was served. A number of invited guests of the near relatives of the contracting parties were present for the occasion. A reception was given at the home of the groom's parents on Wednesday evening, March 1st. The bride received many useful and costly presents showing the esteem in which she was held We wish them every success and a long and happy wedded life.—Com.

Hotel Quinte Sold.

As readers of The Intelligencer know, negotiations have for some time been going on looking to the sale of Hotel Quinte, as the company which owned it were willing to let it pass out of their hands. The sale was completed yesterday, the purchaser being the present lessee, Mr. J. V. Jenkins, and the purchase price somewhere between forty and forty-five thousand dollars. Under Mr. Jenkins' management the Quinte has become celebrated as probably the best hotel between Toronto and Montreal, and, as he will continue in the management, there is every reason to believe that the present high standard will be maintained, if not excelled.

Some Good Sense.

Toronto Globe: No one now doubts that the suicide Kennedy, who cheated the prison at Brantford, was the murderer of Irene Cole. From conviction on a capital charge he was saved by the perjury of a fellow-prisoner, who yielded to his persuasions and is now undergoing punishment for his crime. It is all well enough to make the perjurer pay the penalty, but why should the man who murdered the child get off scot free, simply because, according to a maxim of British jurisprudence, he cannot be found guilty of an offence of which he has once been acquitted? To change the maxim so as to make it forbid trying a man a second time on the same evidence would make it tolerable, but the conviction of Drummond for perjury proves that Kennedy on a second trial would have been promptly found guilty. This case goes far to make clear that it should be made possible to lay a new charge against a man and have him tried on it after he has been wrongly acquitted. In the light of what has taken place the main purpose intended to be served by juridical penalties may at any time be defeated. If an accused person, who is actually guilty, secures a favorable verdict from a bribed jury or by purchased testimony, he is in a position to defy society, and his trial instead of serving as a deterrent acts as an incitement to crime.

Cancer Treatment

For centuries, Cancer has been treated locally without regard to the fact that it is the result of blood conditions. The lump has been cut away, burned away or torn away by plaster; but all these methods of torture having invariably ended in failure, Cancer has cause to be spoken of as an incurable disease.

Cancer can be cured. Our Vegetable Cancer Cure has cured hundreds of cases and we have the evidence to show for it. Pleasant to take and can be used in the privacy of one's home. Send 6 cents for booklet "Cancer, its Cause and Cure."

TRUE BILL FOUND AGAINST ONLOW WYNNE—THE CIVIL CASES BEING HEARD.

TRUE BILL AGAINST WYNNE.

The Grand Jury yesterday afternoon had under consideration the matter of Onslow Wynne, who is in jail charged with wounding. The result was the presentment of a true bill, charging the accused with stabbing with intent.

Mr. Hellmuth, K. C., Crown prosecutor, stated that he would be prepared to proceed with the case, but Mr. Porter, who has been retained to defend the accused, said he was not ready, as the witnesses were not in attendance. He also intimated that it was a case which might be tried by the County Judge.

His Lordship said that this was a court for jail delivery and the accused was in jail.

The matter was left in abeyance for the time being.

CIVIL CASES.

Bryer vs. Farrow. — An action for damages. The jury were called and the case commenced yesterday afternoon. The plaintiff is a yeoman residing in Sidney Township and the defendant is an agent for musical instruments. Bryer alleges that he agreed to take from Farrow a piano, and for the payment of the same agreed to give notes at various times for the payment of the instrument. He charges that on the day that the first note fell due Farrow came to the house and took the piano away, when no one but some little children were in the house. The defence deny this, alleging that the note was overdue. Messrs. Porter & Carnew for plaintiff, and Mr. Morden for the defendant.

Lazier vs. Armstrong and Woods. —This is an action brought by Col. S. S. Lazier against H. G. Woods and C. B. Armstrong, the purchaser and assignee of the J. C. Woods estate, to recover rent, damages and possession of the premises in the west Robertson Block, on account of the forfeiture clause in the lease against an assignment in insolvency. The defence sets up that the assignee has served a notice under the Landlord and Tenant Act and requires the premises for the purpose of the remainder of the lease. Judgment reserved. Porter & Carnew for plaintiff; Gibbons & Harper, of London, and W. S. Morden, Belleville, for defendant.

Interest Increasing In Conspiracy Cases.

GRAND JURY CONSIDERING THE CHARGES TO-DAY — WILL RIELLY PLEAD GUILTY? — WHAT HE AND HIS LAWYER HAVE TO SAY — TRIALS WILL PROBABLY GO ON TO-MORROW IF GRAND JURY BRINGS IN TRUE BILL

It is an undoubted fact, since Judge McMahon's address to the Grand Jury yesterday afternoon, that certain people connected with the ballot-box cases in this city take a much more serious view of the matter than they did previously. The matter was looked at in a jocular light for a time, but it has apparently dawned upon the minds of a few deeply interested parties that the time to laugh has passed by. The law is very much in earnest and somebody is liable to "get hurted," as the coon said at the crap game.

The Grand Jury were to-day in deliberation over the conspiracy charges, and it is doubtful if their bills will have been brought in in time for the trial to proceed to-morrow morning, but it is altogether likely that, some time to-morrow, the conspiracy trials will be commenced. The prisoners will be tried separately, and in the following order:—

F. J. Rielly, defended by Mr. E. F. B. Johnston, of Toronto.

Ed. Ruttan, defended by Mr. O'Flynn and W. R. Riddell.

Sam Harryett, defended by Mr. E. F. B. Johnston.

J. E. Whalen, defended by Mr. O'Flynn.

WILL RIELLY PLEAD GUILTY?

It has been whispered around that Francis J. Rielly, who gave such clear and convincing evidence at the preliminary investigation, may plead guilty when arraigned on the charge of conspiracy, providing, of course, that the Grand Jury bring in a true bill against him. Mr. Rielly himself was said to be asking the advice of friends in the matter, and this morning a newspaper man "tackled" him and asked him if it were true that he intended to plead guilty. Mr. Rielly frankly admitted that he was considering the matter, but seemed to think that, by pleading guilty to the conspiracy charge he would be admitting that he realized the enormity of the offence when he agreed, at the solicitation of Shibley, to undertake certain things. Looking at the matter in this light, Mr. Rielly does not see how he can conscientiously plead guilty to the charge of conspiracy, for he still contends that it was only his friendship for Shibley which induced him to have anything to do with the case at all.

Asked if he would have anything new to tell this time, Rielly said: "You heard my last evidence, didn't you? Wasn't that pretty full?"

The questioner admitted that it was.

"Of course," said Rielly, "I was sick then, and may try, this time, to clear up some of the points which I may have left cloudy then."

The newspaper man also approached Mr. E. F. B. Johnston, the celebrated criminal lawyer, who has Rielly's case in hand.

"Will Rielly plead guilty?" said Mr. Johnston, in an offhand way, "why, what has he done already? Did you read his evidence at the preliminary investigation?"

And beyond this the astute lawyer declined to be quoted. He, however, left the inference on the questioner's mind that Rielly could not, and would not, attempt to deny his connection with the ballot-boxes, but would strenuously deny having any idea of being party to a conspiracy when he first took up the matter to oblige Shibley, as it is alleged he did.

A WITNESS FOR RIELLY.

Kingston Whig: H. C. Teepell, a Watertown, N. Y., lawyer, was in the city yesterday en route to Belleville, Ont., to give evidence in the Rielly-Shibley ballot-box case. It is said that his evidence will be in favor of Rielly.

True Bill Found Against F. J. Rielly.

At 3.20 this afternoon the Grand Jury took their places in Court and, in answer to a question by the Clerk of the Court, announced that they had found a true bill against F. J. Rielly on the charge of conspiracy.

The Crown Prosecutor then announced that he would at once communicate with Mr. E. F. B. Johnston, Rielly's lawyer, and endeavor to have the case proceeded with as soon as possible.

Mr. Justice MacMahon agreed with the proposed action of the Prosecuting Attorney, and intimated his desire that the trial of Rielly should be proceeded with at the opening of the court to-morrow morning. It was intimated that the Grand Jury could now proceed with consideration of the other conspiracy cases.

A Pleasant Event.

ADDRESS AND PRESENTATION TO MR. J. T. LUTON, M. A., BY HIS SUNDAY SCHOOL CLASS LAST NIGHT.

An additional illustration was given last night that the Bridge Street Methodist Church people in a practical way show their appreciation of those who serve them, when Mr. J. T. Luton, M. A., was made the recipient of a valuable gold watch in testimony of his zeal and marked success in conducting one of the large senior Sunday School classes, a class by the way, that has a history, for it was organized by the late Mrs. Nathan Jones in 1870. The officers and teachers and members of the Senior Department of the school who were absent yesterday evening were very few, and barring the depression caused by the fact that it was a gathering to say farewell, it was a pleasant affair. At an opportune time fifty-two of the members of the class of men that has been taught by Mr. Luton for six years, emerged from their own room and proceeded to the dais, and surrounding it requested Mr. Luton to meet them. Mr. Grant McClatchie then admirably read the following address:

To J. T. Luton, M.A.:

Dear Mr. Luton,—It has been with feelings of the deepest regret that we, the members of your Bible class of Bridge St. Methodist S. S., have learned of your decision to leave our city to engage in new and broader fields of labor.

We realize that words are entirely inadequate to express to you the keen sorrow which we feel on this occasion, but, as best we can, we desire to extend to you our heartfelt appreciation of your zeal and untiring devotion as our Bible teacher, and your uniform kindness and courtesy as a Christian gentleman. And we feel that we speak, not only for those who are members at the present time, but also for those who have been identified with the class in years gone by, whose hearts thrill and whose eyes grow dim as they think of the good times they have spent under your leadership, with the boys of Old Number Six. And, as they have gone out to battle with the difficulties and temptations of life, and have become scattered all over this continent, we know that the memory of your noble Christian example and of their associations with you, has strengthened and helped them in many a time of trial.

We therefore ask your acceptance of this watch, not for its intrinsic value, but as a slight token of our regard and esteem. Whenever you listen to its steady ticking may you be reminded of the true heart beats of the friends you have left behind, and may you never forget that there shall always remain for you in each of our hearts a warm place and a fond remembrance.

We shall miss you very much, not only in our Bible class, but in the other relations, in which we have had the privilege of being associated with you, and your departure from Belleville leaves a vacancy in many ways that it will be well nigh impossible to fill. We feel, however, that you will always remember your pleasant associations here and that each of us will still have in you a true and lasting friend.

Kindly accept our deep regrets at parting, our hopes that we may have the pleasure of meeting soon again and our most sincere wishes for the future health and prosperity of yourself and Mrs. Luton, who, we feel, has also been deeply interested with you in our welfare at all times.

"God be with you till we meet again,
By his counsels guide uphold you,
With his sheep securely fold you,
God be with you till we meet again."

Frank Wallace, Grant A. McClatchie, Harold Holton, Newton Alford, W. C. Campbell, Wm. Haslitt, J. Arthur Marsh, C. A. Bell, Karl B. Conger, committee on behalf of the class.

Belleville, Ont., March 14th, 1905.

The presentation of the watch was made by the member of the class who has been longest connected with it, Mr. J. Arthur Marsh.

Mr. Luton was so surprised and overcome that language failed him for a time, but afterwards expressed his gratitude to the class for their loyalty to the class, for all their kindness to him and Mrs. Luton and for the address and very handsome watch.

Then followed addresses by Messrs. George F. Stewart, C. P. Holton, Wm. Hopkins, James Coulson, H. J. Clarke, F. E. O'Flynn, Henry Pringle, Rev. J. P. Wilson, B.A., and the chairman, Mr. Wm. Johnson, all expressive of the high esteem entertained by Bridge St. Church and our citizens generally for Mr. Luton, of the value he had been to our Public Library, and specially the influence of his life on the young people of Belleville, making him one of the best beloved of all the teachers in our High School.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

"LORD CHUMLEY."

The comedy drama in three acts, entitled "Lord Chumley," was presented at the opera house last evening to a rather small audience. The play gave general satisfaction and certainly was deserving of better patronage. Cecil De Mille, in the title role, has an admirable conception of the character and portrays it splendidly. The other members of the company carry out their parts in a satisfactory manner.

PROGRESS OF THE CAMPAGIN.

General Kuropatkin has succeeded in getting his army safely into Tie Pass, where he is no doubt preparing for the advance of the Japanese. The main army of the latter is about 12 miles south of the pass, and is reported to be almost completely exhausted from the effects of its terrible efforts. With the men that General Kuropatkin has saved from the rout, and the reinforcements that could be brought down from Harbin, General Kuropatkin must have something over 200,000 men, a formidable army, yet to make a frontal attack upon. If General Kuropatkin stands by the Pass Marshal Oyama will no doubt endeavor to get around him, with the assistance of General Kamamura, who is operating northward.

The absence of definite news from the seat of war yesterday is due to the fact that the Russians have nothing to report beyond that they are in Tie Pass, while Oyama, if he is engaged in another movement, is not likely to report till something is accomplished. The Russian soldiery are said to have recovered their morale, while it is the Japanese who are in a somewhat disorganized state.

The Council of War in St. Petersburg yesterday decided the question of continuing the war in the affirmative. A bold way out of the perplexities of the present situation has been suggested, namely, that Emperor Nicholas travel in state to the ancient capital of Moscow, summon the nobles and leading members of the Zemstvos around him in the sacred precincts of the Kremlin, frankly lay the situation before them, publicly pledge his word for the execution of the projected reforms and make a stirring personal appeal through them to the people to loyally rally to the support of the Russian arms and co-operate in prosecuting the war to a successful termination.

Such a personal appeal from the Sovereign undoubtedly would have a powerful effect throughout the country, and for the dynasty would have an advantage over the plan of submitting the question of peace or war to the Zemsky Sobor, which some of the newspapers are again urging.

A St. Petersburg report states that a force of Japanese has appeared in the neighborhood of Vladivostok, and this is taken to mean that siege will be laid to Russia's only seaport in the Far East.—The Globe.

POISON FOUND IN CAKE.

Mrs. Dee on Trial for the Murder of Her Husband.

Woodstock, March 15.—In the Dee murder trial here yesterday afternoon, Mrs. Minnie Kennedy, a neighbor of the Dee family, swore that Mrs. Dee, the accused, on one occasion, when complaining of her unhappiness and her husband's ill-treatment, and referring to Dee, had declared: "Oh, I'd kill him if I could!"

Mrs. Kennedy related that Mrs. Dee had at various times stated that she couldn't get along with her husband, and that her life was most unhappy. She frequently expressed the wish to get away from all her trouble. Mrs. Kennedy believed Mrs. Dee to be of sane mind and responsible for her actions.

Jones Kennedy, another neighbor, also considered the accused of sound mind. He had known her for seven years, and personally he knew that Dee and his wife did not get along well together.

Matthew Wilson, K.C., crown prosecutor, in his preliminary address to the jury, stated that evidence would be produced to show that Mrs. Dee purchased poison in Ingersoll two months before Dee's death.

He said that strychnine was found in the stomach of the deceased, and in the cake he had eaten for breakfast.

The plea of the defence is insanity.

The case will be continued to-morrow.

ESQUIMALT AND HALIFAX.

British House of Commons Discusses the Question Tuesday.

London, March 14.—In the discussion on the navy estimates, in the house of commons, Gen. Laurie referred to Esquimalt and Halifax and asked what was the use of the British government keeping on yards stripped of stores and with buildings in the hands of caretakers. The only object in maintaining garrisons and fortifications at Esquimalt and Halifax was to protect them as naval bases. Instead of putting these yards in charge of caretakers, the government should hand them over to the Canadian government on condition that they should be made available for the navy whenever they were required.

Mr. Pretyman, secretary to the admiralty, in reply, said the point made by Gen. Laurie in regard to the Canadian government taking charge of the naval bases had not been lost sight of. There were two parties to bargain with, but the admiralty would be willing to negotiate with regard to the North Pacific. The immediate local danger to be guarded against did not appear to warrant the maintenance of a naval base at Esquimalt.

The problem of the distribution of the fleet, like the construction problem, was a shifting one, and when the presence of a stronger force in the Pacific was required the admiralty was perfectly free to arrange accordingly.

STRIKE SPIRIT CRUSHED.

Interborough Employes Take Old Job at Reduced Wages.

New York, March 15.—The traffic conditions on the elevated railroads and subway yesterday were slightly improved over those of yesterday. All the employes of the Interborough Company who went on strike, and whose wages had been previously advanced because of the length of their services, secured re-employment only at the sacrifice of whatever advance in wages they had obtained.

Experienced motormen were reduced from $3.50 to $3 a day; gatemen from $1.55 to $1.40; guards from $1.90 to $1.55, and conductors from $2.40 to $1.10. So crushed was the strike spirit that the men accepted the reductions without protest.

One Advantage of England's Fogs.

"Should scientists succeed in finding ways and means for dispelling the foggy condition of England's atmosphere I am afraid that country will lose more than it gains," said a weaver. "One of the reasons why English weavers produce fabrics of finer and softer finish than American weavers from the same quality of cotton and other yarn is because of the damp condition of the atmosphere in that country at all times.

"It is a well known fact that yarn kept continually and uniformly damp will spin finer and softer than that drying out in the process of weaving. Thousands of dollars have been spent by our weavers in appliances to keep their shops uniformly humid, but thus far without success. The fine quality of panama hats, for instance, if the straw were not kept damp while the process of weaving is on, could not be produced. The straw is not worked under water, as many suppose, but is kept uniformly damp by being worked in the early morning hours when a heavy dew is falling."

19 LOSE THEIR LIVES

Two Hundred Tenants in Desperate Struggle For Life.

Several Who Perished Were Roasted to Death in Plain View of Thousands in New York—Gruesome Deaths, Thrilling Escapes and Daring Leaps for Life Witnessed—Tenement Only a Fire Trap.

New York, March 15.—At least a score of people were burned to death, several were so badly hurt that they may die, and forty others received slight hurts in a fire that practically destroyed a five-storey tenement house in Allen Street early yesterday. The fire had gained great headway before it became known to most of the tenants, and the escape of many of them was cut off until too late to save themselves. Thrilling rescues and daring leaps for life marked the fire. Scores were carried from the blazing building. Firemen climbed the walls on their scaling ladders, braved the flames and reached the imperilled tenants. Of the badly injured several may die, as they are terribly burned.

Fire Escape Death Traps.

Of the bodies thus far recovered only the following have been identified: Rachael Solomon, 45; Jacob Solomon, 16; Isaac Solomon, 18; Jessie Cohen, 15; Rose Wiener, 23; Sander Weiner, 4; Ida Muskowitz, 10; Harry Kauffman, 10; Rose Miller, 4; Morris Miller, 5

Crowded fire escapes in the rear of the tenement house were largely responsible for so many deaths in injuries among its population, which approached 200 souls. The scenes about the building after the fire was over and when the search for the dead was begun were heartrending. Nothing so pitiful of such proportions has been seen in New York City since the Slocum disaster.

A Lamp Exploded.

The fire started in the basement, occupied by Isaac Davis, his wife and three children. Davis had been out last night, and returning to his home early yesterday morning, went into his store on the same floor just in time to see a kerosene lamp in the rear explode. He awoke his wife, and both tried to put out the flaming lamp, but without success, and then gave all their attention to getting their childrne out of the burning building. A young man passing the house at the time saw the flames and gave the alarm.

Coroner Goldenkranz declared after an investigation that he had reason to believe the blaze was the work of an incendiary. He issued subpoenas for the fire marshal, tenement house and building inspectors, and health and police officials to appear before him at the inquest Thursday.

The fire started in the basement and spread with frightful rapidity to the roof. The victims were caught in traps of flames, the halls and exits being tendered impassable in a few minutes after the blaze started. The building was one of the usual crowded tenements, and the disaster was the worst in the history of the east side.

The district attorney has begun an investigation to place the blame for the great loss of life. Chief Croker of the fire department asserts that the police and tenement house departments are to blame for disregard of the fire escape law. The tenement house department officials, however, say that the blame is on the shoulders of the fire commissioner. Of the nineteen dead three bodies, those of a boy and two girls, remain unidentified.

HOW MANY PEOPLE ARE ALWAYS TIRED

You Get Up in the Morning All Played Out and Unfit for Labor. An Easy Way to Become Bright and Vigorous. You Can Eat Well and Sleep Well and Forget You Were Ever Tired.

Do you ever stop to think why you feel more tired in the morning than when you retire the night before? Did it ever occur to you after your noon-day meal why you are unequal to further exertion for an hour or two? You are quite played out, feel almost unhappy, unfit for labor and for exertion of any kind. You have acquired the habit of overloading your stomach, your liver is congested and your bowels loaded with foul refuse. You have piled agony upon agony until your very vitals cry out for assistance. "What shall I do?" You say. Use Smith's Pineapple and Butternut Pills for just a week. Take two each night when you retire. They will make you feel better, not only in the morning but all day long, and in a week's time they will cure so that you will again feel bright and active, and your tired, despondent, blue condition will have vanished. As an after-dinner pill nothing can take the place of Smith's Pineapple and Butternut Pills, for they possess not only the antiseptic and resolvent properties of pineapple, but also the laxative and tonic properties of butternut. They improve digestion, assimilation and nutrition, and in every respect can be relied upon to accomplish good results in cases of a torpid liver or of a sluggish condition of the bowels. At all dealers, 25 cents. They always cure sick headache, constipation and biliousness in one night.

TORONTO LIVE STOCK.

Receipts of live stock at the city market since Friday last were 62 car loads, composed of 958 cattle, 700 hogs, 574 sheep and lambs and 72 calves.

About five loads all told, the bulk of which were picked up in small lots out of mixed loads of butchers, sold all the way from $1.50 to $4.90 per cwt., the bulk going at $4.00 to $4.75 per cwt. Export bulls sold from $3.25 to $3.75 per cwt.

Too many half fat butchers' cattle are being marketed. The same complaint is common on all the leading live stock markets, according to the reports in the United States papers. Grain is selling at too high a price to feed, and farmers are not finishing their cattle. If drovers keep on losing money as they say they are doing they will soon learn to discriminate between finished and unfinished cattle. A few prime butchers' cattle of quality good enough to export sold as high as $4.50 to $4.60 per cwt.; choice picked lots at $4.15 to $4.40; loads of good, of which there were few sold, at $3.90 to $4.15; medium, $3.50 to $3.75; common, $3 to $3.40; cows at $2.25 to $2.85; canners at $1.25 to $2 per cwt.

Several loads of feeders, principally short-keeps, changed hands at firm prices, as there was a good demand from farmers and dealers that had orders from the country to fill. Feeders, 1100 to 1200 lbs., sold from $4.15 to $4.50, those at the latter price having been brought in as shippers; feeders, 100 to 1000 lbs. each, $3.60 to $4 per cwt.; those 800 to 900 at $3.40 to $3.60. These quotations and weights are for cattle of fair to good quality as regards breeding.

About 35 milch cows and springers, of which the bulk were of common to medium quality, with few choice, sold at $30 to $50 each.

The season of the year has come when too many young calves are rushed on the market. Butter, milk and cream being in demand at high prices, farmers are anxious to get rid of their calves at any price. The market was as usual again overstocked with inferior calves. Prices ranged from $3.40 to $6 per cwt, or $2 to $10 each. Few brought the latter price.

Deliveries of sheep and lambs amounted to 374. All of good quality sold readily at a little firmer prices. Wesley Dunn, who is generally the heaviest dealer, reports as follows: Export ewes at $4.50 to $5.12½ per cwt.; bucks, $3.50 to $4.25 per cwt.; mixed common lots at $3.50 to $4.50 per cwt.; grain-fed yearling lambs at $6.50 to $7.12½ per cwt.; barnyard or common rough lambs, $5.80 to $6.50 per cwt.; spring lambs at $4 to $8 each.

Mr. Harris bought about 700 at an advance of 15 cents per cwt. over Friday's prices, or 25 cents per cwt. more than he paid one week ago. Selects sold at $7 and lights and fats at $5.75 per cwt.

Wheat in Farmers' Hands.

Winnipeg, March 15.—The Ogilvie Flour Mills Co. have just compiled a careful estimate of the wheat remaining in farmers' hands in the country tributary to their 95 elevators, situated all over the wheat belt. After making allowances for seed requirements, the percentage is less than 6 per cent. of the whole crop, or equivalent to reserves of under three and a half million bushels which is considerably lower than expected.

The Head of The War Party.

Admiral Alexieff Summoned to Meet Czar at Tsarskoe-Selo

Dominating Classes in Russia Think the Reverse Suffered Under Kuropatkin Makes Any Question of Peace Impossible—Kuropatkin Beats Japs—Jap Fleet on the Outlook for a Russian Dash North—Reports Meagre.

Bulletin.—Newchwang, March 16.—The Japanese occupied Tie Pass Wednesday midnight.

Czar Calls Alexieff.

St. Petersburg, March 16.—A noticeable fact is that Admiral Alexieff, head of the war party, has been summoned to Tsarskoe-Selo. Only yesterday had the fullness of the disaster which has befallen the Russian forces become known.—The universal opinion among the dominating classes is that the reverse suffered makes any question of peace impossible.

Japs of Same Mind.

London, March 16.—Baron Hayashi, the Japanese Minister, in an interview yesterday on the subject of peace, said that all suggestions to the effect that Japan had officially or unofficially put forward feelers looking to the conclusion of peace were absolutely unfounded.

"Whatever individuals may say hereafter," he added, "you may regard it as certain that Japan does not mean to put forward peace terms. When Russia acknowledges that she is beaten or expresses her willingness to discuss peace we shall be ready. Until then we shall continue to fight."

CHINESE KILL FOREIGNERS.

Correspondent Little of Chicago and 80 Others at Mukden.

Santoupou, March 16.—A sanguinary combat occurred on March 14 on the centre advanced line of the Russian army eight miles south of Tie Pass. The Russians repulsed the attack and even made a small advance through a thousand corpses of Japanese, and advancing a large force on the right flank, where Gen. Mistchenko, who has taken command of his detachment, though his wound has not yet healed, is holding the Japanese in check. The Russian troops have regained their normal spirits and fought cheerfully.

Chinese Kill Foreigners.

It is rumored that Chinese killed eighty foreigners in Mukden after the Russian evacuation of that place, including, it is said, Correspondent Little of The Chicago Daily News. The fate of M. Nadeau, a French newspaper correspondent, who lived with Mr. Little, is not known.

Little Cabled From Yinkow.

Chicago, Ill., March 16.—Mr. Little cabled direct from Yinkow Tuesday to The Chicago Daily News. He said he had been captured by the Japanese and was being taken to Kobe. The cablegram contained references which demonstrated that the message was from Mr. Little personally, and that he was alive and well.

Reservists Against War.

Warsaw, March 16.—Reservists who were waiting in the barracks at Wolkowsk, Government of Grodno, formed a conspiracy to foment organized disturbances among the troops, in order to avoid being sent to Manchuria. The offenders were court-martialed; five of them were condemned to death and executed on March 13, and four were sentenced for life and eight to twenty years of penal servitude.

KUROPATKIN REPLACED.

Czar Will Send Grand Duke Nicholas Nicholaievitch to the Front.

St. Petersburg, March 16.—It is now definitely stated that Emperor Nicholas has approved the decision of the council of war to send Grand Duke Nicholas Nicholaievitch to replace Gen. Kuropatkin as the best means of putting a stop to the intrigues and jealousies among the generals of the army, both at St. Petersburg and at the front. Gen. Soukhomlinoff will be chief of staff.

JAP ATTACK REPULSED.

Thousand Dead in Front of Russian Position at Fan River.

St. Petersburg, March 16.—General Kuropatkin, in a despatch dated March 14, says: "A fierce Japanese attack on the centre of our positions at the Fan River, about thirteen miles south of Tie Pass, has been repulsed. More than a thousand corpses remain in front of our positions."

Railway to Sinmintin.

Tientsin, March 16.—Train service on the Yinkow-Koupangtse-Sinmintin Railroad will be resumed to-day. It is understood that the Japanese have agreed to the Chinese regulations governing traffic on the road.

Jap Cruisers at Singapore.

London, March 16.—A despatch to The Star from Singapore, Straits Settlements, says that four Japanese cruisers arrived there to-day from the eastward.

Saw Twenty-Two Jap Ships.

London, March 16.—A despatch to Lloyds, dated Singapore, 6 p. m., yesterday, says the British steamer Hongwan I. reports having passed 22 Japanese warships off Horsburgh, 20 miles east of Singapore, at the entrance to the Straits of Malacca.

The Captured Attaches.

Tokio, March 16.—British Attache Capt. C. J. Aires and American Attaches Capt. J. V. Hudson and Col. V. Harard, who were with the Russian army, and who were captured at the battle of Mukden, left Liaoyang for Japan yesterday.

American Steamer Captured.

Tokio, March 16.—The American steamer Tacoma was seized by the Japanese guardship March 15th. She was carrying barrel beef for Vladivostock.

The Japs May Catch Her.

Portland, Ore., March 16.—The British steamship Ras Elba left here yesterday for Tsingtau, China, with 9,888 bales of hay and 91,000 bushels of oats. While the steamer is going to Tsingtau, there is little doubt that the forage she carries is intended for the Russian forces.

2,000 Amenians Killed.

St. Petersburg, March 16.—Private mail advices from the Caucasus indicate that the situation there has not been exaggerated. According to one letter, the Armenians estimate the number of their dead at 2,000.

BRITISH COASTS SWEPT.

Twenty-Three of the Crew of the Khyber Drowned When the Vessel Was Wrecked.

London, March 16.—A storm of hurricane force burst over the Irish and English coasts during the night, and it is feared that many disasters have occurred. The telegraph lines are broken at many points.

The British ship Khyber has been totally wrecked off the Cornish coast. Twenty-three of her crew were drowned and three were saved. The Khyber was on her way home from Melbourne, Australia.

The storm swept over the north of Ireland early yesterday morning and did great damage to propery. Fears are entertained for the safety of the fishing fleets.

Havoc Along Coasts.

The high winds have caused considerable havoc along the coasts of the United Kingdom. Telegraphic communication between London and many points is cut off. The lifeboat stations are busy and shipping everywhere is seeking shelter. Numbers of minor wrecks accompanied by losses of life have been reported. Terrific seas are running.

The departure of Queen Alexandra Princess Victoria and other members of the Royal family from Portsmouth for Lisbon to return the visit of the King and Queen of Portugal, which was to have occurred Tuesday, and which was prevented by the weather, was again postponed, this time until to-day.

Iron Vessel Ashore.

Queenstown, March 16.—A large iron vessel, the British ship Wray Castle, from Portland, Ore., which arrived at Queenstown Tuesday, has been driven ashore and several others have dragged their anchors, owing to the severity of the gale off this coast. The Wray Castle lies on the eastern bank in Whitegate roads. Seas are breaking over her, but possibly she may be towed off after being lightened.

WIFE WAS WITH HIM.

C. W. Marlatt of St. Thomas Attempts Suicide in Toronto.

Toronto, March 16.—At the Daly House in this city C. W. Marlatt, a St. Thomas bookkeeper, waited until his wife slept after they had retired last night when he rose and shot himself in the right temple. He was living early this morning, but can scarcely recover. He left a note saying no one was to blame but himself. Mrs. Marlatt says she knows no reason why he should desire to take his life.

Humpty Dumpty Dead.

Denver, March 16.—Practically penniless, with only his devoted wife to watch and mourn, Mons. Niblo, famous circus clown and pantomimic, is dead. He was the creator of the part of "Humpty Dumpty," in the play of that name.

THE G.T.P. "HOLD-UP" IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

It is reported that the Grand Trunk Pacific Company, notwithstanding the scandalously favorable bargain it has secured from the Laurier Government is now trying to practice a huge "hold-up" on the British Columbia Government, backed up by the threat that if the company is not given what it asks, it will not begin the construction of the 480 miles of road through that Province. The details of this piratical attack and threat are thus reported and commented on by the Winnipeg Tribune (Independent Liberal):

"In addition to the credit of the Dominion of Canada, it is said the Grand Trunk Pacific is asking the British Columbia Government to give them a subsidy of 20,000 acres a mile for the whole 480 miles to be built across British Columbia. The penalty for failure to come to the terms of the hold-up scheme is that the G. T. P. R. will refuseto commence construction in British Columbia until the eastern and prairie sections are completed.

"Mr. Morse, of the G.T.P.R, is understood to have been told by the Premier of the British Columbia Legislature that the country would not stand for such a bonus, and has decided to transfer his attentions to the members of the Legislature. Already the effects of his visit to the coast are being seen in letters to the press urging that something be done to secure the commencement of construction at once, so that British Columbia may reap the benefit of the building of the line at once.

"Such are the reports published from Victoria, in one of the most reliable newspapers in Canada. It is almost inconceivable that the G.T.P.R. would have the audacity to ask the provincial government for aid, in view of the fact that the country is already lending its credit for at least three-fourths of the construction of the entire line in question. The G.T.P.R. must build to the coast or throw up the whole undertaking. There is no good reason whatever why, as a Province, British Columbia should contribute a single cent. Ontario has already been bled for land and cash running up in the millions in the shape of aid to a branch line which the company would have been forced to build, and build at once, if they hope to handle western traffic.

"We do not know the exact influences which prompted the defunct Ross Government to put through the rascally legislation, but it is not difficult to surmise. British Columbians should be on the alert."

The Grand Trunk people having "done" the Dominion most completely, remarks the Halifax Herald, made their first attack on the Provinces with the advance on Ontario for a large subsidy in both land and cash. This was no doubt done at that early date mainly because they anticipated that the Ross Government was near the end of its life, and that the successors of the Ross Government would be very unprofitable people for the Grand Trunk to approach for anything in connection with the G.T.P. scheme. Ross and his colleagues, on the other hand were altogether too free with what did not belong to them, and the Grand Trunk having got all it asked, cared little what became of Ross and his colleagues after that.

Now the attack is on British Columbia. The tactics and promises which succeeded in Ontario are not applicable to British Columbia, and hence the resort to the threat that the G.T.P. will not be commenced through British Columbia until after the demanded subsidy is granted.

The refusal of the British Columbia Government to entertain the proposition of the Grand Trunk bandits, is entirely commendable; and in that refusal the people of British Columbia should unanimously and heartily support the Government. Both the Government and people of British Columbia can well afford to laugh at the Corporation railway brigands, because they know that the railway company must build through that Province sooner or later, and that the Province can just as well afford to wait as the railway company can. Indeed the corporation will lose by delay, but the Province will gain by the delay. So it is not hard to see the outcome of that struggle, if only the Government and people of British Columbia have and continue to have the sense and stamia to "stand pat" and let the heathen rage. The railway people will ultimately have to do for their own benefit about everything that they now offer to fo for a land subsidy of about ten million acres.

Whether these grasping corporations will extend their brigand attacks to other Provinces remains to be seen; but their character has already been pretty well exposed to the people of this Dominion, and the people will yet know how to treat such marauders on the public property.

There is laughter in the barnyard,
There is cackling o'er the way,
When the rooster sounds his trumpet

There are holes around the straw stack;
There are others in the hay;
There is watching round the corner
When the hens begin to lay.

There are smiles within the farmhouse
When the lambs are at their play;
When the baby calves are dancing,
And the hens begin to lay.

There are omelets superior
On the table every day;
And the hired man is happy

Then list to what I say;
Be sure and heave a nest egg
When the hens begin to lay.

Some musicians are sloppy fellows. A despatch says: "The tenth bar of Chopin's Funeral March had been reached at a concert in Strasburg when the pianist found himself playing alone. The other members of the orchestra, overcome by emotion, had ceased playing. The pianist rose in tears and left the room, and the program abruptly closed." Perhaps the pianist went out to look for another bar.

HARRY LINDLEY'S DOUBLE.

(Ottawa Journal.)

Mr. W. Goulding, of Toronto, is in the city after a trip through Ontario to all the principal centers. He is one of the most amusing of the many "drummers" who visit Ottawa during the year. In appearance he is the image of old Harry Lindley, well known in theatrical circles. In fact, he is known throughout Ontario as "Harry Lindley," and this has caused many funny episodes.

A short time ago he visited Belleville and went into an hotel with a friend, who introduced him to the boniface as Harry Lindley. Mr. Goulding smilingly accepted the introduction as Lindley, and was at once faced with a bill for $5. Then the "drummer" repudiated the alias, but the second story would not go.

Finally he invited Mr. Hotelman to leave it to a customer a few doors off, and the party made tracks to the store.

"Who is this man?" asked the hotelman.

"Harry Lindley," promptly replied the merchant.

"I thought so; you can't fool me," said the hotelman.

It took the production of trunks of samples and letters from the house to straighten out the tangle, and then the hotelman was only half convinced.

No wonder the farm boys flock to the city, says the Buffalo Express. A court case in Le Seur, Minn., has brought out the fact that a farmhand near there worked fifteen hours a day, with only ten minutes off at noon for dinner. Nobody can do justice to a farm dinner in ten minutes. The pie alone takes that much time.

CLAIMS TO BE 171 YEARS OLD.

CHINESE WOMAN RETURNING HOME TO DIE ASSERTS THAT IS HER AGE.—SHE LOOKS LIKE IT.

Montreal, March 15.—A Chinese woman passed through Montreal yesterday, who claimed to be 171 years old. She had nothing to prove her age, only the word of her friends added to her own; but her appearance was most eloquent, and certainly tended to confirm her remarkable statement. She was on the way home from Demerara to China, in order to make her last resting place in the Celestial Kingdom, because she feared she had not many more years to live. This seemingly incredible person was so frail that it was necessary to have her carried about; but her faculties were good, and she insisted on the truth of her statement as regarding her age. She was bent nearly double, and her face looked like crinkled yellow parchment. Details concerning her were secured from members of her party. It appears that she left China when seventy years old, and resided in Demerara for the last hundred years. She arrived at Halifax a few days ago from the West Indies and came to Montreal Monday over the Intercolonial Railway.

PISTOL AGAINST RIFLE.

HARD FOUGHT DUEL IN INDIANA, WITH A LOG BETWEEN THE FIGHTERS.

Indianapolis, March 15. — The circumstances of an attempted assassination and a remarkable duel, which followed it, came to light here this week with the arrest of Samuel Smith, a young farmer living near Nora, in this county. Sympathy with Smith, the would-be assassin, who was believed by his neighbors to be justified in his attempt on the life of the destroyer of his domestic peace, made them keep the affair a secret till the victim was near death. Then the attending physician felt that he could not honorably refrain from notifying the officers of the law.

Elmer Jennings and Albert Smith were seated on a log in front of the school house at Nora when the report of a rifle startled them. A bullet passed between them, so close to Jennings' head that it carried away a lock of his hair. About 150 feet away stood Samuel Smith, a nephew of Albert.

As he was recognized he raised the rifle to his shoulder and sighted along the barrel. The two men on the log sprang to their feet. Jennings grabbed Albert Smith around the waist and held him between himself and the man with the gun. In the struggle a part of Jennings' body was exposed. Instantly there was a report, and a bullet from the rifle plowed through his back.

Jennings released his hold on Smith and fell to the ground, but managed to crawl behind the log before another shot could be fired. From this protection he sent two shots from his revolver after Smith, but both went wild. A third shot from the repeating rifle struck Jennings in the thigh and broke the bone.

The pain of the wound compelled Jennings to throw his leg on top of the log. Instantly there was another shot from the rifle, and a bullet pierced the calf of his leg. The wounded man fired two more shots from his revolver, but neither took effect. He was then reduced to one shot, and, fearing that Smith would advance upon him, he kept it in reserve.

Writhing with pain, Jennings unconsciously exposed his left foot above the log. It was shattered by another rifle bullet.

Smith seemed to appreciate the fact that Jennings had a shot in reserve, and did not come nearer the log behind which the wounded man lay. But he called to him to come out and "take your medicine like a man." Jennings retorted by daring his adversary to come within range of his pistol. Then the two men began to parley.

Jennings asked why Smith had attempted to assassinate him. Smith replied that the cause was well known, and that he would get him yet.

Smith was careful to keep out of range of the revolver, and Jennings was equally careful not to show any part of his anatomy above the log. For nearly an hour Smith stood watching for a chance for another shot, but, apparently despairing, he turned at last, shouldered his gun and walked away. Jennings was taken home and is now in a precarious condition. Should he survive, he will be a cripple for life.

Those three words will in part form the meaning of our decorative painting — paperhanging and wall paper departments for the year 1905.

1904 was the largest trade in our history for any one year notwithstanding the several small stocks shown in opposition.

Ample evidence this that the purchasing public favor the large assortment from which to select.

This year already we have placed in stock nearly sixty thousand rolls of the newest and finest of wall papers possible to find and with twenty years of hunting we know where to find the game—.

For your convenience and our profit we have a staff of workmen engaged for 1905 numbering twenty. Expert workmen in their several branches—of Paperhanging — painting, decorating, graining, etc.

At the present time we have a number of our workmen executing decorative work in Toronto — we go anywhere for business — no city too large, no village too small

Why Women Are Weak

To Any Womanly Sufferer, I Offer a Full Dollar's Worth of My Remedy Free.

Only one woman in 98 has perfect health. And almost all womanly sickness can be traced to a common cause—the nerves are weak. Not the nerves you ordinarily think about—not the nerves that govern your movements and your thoughts.

But the nerves that, unguided and unknown, night and day, keep the heart in motion—control the digestive apparatus—regulate your liver—operate the kidneys—the nerves on which all the vital functions depend.

These are the nerves that worry wears out and work breaks down.

It does no good to treat the ailing organ—the irregular heart—the disordered liver—the rebellious stomach—the deranged kidneys. They are not to blame. But go back to the nerves that control them. There you will find the seat of the trouble.

My remedy—Dr. Shoop's Restorative—is the result of a quarter century of endeavor along this very line. It does not dose the organ or deaden the pain—but it does go at once to the nerve—the inside nerve—the power nerve—and builds it up, and strengthens it, and makes it well—and that is the end of womanly weakness.

In more than a million homes my remedy is known. It has cured womanly weakness not once, but repeatedly—over and over again. Yet you may not have heard of it—or hearing, may have delayed or doubted. So I make this offer to you, a stranger, that every possible excuse for doubt may be removed. Send me no money—make me no promise—take no risk. Simply write and ask. If you have not tried my remedy I will send you an order on your druggist for a full dollar bottle—not a sample, but the regular standard bottle he keeps constantly on his shelves. The druggist will require no conditions. He will accept my order as cheerfully as though your dollar laid before him. He will send the bill to me.

Will you accept this opportunity to learn at my expense absolutely, how to be rid forever of all forms of womanly weakness—to be rid not only of the trouble, but of the very cause which produced it? Write to-day.

In connection with Dr. Shoop's Restorative, it is sometimes advisable to give local treatment. If so, get Dr. Shoop's Night Cure. Both remedies are on sale at all druggists.

For a free order for a full dollar bottle you must address Dr. Shoop, Box 69 Racine, Wis. State which book you want.	Book 1 on Dyspepsia. Book 2 on the Heart. Book 3 on the Kidneys. Book 4 for Women. Book 5 for Men. Book 6 on Rheumatism.

Mild cases are often cured by a single bottle. For sale at forty thousand drug stores.

FOXBORO.

The funeral of the late Mrs. Ashley was very largely attended on Sunday. The services were conducted in the Methodist Church at 11 a.m. by Rev. Mr. Thompson, assisted by Rev. Mr. Maybee, of Belleville. Both spoke very highly of the life of the deceased.

Mr. Walter Ramsay, of Edmonton, Alberta, spent Sunday in our village. He was the principal of our Public school here for a number of years. We are all pleased to learn of the marked success he is making in the West.

Mr. Jas. Gay, jr., has moved from our midst and taken up his abode on the Front of Sidney, near Belleville. We are all sorry to lose so good a neighbor.

Miss Ada Mott is spending a few days at the home of her brother in our village.

Miss Denyes, from Front of Sidney, is visiting Miss Annie Demorest here.

Mrs. Cruse has been visiting friends in Deseronto for a few days.

Mrs. J. Gowsell is at present in Montreal attending the funeral of her brother's wife. The deceased lady had been suffering from an attack of la grippe, but was very much improved, when she became suddenly worse and died.

Miss Ethel Adams spent Sunday with her mother here.

Miss Hattie Gowsell was in the village on Sunday.

The assessors have been doing their work in this locality during the last few days. Nearly all the village property has been increased in the assessment. This speaks very highly of our village, but what is their object? Who can tell?

Mr. S. Sprague has again returned to our village, after having spent the winter with his daughter, Mrs. Boulter, of Picton.

Pruning Fruit Bushes.

Among the things that should occupy the attention of the farmer and the fruit grower at this time of the year, one of the first in importance is the pruning of his fruit trees and bushes. In the farmer's garden the bush fruits are very generally neglected though the pruning which they require is simple in nature and can be done with comparatively little labor. The following directions may serve as a guide for some who have bushes to prune this spring:

Raspberries.—The pruning of raspberries may be summed up briefly as follows: Remove the old canes after fruiting: thin out the weakest of the new canes so that the row may not be too thick; head back the new canes to about three and one-half feet, so that good strong lateral shoots may be developed near the ground. Strong laterals may be headed back about one-half. In some localities where there is danger of the canes being injured during the winter, it may be best to leave the pruning until spring, but where there is no danger of injury from frost the work is as well done in the fall.

Blackberries or Thimbleberries.—These should be pruned much the same as raspberries except that the new canes should be left somewhat longer, four to four and one-half feet being considered about right. It is generally advisable to prune blackberries in the early spring, as the canes are liable to freeze back during the winter.

Gooseberries.—Without care gooseberries become a tangled mass, which prevents the proper development and the easy harvesting of the crop. The fruit is borne on one, two and three-year-old wood, mostly, however, on the one and two-year-old wood. The aim should be to replace the three-year-old branches with good, healthy, new shoots very early each season. Six main branches, two of which may be replaced annually, is a good base from which to build the frame of the bush. Head back the new growth about one-third and keep the bush just open enough to permit the easy harvesting of the fruit. If opened up too much there is danger of the fruit being injured by sun-burning.

Red and White Currants.—Currants are borne on the short spurs arising from the old wood, and near the base of the new shoots. Two-year-old canes produce the finest quality and the largest quantity of fruit, although some fine berries may be produced on the three-year-old branches. Train the bush to six main stems, two of which may be removed each season and replaced by two vigorous young canes. All other new canes arising from the ground should be removed. Head back the two new shoots about one-half and all other new branches one-third. Keep the head of the bush open enough to permit of free circulation of air and to admit sufficient sunlight to ripen the fruit properly.

Black Currants.—The treatment of black currants does not materially differ from that of reds. The fruit is borne on one-year-old shoots arising from older branches. As the bushes grow larger and stronger than the reds, it is well to leave about eight canes renewing two each season. Head back the growth severely to encourage the formation of many new spurs from the old wood for the production of fruit. Leave the head open enough to permit of free circulation of the air and the entrance of sunlight to the centre of the bush.

EXPRESSIVE NAME FOR INDIGESTION.

J. S. McKeown Has Simple Remedy That is Guaranteed to Cure the Trouble.

No one word better expresses the condition of the sufferer from weak stomach or indigestion than "misery." The stomach is weak and cannot digest the food, so that there is no appetite, there are pains and griping in the stomach and bowels, the head and back ache, and the misery goes to every organ.

Strengthen the stomach and the digestive system by the use of Mi-o-na. This is the only stomach remedy known that gives relief by strengthening the stomach and digestive organs. It is this principle that makes it a certain cure for indigestion. Other medicines may give temporary relief by helping digest the food, but they do not strengthen the stomach, and that organ gets weaker and weaker all the time.

J. S. McKeown, the reliable retail druggist, has so much confidence in this remarkable remedy that he guarantees a cure, or the money will be refunded. Mi-o-na costs but 50 cents a box. Ask to see the strong guarantee given with every box.

Mi-o-na is in tablet form and should be taken before each meal. Other remedies for stomach troubles and indigestion are taken after the meal, and decompose the good food you eat, but Mi-o-na used before eating strengthens the stomach, soothes and heals all irritation and inflammation, enriches the blood, and puts the stomach in such a healthy condition that it will take care of the food itself and there will be no pain and suffering.

Woman's love is a paradoxical compound of self-sacrifice and selfishness.

Sports and Pastimes

BASEBALL.

An Amendment to "Casey at the Bat."

All have read about great Casey at the bat.
How he put the town of Mudville on the blink.
With the bases full that day—Casey fanned like some big gay,
Would Lajoie have done it? I don't think.

Could you imagine Larry striking out
With ten thousand people yelping for a hit?
It's an even money bet Mudville would be happy yet,
And the pitcher would have thrown a double fit.

Here's a bumper to the prowess of Napoleon Lajoie,
The greatest hitter of them all on balldom's mat to-day.
Unlike Casey—mighty Casey—who at Mudville "pulled up lame,"
It's a "pipe," if Larry'd been there, he'd have broken up the game.

"There will never be another Casey," hear old-timers say,
They are talking futile piffle through the hat,
Would have been a different ending—and the poem would need mending
If written about "Larry at the bat."

The children would be shouting in their glee,
Each band would play some lively, happy air,
The sun would still be shining, they would never have been pining,
If, in place of Casey, Larry had been there.

Freshness of Youth.

He was a respectable looking man, and, judging from his appearance, he was a butcher by trade, and this belief was verified a few minutes later. He carried a white apron under his arm, and as he entered a car a huge cleaver dropped from the bundle to the floor. A youth who had not reached the age of discretion sank out merrily, "Say, mister, you dropped your pocketknife." The passengers laughed, but they could not help but think that the youth took a long chance on kidding a man with a cleaver.

A Cruel Insinuation.

Mrs. Enpeck—I notice here in the paper that a young girl in New York confesses that she has been in the burglary business for a long time. Enpeck (recklessly)—No doubt she inherited the tendency from a mother who was in the habit of making nightly journeys through her husband's pockets.

SEOUL'S QUEEREST.

The One Eyed Woman In the Grass Green Cloak.

"From my point of view the principal and almost the only charm that Seoul has for the newcomer lies in the novelty of the costumes that it presents," says George Kennan, writing about the capital of Korea in the Outlook. "It is not interesting architecturally, and it is detestably and disgustingly unclean, but its street scenes, particularly in the unmodified parts of the old town, are unlike anything to be found elsewhere in the east. I have already referred to the strange impression made by a population clothed wholly in white, to the grotesquely absurd headgear of the mourners, to the partly naked women and to the effeminate, girlish appearance of the boys, but in Seoul there is another figure which is quite as striking as any of these, and that is the one eyed woman in the grass green cloak.

"Just as you are beginning to get accustomed to the woman in white, with her handbreadth shoulder jacket, her bunchy skirts and her seminude appearance, you run up against the woman in green, whose costume is bizarre enough to give you a fresh shock of surprise. Her outer garment, which is all that can be seen, may be roughly described as a green silk waterproof, with white neck yoke and sleeve cuffs, held together in front by means of four long ribbon tie strings. Two of these strings are bright scarlet and two dull, reddish purple, and they hang down in front nearly to the ground.

"A grass green waterproof trimmed with scarlet and purple ribbons would be striking enough even if it were worn in the American way, but it is not so worn. On the contrary, the neck yoke, or collar, is thrown over the head, and the cloak is drawn around the face so as to conceal all except one eye, while the sleeves, which are mere shams, without openings for the arms, hang down from the wearer's ears. Anything more extraordinary than this grass green burnoose, with its scarlet and purple strings and its dangling white margined ear sleeves, would be hard to imagine, and when in a crowded street or market place you see a dozen of these polychromatic apparitions and an equal number of basket headed mourners gliding noiselessly to and fro in a throng of white robed ghosts who are fanning themselves or smoking long stemmed pipes you feel like rubbing your eyes to make sure that you are awake.

"These women in green are the wives of men who belong to what may be called the Korean middle class, and their costume is traditionally said to have had its origin in a ruse de guerre practiced by the women of Seoul when the city was attacked by the enemy at night in the absence of all its male defenders. The wives of the latter, it is said, caught up weapons, threw their husbands' jackets over their heads and manned (or womaned) the walls, and there they fought so bravely, or made such a brave show of fighting, that the attacking force, taking them for men, abandoned the assault and withdrew.

"In commemoration of this achievement the women and their descendants were permitted to wear as badges of honor the jackets that they had thrown over their heads when they rushed to the walls. This explanation of the green cloak sounds like a story invented to fit an observed fact, but the persistence of color in this particular garment while all other clothing remains white and the transformation of useful sleeves into conventional shams which now hang down from the ears seem to indicate a survival of some ancient and significant custom."

A Clerical Highwayman.

About the middle of the eighteenth century, when it was almost fashionable among men of position in English society to take to the road as highwaymen, it was reported that Twysden, lord bishop of Raphoe, was taken suddenly ill on Hounslow heath. He was carried thence to a friend's house and died there of what was said to be an internal complaint. The truth of the matter was, however, that the bishop had been collecting tithe in an illegal and forcible manner from travelers upon the heath when one of these, objecting to this extortion, shot him through the body.—London Standard.

Power of Ocean Breakers.

Experiments made at the Bell Rock and Skerryvore lighthouses, on the Scottish coast, have shown that, while the force of breakers in the German ocean may be taken as about a ton and a half on every square foot of surface, Atlantic breakers fall with a weight of about three tons to the square foot. On one occasion during a heavy gale huge blocks of granite and limestone were washed about like pebbles at the Plymouth breakwater, carried 200 feet up its inclined plane and scattered beyond it in all directions. One of the blocks weighed nearly two tons.

Pretty Loud.

"I heard something about you yesterday; I can't quite remember what it was, however."

"It must have been that tie my wife gave me; I wore that yesterday."

The Worm Turned.

Publisher—I can't see anything in that manuscript of yours. Struggling Author—I presume not; but, you know, some of your readers may be more intelligent.

Proof Positive.

The Heiress—Don't you think he is a sensible young man? Her Father—Oh, yes; he wants to marry a nice girl whose father has lots of money.

In argument similes are like songs in love—they describe much, but prove nothing.—Prior.

A Living Parasol Handle.

(New York Herald.)

The handle of an old parasol, which has taken root in the ground and grown into a tree in the yard of Joseph A. Wisner, in this city, is attracting attention from naturalists and men of science. Incredible as it may seem, there are a score of reputable residents who testify to the truthfulness of the statement that the tree really sprang from the parasol handle. But for fear of vandals the curiosity would be transplanted to one of the public squares.

In 1865 a parasol was presented to Miss Susan Shuey. Miss Shuey afterward married Jacob Kohler, and still resides in this county. She kept the parasol until it became useless as a sunshade, and stored it in an attic. More than fifteen years ago she resurrected the handle and used it as a fly-brush handle at Emig's Grove Camp. After a fire which wiped out the camp the handle became part of the salvage.

In the following spring Mrs. Kohler utilized the handle to support a rose in her dooryard. Several months afterward it was discovered that it had taken a root and sprouted. It became an object of curiosity for the entire countryside, and people came miles to see it. One night some one attempted to carry it off, and succeeded in tearing away a number of branches. About this time Mrs. Kohler moved away from York, and she entrusted the "parasol tree," as it had begun to be called, to the care of Mr. and Mrs. Wisner, who have carefully transplanted it to their own yard and nourished it ever since.

While this part of the story is not as reliably vouched for as that of the sprouting of the parasol handle itself, it is asserted that on the night of Mr. Kohler's death the metal spring which had remained in the handle throughout all these years fell off.

The handle continued to thrive and is now quite a respectable young tree. Each summer it bears beautiful little star-shaped flowers, something like forget-me-nots and berries. The latter never ripen, but shrivel before maturity.

The Smallest Egg.

The smallest egg is that of the tiny Mexican humming bird. It is scarcely larger than a pin's head.

Benevolent Duelists.

Jaures and Deroulede, French duelists, before leaving the locality where they fought their bloodless duel, gave money for the poor of the neighborhood. Deroulede also presented the owner of the grounds wherein the duel took place with a medal on which is a portrait of himself.

The Aztec Indians.

The Aztec Indians of Mexico are noted for their strength. An Aztec porter has been seen to take a cask of claret weighing 400 pounds on his back and carry it quite a distance.

Women In Paraguay.

Nearly all the younger women in Paraguay wear white or light pink dresses. Dark and black gowns are worn only by the older ones. Face powdering is still in vogue, and many of the women look as if they wore white masks.

The German Mails.

ONLY PARTLY TRUE.

POPULAR IDEAS REGARDING CATARRH.

It is the common belief that what is popularly known as catarrh is simply a chronic cold in the head. This is true as far as it goes, but as a matter of fact catarrh is by no means confined to the nasal passages, but extends wherever the mucous membrane extends, which means nearly every part of the body.

The mucous membrane is the inside skin of the body and is nearly as extensive as the outside skin, and any inflammation of this membrane causing an extra secretion of fluid is really catarrh.

Catarrh is, therefore, an old enemy disguised by many confusing names, for instance: Rhinitis is nasal catarrh; laryngitis and pharyngitis, throat catarrh; gastritis, stomach catarrh; cystitis and nephritis, catarrh of the bladder and kidneys.

Therefore, although the location of the trouble gives it various names, in reality the sum total is catarrh and nothing else.

Do not make the mistake of thinking you have no catarrh because the head and nose appear to be clear. If there is a cough, tickling in the throat and hoarseness you have throat catarrh, if there is no appetite, but nausea, gagging and disgust for food especially in the morning, you have catarrh of the stomach.

The surest treatment for every form of catarrh is an external remedy, which acts especially on the blood and mucous membranes; such a remedy is the new preparation sold everywhere by druggists under the name of Stuart's Catarrh Tablets, a medicine in pleasant tablet form and containing all the best and latest specifics for catarrh.

Stuart's Catarrh Tablets contain in highly concentrated form, bloodroot, red gum of the Eucalyptus tree, and many others equally valuable curative elements, and no one who suffers from any form of catarrh and has seen the inefficiency of douches, sprays and powders will ever go back to them after once trying so pleasant a preparation as Stuart's Catarrh Tablets, and one which gives so much relief in so short a time.

All druggists sell Stuart's Catarrh Tablets at 50 cts. for full sized package and the regular, daily use of them will effectually cure this troublesome and dangerous disease.

HE MOVES THE CLOSURE

Mr. Balfour Wants Sanction For Estimates by March 31.

Mr. Asquith Makes Some Caustic Remarks Regarding Action, Declaring That It Reduced a Deliberative to a Dependant Body and Made House of Commons An Automatic Registering Machine—Government Has Majorities From 64 to 40.

London, March 15.—Premier Balfour introduced the "guillotine" in the House of Commons yesterday afternoon, with the object of securing the sanctioning of the estimates before March 31. In moving the closure of the proceedings on supply, the Premier declared that it was necessary in order to secure the requisite votes before the close of the financial year. The step taken was for the credit of the House and not to extricate the Government from difficulty. Prolonged debates delayed business, and closuring was more in consonance with the dignity of the House than the suspension of 12 o'clock rule, the vision of bedraggled members of Parliament going home at 10 o'clock in the morning not being calculated to raise the reputation of the House of Commons.

Mere Registering Machine.

Mr. Asquith (Liberal), in a few caustic sentences, moved the adjournment. He declared Mr. Balfour's motion was a parliamentary scandal, the greatest outrage ever offered by a "nominally" responsible minister to a "nominally" liberative assembly. He accused the Government of mismanagement and the Premier of encroaching on the powers and privileges of the house, and said the motion marked an epoch in the degradation of the House of Commons from a deliberative to a dependant body, and transformed it into a mere automatic machine to register the will of the executive.

Government Majority 62.

The motion to adjourn was defeated by 266 votes to 204.

Mr. Redmond moved an amendment that the House decline to sanction any proposals for further curtailing discussion of the supply.

The amendment was debated up to 7.30 o'clock, when Mr. Balfour moved closure, which was carried by 249 to 213.

Mr. Redmond's motion was then defeated by a majority of 40.

The debate on Mr. Balfour's "guillotine" motion will be resumed to-day.

DISTRESS IN IRELAND.

John Redmond Says English Rule is "Abhorrent to Humanity."

London, March 16.—In the House of Commons Tuesday John Redmond, in supporting Mr. Hayden's motion charging the Government with failure to anticipate the distress in the west of Ireland, urged the Government to take immediate steps to avert impending famine. The Land Act of 1903, Mr. Redmond asserted, had utterly failed to settle the problem, and the tide of emigration would not cease until the grazing lands of the west had been restored to the people. The existing condition of things, he further said, were infamous and cruel, and had made English rule in Ireland abhorrent to humanity.

Mr. Atkinson, Attorney-General for Ireland, in defending the Government, admitted the enormity of the evil, but said the difficulty of solving the problem was appalling, reciting the measures already taken, including the expenditure of $6,000,000 by the congested districts board. He declared it most unjust to say that the Government had not taken every precaution to meet the distress.

Mr. Hayden's motion was rejected by a majority of 48.

CHAIRMAN GETS $3,000.

Mr. Smith Will Give Expert Attention to Temiskaming Railway.

Toronto, March 16.—Cecil B. Smith, C. E., of Toronto, is the chairman of the new Temiskaming Commission. The appointment was announced yesterday afternoon at the conclusion of the conference with the Government. The members spent yesterday at the offices in Manning Arcade, taking over the books, etc. Mr. Smith's salary will be $3,000 per annum, and those of Messrs. Englehart and Murphy $1,000 each. Formerly each of the five Commissioners were paid $1,000.

New Housekeeper.

The appointment of Frederick George Lee, of Toronto, as housekeeper at the Parliament Buildings was made Tuesday. He has had experience as butler and steward in England. Since coming to Canada he has been engaged in furniture and real estate businesses.

Amendments to Game Laws.

Chief Game Warden Tinsley expects that some amendments to the Ontario game laws will be made this session, chiefly in extensions of the close seasons for certain game. A pamphlet in revised form will be distributed among those interested after the amendments are made.

Hon. Mr. Monteith, Minister of Agriculture, yesterday paid his first official visit to the Guelph Agricultural College.

ENDS TROUBLES WITH A SHOT.

Oakville Man, Weary of Domestic Unhappiness, Takes His Life.

Oakville, March 16.—Frank Matthews, soda water manufacturer, committed suicide yesterday by shooting.

He had been dissipating for some years, more or less, his wife and family being obliged to leave him last summer. Since then he was greatly worried and seemed to feel his position keenly.

He died shortly after the shooting, without having regained consciousness. The funeral takes place on Friday afternoon. He leaves a widow, two daughters and one son, who live in Toronto.

Railway Engine Explodes.

Johnstown, Pa., March 16.—While going west past Bolivar Station, on the Pennsylvania Railroad, yesterday, a locomotive hauling a long train of empty cars blew up, killing Engineer George Ribblett, probably fatally scalding Fireman George Hysong and Conductor Griffith Hare and injuring a dozen of a crew of 30 trackmen, who were working at the place.

What is that which is lengthened by being cut at both ends? Answer—A ditch.

There can be a difference of opinion on most subjects, but there is only one opinion as to the reliability of Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator. It is safe, sure and effectual.

What coat is finished without buttons and put on wet? Answer—A coat of paint.

Are you a sufferer with corns? If you are, get a bottle of Holloway's Corn Cure. It has never been known to fail.

If you were to ride a donkey what fruit would you resemble? Answer—A pair.

Sudden transition from a hot to a cold temperature, exposure to rain, sitting in a draught, unseasonable substitution of light for heavy clothing, are fruitful causes of colds and the resultant cough so perilous to persons of weak lungs. Among the many medicines for bronchial disorders so arising, there is none better than Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. Try it and become convinced. Price 25 cents.

Why is bread like the sun? Answer—Because it rises from the yeast.

They Are Carefully Prepared.—Pills which dissipate themselves in the stomach cannot be expected to have much effect upon the intestines, and to overcome costiveness the medicine administered must influence the action of these canals. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are so made, under the supervision of experts, that the substance in them intended to operate on the intestines is retarded in action until they pass through the stomach to the bowels.

Name something with two heads and one body. Answer—A barrel.

A Small Pill, but Powerful.—They that judge of the powers of a pill by its size, would consider Parmelee's Vegetable Pills to be lacking. It is a little wonder among pills. What it lacks in size it makes up in potency. The remedies which it carries are put up in these small doses, because they are so powerful that only small doses are required. The full strength of the extracts is secured in this form and do their work thoroughly.

What black thing enlightens the world? Answer—Ink.

A Requisite for the Rancher.—On the cattle ranges of the West, where men, and stock are far from doctors and apothecaries, Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil is kept on hand by the intelligent as a ready made medicine, not only for many human ills, but as a horse and cattle medicine of surpassing merit. A horse and cattle rancher will find matters greatly simplified by using this Oil.

An Irishman gave his wife away by talking in his sleep. That is nothing. Plenty of wives give their husbands away by talking while awake.

It is worse than madness to neglect a cough, or cold which is easily subdued if taken in time but becomes, when left to itself, the forerunner of consumption and premature death. Inflammation, when it attacks the delicate tissue of the lungs and bronchial tubes, travels with perilous rapidity; then do not delay, get a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, the medicine that grasps this formidable foe of the human body, and drives it from the system. This medicine promotes a free and easy expectoration, subdues the cough, heals the diseased parts, and exerts a most wonderful influence in curing consumption, and other diseases of the throat and lungs. If parents wish to save the lives of their children, and themselves from much anxiety, trouble and expense, let them procure a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, and whenever a child has taken cold, has a cough or hoarseness, give the Syrup according to directions.

looked around, and through the window at the opposite roof, with a sense of loneliness which she had never experienced, even in her worst moments, on the island, for Mannering had been there to rely on, to cheer and encourage her.

She tried to drive all thoughts of the past from her mind and to fix it on the future, and when she had washed and rested she took out her money and counted it.

There were only a few pounds, and for a moment the reflection flashed across her that there, on the island, she had left wealth which, as Mannering had declared, half cynically, was beyond the dreams of avarice.

But the island was far away, so far as to be the island of a dream, and her present needs were very near and pressing.

She remained in her room until the morning; then she rose early and, with every regard to economy, purchased some clothes. After breakfast she made a parcel of the things Polly had lent her and, with a few lines of gratitude, sent them to the address on the card—"26 Percy Street, Chelsea."

Then she set out to begin that most difficult of quests, the search for a livelihood. It need scarcely be stated that she looked through the advertisements in the daily papers. There were several that seemed to her suitable to her case, and she selected one which set forth the desire of "X. Y. Address Messrs. Sloper & Slyne, 249 Rutland Street, Regent Street," for a young lady secretary.

Nina, in the simple black dress she had bought, and with her veil down, found, not without some difficulty, the Rutland Street mentioned in the advertisement, and was somewhat surprised to find that, instead of a private house, which she had expected it to be, it was an office over a rather seedy-looking bonnet shop.

Knocking at the door, which bore in black paint the name of Sloper & Slyne, she was bidden by a shrill voice to enter, and, obeying, found herself in a small room furnished, as far as a desk and two chairs went, as an office.

The first thing that struck Nina was the strong perfume of hair oil, with which she rightly credited the sleek, black head of a young man who was seated at the desk surveying himself in a small, crooked mirror which hung conveniently above it. Seeing that he was an extremely commonplace youth, with a face spotted like the pard, one would have thought that the glass could have afforded him little satisfaction. Nevertheless he did not withdrew his eyes from it as he drawled in a rich cockney accent:

"Well, what is it?"

"I wish to see Messrs. Sloper & Slyne," said Nina.

At the sound of the musical voice the youth swung round, opened his mouth—it was like a gash across his ill-favored face—and stared at her with watery eyes.

"Oh," he said at last, as if he were slowly recovering from the shock of her beautiful face and low, sweet voice, "you want to see the guv'nors? Sorry; they're both away. Gone on special business to the Marquis of Quisby. Wired for this morning. Awfully sorry. P'r'aps I'll do. I'm their confidential clerk, you know."

"I came in answer to this advertisement," said Nina, taking it from her purse and laying it on the desk.

The youth looked at it curiously, critically, as if it were a curiosity of the rarest kind.

"Oh!" he said at last. "Ah, yes. Quite so! So you want a situation as secretary?"

Nina expressed assent.

"Yes; will you take a chair?" He dragged one forward. Nina sat down and waited, and the youth stared at her and stroked the place where, if the gods are good to him, a moustache will some time grow. "Well," he said, when the silence and the stare had become almost intolerable to Nina, "this place has gone."

Nina promptly rose, saying, "I'm sorry. Good-day."

"Oh, here, stop a moment, you know!" exclaimed the youth in an aggrieved tone. "Don't go like that! There's no hurry, is there? This thing's gone, but there may be something else to suit you. Lemme see."

He turned—his eyes left Nina's face slowly and reluctantly—to the desk, and opening a ledger ran through the pages, muttering in a sing-song voice to himself, but glancing the while out of the corner of his watery, vulgar little eyes at Nina.

"'Nursery governess, £50 a year.' Ah, that's gone. 'Lady help in a nobleman's family.' That's gone. 'Companion to a clergyman's widow.' Filled up last week. 'Secretary to a Member of Parliament.' And that's gone. Don't seem to be anything left to suit you at present. You'd better let me put you on the books, Miss—Miss—er—"

"Wood," said Nina.

"Wood. Right. And address?"

"Hickley's Hotel, Durham Street," said Nina.

"Right. One guinea booking-fee, please," he remarked in a business-like tone.

"Is this a registry for situations?" asked Nina with pardonable surprise.

"Of course it is!" he responded, briskly. "What did you think it was, a cheesemonger's? Sloper & Slyne—sorry they're not in; they'd be glad to see you—employment agents. See? I'll enter your name and let you know if anything turns up likely to suit you. Though, by the way," he added, with a glance at her, "it would be better if you looked in now and again."

Nina—smile not at her ignorance and unsophistication, reader—was foolish enough to take a sovereign and a shilling from her purse and place them on the desk. The youth caught them up, as if he feared they might fly away if he lacked promptitude, and put them inside the desk.

"That's all right," he said, as it assuredly was from Messrs. Sloper & Slyne's point of view. "You look in again; early and often, you know. Come in to-morrow—in the afternoon. I get back from lunch about four. See? Good-morning."

He got off his seat and opened the door and stood gazing with his gash of a mouth stretched in an admiring grin as Nina went down the stairs.

"My, she's green!" he ejaculated as he tore himself away from the door and returned to the desk. "But she's prime, prime! Wonder if she'll come back, or whether she'll spot the game!"

Nina was not without her suspicions; but she did not spot the game, and the next afternoon—oh, the desolation and the solitude of that day in London, in a place which owned to a population of four millions, and not one friend for the solitary girl!—she again presented herself at Messrs. Sloper & Slyne's.

The youth was in his accustomed seat, and carried a pungent cigarette—it mingled affably with the scent of hair-oil—in his loose and bibulous lips.

"Ah, how are you?" he said with a mixture of impudence and deference, for the refined, beautiful face, with its grave, violet eyes awed even him. "Glad to see you. Guv'nor's still away. The marquis can't part with 'em. Important business. Sorry to say nothing has turned up." He referred to the ledger and mumbled over it as before. "Rather a slack time just now. Dessay you find time hang 'eavy on your hands. Do myself sometimes. Now, what do you say"—he had sufficient grace to stammer and look uneasy—"what do you say to doing one of the halls this evenin'? I'm not particularly flush—Sloper & Slyne don't pay me a princely salary, oh, by no means!—but I can run to a couple of dress circles for the Frivolity. Know the Frivolity, I s'pose?" with a leer; "I dessay we can manage a bit o' supper afterwards, eh?"

Nina regarded him with an amazement which evidently disconcerted him, for he turned away and eyed the glass and fingered the incipient moustache with some embarrassment.

Nina leant forward in her chair, her heart beating fast with a sensation of disappointment tempered by disgusted amusement.

"Are you asking me to go with you—with you—somewhere?"

"That's so," he said uneasily. "You'd better."

Nina laughed bitterly, for her eyes were suddenly opened.

"Tell me—though it isn't necessary—is this pretence of business, of getting me a situation, only a pretence? Tell me the truth, please."

Something in the musical voice, so low and yet so clear and commanding, compelled the youth to an unaccustomed veracity which afterwards astonished him.

"Well, you know," he said, grudgingly, "if you drive me into a corner—and that's where you are driving me, don't you know—it's something like what you call it. We're a registry office. We take the fees, don't you know. As to the situation"—he shrugged his narrow shoulders—"we might get 'em or we mightn't; most often and generally we mightn't."

Nina rose pale and statuesque in her anger.

"But don't you cut up rough! Look here, you're no good for any of this 'secretary' or 'companion' business. You're a lady; anybody can see that with 'alf an eye. What you want, with that face of yours, is the theatre or the 'alls. You come with me to the Frivolity and we'll talk it over—"

Nina rose, pale to the lips, but smiling.

"My good boy!" she said. "Haven't you a mother, a sister? Is there no one to teach you—no, I will not go with you to this place. Will you give me back my guinea?"

The youth's face fell.

"Can't!" he ejaculated. "Entered it in the books. More than my place is worth. Sure you won't come with me? Pleasant evenin'."

As Nina moved towards the door he followed her.

"Hi!" he said. "Look here. You're new at this game. Take my advice and cut it. There's no good in it. They'll—Sloper & Slyne or anyone else, it don't matter—pocket your coin and do nothing for you. Cut the secretaryship business. Better go on the stage. Why, lor', you're made for it! And I say, won't you be nice and friendly, miss? Won't you join me in a regular beno of an evenin'?"

Nina left him, pleading and expostulating, and made her way out into Regent Street.

Early in the afternoon as it was, the well known throughfare was crowded, and she was jostled and elbowed as she made her way to the Strand. She went back to the hotel discouraged and dismayed. She had spent a guinea at the sham registry office, and saw no prospect of employment. She was too tired, too heart-sick to eat, and she spent the rest of the evening in the attic near the sky. At nightfall, weary of her solitude and the thoughts that weighed upon her like a physical burden, she went out. The streets were crowded and her solitude in the midst of the multitude was almost intolerable. She made her way to the Embankment and, leaning against the stone work which keeps the slow but mighty Thames in bounds, looked listlessly yet longingly at the brown water sweeping placidly towards the sea.

There, across the ocean, to which the tide was tending, was the island where she had known a happiness beyond the power of words to express. Was Vane Mannering, her husband—her husband!—still there? Was he mourning for her? No; for there was the unknown woman, Judith! All his thoughts would be of her, of the woman he loved, and of whom he murmured when he slept.

She leant her head on the cold stone and gave way to the despair which is so fitting an emotion to "the finest thoroughfare in Europe," and the most desolate, the most heartbreaking in its magnitude and solitude to one in Nina's situation.

A footfall roused her from her absorption. A woman in most unwomanly rags crept up to her and in weak and abject tones begged of her.

"Just enough for a night's lodging, my dear?" she moaned. "I 'aven't slept in a Christian bed for the last three nights!"

Nina raised her head and looked at the woman. A wave of pity swept over her. How long, or, rather how soon would it be before she herself was in a similar plight? She took out her purse and, in the light streaming from the Savoy Hotel—the strains of the supper band floated towards her on the night air—she was hunting for half a crown, when a man—the woman's accomplice—hustled against her, snatched her purse and, with the woman, disappeared as suddenly as if they were as unsubstantial as the mist that was rising over the river. Nina uttered a cry of dismay and started after them, but a policeman who had witnessed the latter part of the familiar act stopped her with a friendly hand on her shoulder.

"No use, no use! They've got clear off into the Strand. You should never think of taking your purse out on the Embankment and, begging your pardon"—as he looked suddenly at her face with its pure, distraught eyes—"this is no place for you. Shall I call a cab, miss?"

"No, no!" said Nina, bethinking herself that she had no money left. "It—it does not matter. Thank you—and good-night."

The theft of her purse had left her penniless. She tried to face the situation bravely, to laugh, but the laugh would not come. Unconsciously she turned and walked up the Embankment. It was, at any rate, quiet and solitary, and she craved solitude and quiet. She had to think, to decide where she would go. She was penniless, friendless, in this great city and already she had found how heartless it could be to the friendless and penniless.

She made her way slowly, mechanically to the Chelsea end of the Embankment. She had no thought of Polly in her mind, and it was with a gasp of surprise rather than relief that, in the garish gaslight, she saw the name of Polly's street staring at her from the end house.

Still mechanically, and half unconsciously, she walked up the street, and, as if in a dream, stood before the house with the number Polly had given her.

By this time she was weak and faint with fatigue and excitement, and she stood, swaying to and fro, and gazing at the house. At this moment a hansom cab drove up and a girl alighted, paid the cabman—after the usual dispute—and was entering the house, when her eyes fell upon the figure clinging to the rails.

Polly—for it was she—hesitated a moment, then she went up to Nina.

"Now, then," she said, in a matter-of-fact voice, "what are you doing here; what is the matter?"

Nina turned her white face, and Polly uttered an exclamation of surprise and dismay.

"Miss Wood! Not really! You, and here! No, cabby, not a sixpence more! I know your fare! Off you go! Miss Wood! Oh, my dear, what has happened? Here, come in with me! Dear, dear! to think that I should find you here! And like this! Oh, come in; come in!"

CHAPTER X.

The Earl of Lesborough!

The title rang in Mannering's ears mockingly. He fought with his emotion and with a gesture of shame and apology raised his face from his hands.

Lady Letchford had slipped away—with the tears in her own eyes—but Sir Charles still stood beside his friend.

"I beg your pardon," said poor Vane; "it—it is so sudden, and the boy—great Heaven, to think that he—and Augustus—are dead, and that I—I, who never dreamed of it should stand in their shoes!"

"Yes, it's awfully bad," said Sir Charles, shaking his head, but feeling mean because he could not mourn as keenly the loss which had made his friend a peer. "But you have got to pull yourself together, Vane. There's no end to do, to see to. You'll make a first-rate earl, old man! You'll go to Tressider"—Mr. Tressider was the Lesborough family lawyer—"first thing to-morrow morning. I'll go with you if you like—no, better go alone. Oh, yes; I'm as sorry almost as you can be for the catastrophe, but—well, after all, you're my pal, you know, and for the life of me I can't help a sneaking feeling of satisfaction that the succession falls on you. Here, have a drink!"

He poured out a glass of champagne and Vane took it mechanically, but sat with drooping head and moody brow, twisting the glass round and round by its slender stem; and Letchford watched his friend anxiously and curiously.

"Better get to bed, old man," he said after nearly half an hour, "you look played out and as if you wanted a good night's rest. In the morning—"

Mannering nodded and rose, and Letchford took him to his room.

"Is he better?" asked Lady Letchford when Sir Charles entered their room. "My heart aches for him. I have never before seen a man break down; and it makes it all the worse when he is such a great, strong fellow as Mr. Mannering—Lord Lesborough, I mean."

Sir Charles shook his head reflectively as he brushed his hair.

"I can't make him out, Blanche. You saw how he looked when we found him—wandering about the streets like a—like a man half out of his mind—"

"The wreck, perhaps?" suggested Lady Letchford.

"Not much! Vane could stand half a dozen wrecks."

"Judith? Oh, Charlie, how could I have been so gauche as to mention her!" she wailed.

Sir Charles shook his head.

"Rather unlike your usual tact, old girl," he admitted. "Yes, I'm afraid he was hit hard there. I'm sorry Judith is a pal of yours, Blanche—"

"Was, Charlie. Be just! You know I have not spoken to her since she jilted Mr. Mannering. Of course, he must have felt it, for no doubt he loved her. She is not only the most beautiful woman in the world—"

"Present company excepted," said Sir Charles, with a fond glance over his shoulder at the figure sitting up in bed.

"Nonsense," retorted Lady Letchford. "Don't be foolish! I was never in the same street—oh, I wish I did not pick up your slang so easily!—I never could be compared with Judith; she was, and is, and always will be, simply incomparable. But I hate her for treating Mr. Mannering so cruelly."

"Well, she was punished, anyhow," said Sir Charles. "Fancy chucking over a man like Vane for old Marlingford—"

"He was a marquis, you see," murmured Lady Letchford.

"A man old enough to be her grandfather! That he should die two days before the wedding is—er—what do you call it—"

"Poetical justice, do you mean? It served her right. But, Charlie, if it isn't the wreck and the privations he suffered—did you notice how he shirked speaking of them?—and it isn't Judith, what is it that has changed him so?"

Sir Charles shook his head.

"I don't know. Anyway, whatever it is, it has hit him hard, deuced hard. I don't suppose we shall ever find out. Vane can be as close as an oyster when he likes."

"Well, you've got to help him all you can," concluded Lady Letchford, with a sigh. "And do put those brushes down—you'll brush all the hair off your head!—and come to bed! The look in that poor man's face will keep me awake all night—if I don't go off at once."

Mannering paced his room for some hours, feeling that bed was impossible for him.

He was the Earl of Lesborough, owner of an historic title and a vast estate and wealth which had been accumulating steadily during the reign of the late earl, who had lived a penurious existence devoted to amassing money and finding good investments for it.

And of what use to him—Vane—were the title and the money? His heart was buried on the sands of an unknown island in the Pacific. It had died within his bosom in the hour he had seen the wreck of the raft at his feet, had swam out to the little woollen cap which was all that remained to him of Nina, his wife, the woman he loved.

Fruit is Nature's Laxative.

Fruit contains certain principles which act like a charm on the liver—and keep the whole system well and strong. But these principles in the fruit juices are too weak to have any marked effect on the internal organs. The value of lies in the secret process by which they are made. The fruit juices are so combined that they have an entirely different effect from fresh fruit. Their action is the action of fruit greatly intensified. They have a marked effect on the liver—toning it up—making it active. "Fruit-a-tives" are, without doubt, the only complete cure for all Stomach, Liver and Kidney Troubles.

Fruit-a-tives

or Fruit Liver Tablets

A STATE DRAWING ROOM

LORD AND LADY GREY'S FIRST IN CANADA AN EMINENT SUCCESS.

The Canadian Point of View Respected by Col. Hanbury-Williams, the Governor-General's Secretary—The Modus Operandi at These Great State Social Functions—Work for the Colonels—His Excellency's Part.

Since the days of Dufferin, who set a social pace that no other Governor-General has rivalled, there has been no such drawing-room as that held by His Excellency Earl Grey at the opening of Parliament at Ottawa this year. H. F. G., in his bright, breezy way, thus describes the function in The Toronto Star. He says:

A Tactician.

The success of the function was largely due to Colonel Hanbury-Williams, the Governor-General's secretary, who brings to his duties a very fine quality of tact, acquired by contact with the social scheme in various parts of the world. Colonel Hanbury-Williams was Lord Milner's right hand man in South Africa, and won golden opinions there by his affability. He has taken pains to learn the Canadian point of view, and seems to have learned it well. That there were not more heartburnings over a drawing-room which so many people were anxious to attend, particularly in a place like Ottawa, where questions of precedence are more than prickly, may be put down to the diplomacy of His Excellency's secretary, who has the happy knack of adjusting etiquette to our democratic ways of thinking. Colonel Hanbury-Williams is Major Maude's successor. He will be the ceremoniar of Canada for the next five years. But Canada has no reason to bristle up, foreboding another Major Maude and his Turveydrop lectures on deportment. Colonel Hanbury-Williams is a different sort entirely. He will be fortiter in re, no doubt, but suaviter in modo will be his line of action. He is going to run the social shop for the people; and when anything unusual is demanded he will have his excuses ready.

Clear the Senate.

Everybody knows, of course, that a State drawing-room is held in the Senate Chamber, and the Senate chamber cleared for action looks better than it does with the desks, chairs and Senators inside, none of which are ornamental. The deep red of the carpets and hangings makes an accommodating background to any kind of color scheme, and gowns and uniforms the most diverse seem to fit into it without jarring. The dais has a clever arrangement of electric light, which gives the effect of a canopy spangled with lambent gold, and vice-royalty shows forth all the more impressively for this little stage trick.

Officers Enter.

Half an hour before the drawing-room begins, the officers enter and take their stations in two rows, with a space in the middle. This space is the straight and narrow way to the throne, the Scylla and Charybdis which all must pass who are not Cabinet Ministers or have not the private entree. At the top of the row, nearest the throne, are ranged the members of the Militia Council and the colonels, but after that rank cuts no figure, and majors, captains, and subalterns, cavalry, artillery, engineers, guides, and infantry officers are distributed promiscuously with no other idea than of putting a dark coat beside a red one, and so helping the mise-en-scene. At the bottom of the row there is also a colonel who takes a card from the person who is to be received, and at the top of the row four more colonels, who take the other card that is required by the rules. This last card is taken up by Colonel Smith, and, having passed rapidly from hand to hand, is finally read out by Colonel Hanbury-Williams and dropped in the basket. Privy Councillors and such, who come in by another door, and who don't have to run the gauntlet of the military, submit their cards to Colonel Hanbury-Williams, and make only one show-down. But everybody else is under suspicion, and any card that is played has to be looked at four times before it is acknowledged as trumps.

Work for Colonels.

It is satisfactory to know that the colonels who are being gazetted every day have some really serious employment. It is no small feat of physical endurance to stand at attention for two hours and a half and to handle over a thousand cards without once reneging or being bluffed out. We need more colonels for this important service. We understand now why the members of the Headquarters' Staff are so anxious for the brevet rank which will put them in line for this hazardous duty. Let us have more colonels, good fellows from the clubs.

A Two-Hour Job.

Sharp on the stroke of nine His Excellency and the Countess entered and took their places on the dais, where they remained standing and bowing for two hours thereafter. This is one of the cases in which the public has the best of it and the Governor-General has to work hard for the hundred and thirty dollars which is a day's pay. A thousand bows are apt to give a man a crick in the back. As an extension exercise it gets monotonous after the first fifteen minutes. Even on a commercial basis His Excellency gets the worst of it. A thousand bows for $130 is thirteen cents a bow. Black Rod, who makes about fifty bows during the session, averages $30 a bow. It is conceded that Black Rod gives a better bow and puts more of his back into it for $30, but the fact remains that the Governor-General is getting short-changed on this deal. After this nobody can say that Canada isn't being kept for the Canadians. So long as we pay a simon-pure Canadian Black Rod $30 a bow and a British Governor-General 18 cents for the same article this country is safe.

As a maxim of morals, it is more blessed to give than to receive. This does not apply to the receptions of a Governor-General. Every other man in that glittering assemblage gets off with one bow. His Excellency alone has to give a thousand bows. He gets a thousand, it is true, but slowly, one at a time, like the dollars that go to a savings deposit, but he has to hand them out as fast as they come in. It's almost as tiresome as a run on the bank.

Fully Bedecked.

His Excellency was dressed as an earl, coat all galloon and shimmer, white satin knickerbockers, white stockings, and slippers with buckles. He carried his cocked hat in his right hand. All earls are belted earls. The sash, worn bandolier-wise across his shoulder, must have stood for the belt so much favored by the poets. On his breast was the Matabele medal. The Countess wore something blue with a long court train. It was a fine pageant, to be sure, but it was hard on the Earl and his Countess to have to stand there for one hundred and thirty-five minutes and smile and bow through it all. So many strange faces, so many handsome gowns, so many crumpled dress suits just out of the trunk. No wonder his eyes lighted up when he saw somebody he knew. It was also very hard on Sir Wilfrid, who having made his bows first of all, after the daughters of His Excellency, slipped around and took up his station to the right of the throne. Sir Wilfrid stuck to it like the Roman sentinel, but it was obviously more of a duty than a pleasure for him to appear in the "gilded harness" which he dislikes.

Jean Baptiste Again.

Among those present was noticed Senator T. O. Davis, who is accepting all the social responsibilities of the Upper House. In his person the free and equal and somewhat radical West bent the knee to rank and position. Jean Baptiste Morin also made his devoirs. The member for Dorchester, scorning petty conventions, appeared in a morning coat and striped trousers, with a black four-in-hand tie and a gold horseshoe pin. This republican simplicity of costume rendered him a marked man even in that splendid assemblage. It is understood that Jean Baptiste would have carried his faithful umbrella to the foot of the throne if the usher had not taken it away from him at the door.

A Pretty Conceit.

Another venerable figure was Major Wickstead, who can always startle Ottawa by weird conceits in dress. The major, who is getting on towards ninety, thinks he is old enough to manage these things for himself. Last night he added to his reputation for daring originality by springing a Louis Quatorze outfit in purple velvet, with gold buttons, silk stockings, and slippers. The major took everybody's breath away, but then he is used to that.

A State drawing-room is a very edifying institution. It emphasizes those nice social distinctions which Ottawa admires and which reach down to every class of the community.

CANADIAN RAILWAYS.

Total Mileage Is Now Nearly Twenty Thousand Miles—1904 Statistics.

During the year ended June 30, 1904, there were 534 miles of steam railway built in Canada, bringing the total mileage on the date mentioned up to 19,611 miles. The capital paid amounted to $1,186,516,918, an increase of $39,996,110. This amount includes Dominion and Provincial subsidies, and loans and municipal aid. The miles of railway in operation numbered 19,431, an increase of 443 miles, compared with the previous year. The gross earnings of all the steam railways aggregated $100,219,436, a gain of $4,154,909. The working expenses amounted to $74,563,162, an increase of $7,081.63, but the net earnings show a falling off of $2,927,729, the total for the year being $25,656,274. The steam railroads carried 23,640,765 passengers, an increase of 1,492,023 and 48,097,519 tons of freight, a gain of 724,102 tons. Only 25 passengers were killed, being 28 less than in the year previous.

The returns of electric railways show that there are 767 miles of line, as against 759 in 1903. The capital, including Dominion and Provincial subsidies and municipal aid, was $80,453,609, an increase of $1,219,932. Working expenses were represented by the sum of $5,326,517, an increase of $853,659, when contrasted with the year previous. Net earnings totalled $3,125,092, or an increase of $366,273. There were 181,689,998 passengers carried, as against 155,662,812 for the preceding year. Of freight 400,161 tons were carried, 28,876 more than in 1902-3. Ten passengers were killed and a like number in the previous year.

On Whom Is Blood Guiltiness?

Some one may have blundered at Port Arthur, as at Balaklava, but that some one lied is more evident. General Stoessel was made to believe that both General Kuropatkin and the Baltic fleet were close at hand, though in reality they were hopelessly far away. Such valor as that of the Russian garrison of Port Arthur needed no mendacious stimulus to provoke it to its highest power, but if false reports encouraged the Russians to hold out longer than they would otherwise have done the authors of them must bear a heavy burden of blood guiltiness.

Why, Of Course.

The teacher had been talking about a hen sitting on eggs and, with the incubator in his mind, asked if eggs could be hatched in any other way. "Yes, put 'em under a duck," was the response.

She Left First.

Miles—Did Croakus leave a widow?

Giles—No. She left him about a year before he died.

POLICING THE PLAINS.

How Canada's Vast Empire of the Plains Is Governed.

The duties of the Northwest Mounted Policeman are perhaps more varied than that of any other officer in the world of like position. The little force of which he forms a part, numbering scarcely more than 500 men, have to police a vast area, almost an empire in extent, extending from the international boundary to the Arctic Ocean. His scarlet uniform is a synonym for law and order. Wherever he rides lawlessness is kept in check, criminals are pursued and brought to justice, the predatory instincts of the Indian tribes are repressed, and the settler sleeps in perfect security, though his nearest neighbor may be miles away.

The Northwest Mounted Policeman's lithe, active figure is the very embodiment of Canadian justice, swift and unerring, a veritable terror to evil-doers. Whether engaged in tracking a murderer, rounding up horse or cattle thieves, pursuing a redskin into the very heart of an Indian reserve, dominating the mining camps of the Yukon or paddling his lonely canoe on the borders of the Arctic Sea, his conduct is always the same, cool, fearless and indomitable. There is a good deal of human interest in the reports of the men of the Mounted Police. Cattle-stealing is a crime they have frequent experience with, and it is often a difficult thing to prove. Sometimes, however, the perpetrators are caught red-handed.

Here, for example, is an account of how three alleged cattle-thieves were rounded up near MacLeod, Alberta. It is taken from the report of Sergeant Piper of "D" division: "On the 13th of September, accompanied by Constable Pennycuick, I left MacLeod for Rocky Coulee to investigate cattle-stealing, which has been reported to have been carried on for several months. I visited the place of R. N. Train, a butcher, formerly of Morris, Man., and afterwards of MacLeod, but now residing on section 8, township 11, range 24, about 16 miles from the town of MacLeod, and about 150 yards from his house towards a coulee found all appliances for butchering cattle. Noticing several hides in the corral, and not wishing to throw any suspicion, I watched the place carefully on the evenings of the 13th and 14th. Nothing happened, and no cattle were butchered. On the 15th we went about seven miles north of Train's place and received information that Train's boy was seen that day driving three steers, brands unknown, towards the home. I determined to keep a close watch on his corral that night. Reaching, at about 7.15 p.m., a butte about 300 yards from his corral, we waited. At 7.19 p.m. we heard a rifle shot, sounding as if it had come from the corral. At 7.30 p.m. another rifle shot and a groan from an animal. We immediately made for Train's corral, it being dark when we reached there. I heard the voices of two or three men, and at once ordered them to throw up their hands, which they did. I asked who was boss, and Train replied that he was. Obtaining a lantern, I inspected the place and found three men there—Train, Bram and Carr—also the carcasses of two three-year-old steers that had just been shot. I asked Train what brands were on the cattle, meaning the two just shot. He replied: 'No brands at all. I bought them from a man two or three months ago.' I then told him to go ahead and to take the hides off without injury and dress them properly. He said: 'If I have made a mistake I wish to pay for them.' I then sent for the assistance of three farmers, who lived near the place, meaning to hold the three prisoners at all costs, the night being very dark, and knowing that I had a good case. On the hides being taken off the carcesses they were both found to have the brands Y. T. on the left ribs and the wattle brand on the lower right neck. I then recognized them as the property of George Lane of Calgary. I at once placed Train, Bram and Carr under arrest, and handcuffed and cautioned them."

The Late Principal Sinclair.

The funeral of the late Rev. John A. Sinclair, Principal of Regina Industrial School, which was recently held at the home of his aged parents, Scotch Corners, near Carleton Place, Ont., had Alfred Fitzpatrick of Whitby, a classmate of the deceased, present as the representative of the Senate and Alma Mater Society of Queen's University, of which institution Mr. Sinclair was a graduate. Mr. Fitzpatrick gave a brief address, reviewing the brilliant career of the departed, expressing the sympathy of the faculty, students and alumni of Queen's with the bereaved family and friends. Mr. Sinclair was a medalist in philosophy, and had partially completed the course for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy. He had performed invaluable services for his church and country as a missionary in the Klondike, and as principal of one of our industrial schools had given a most important impetus to the cause of industrial education. He was not only a deep thinker, a profound student of industrial and social reforms, but he possessed a practical mechanical cast of mind, and invariably reduced his ideas to practice. Such men as he should be at the heads of our departments of education.

Command of the Vigilant.

Captain. J. Dunn, who for twelve years commanded the fisheries protection cruiser Petrel, and who now has command of the cruiser Vigilant has had an increase in salary to $1,250 per year, with an additional annual increase of $50 until he has reached the age limit. The Vigilant will carry a crew of 55 men. She will shortly be fitted up with four rapid-fire guns, one machine gun, a one-pounder and two four-pounders. The headquarters of the Vigilant will be at Windsor. Over 40,000 rounds of ball cartridges will be kept aboard the boat and the strictest discipline maintained.

HAD TO HIDE IT

A MOTHER wrote us recently that she had to keep Scott's Emulsion under lock and key—her children used to drink it whenever her back was turned. Strange that children should like something that is so good for them. It's usually the other way.

Scott's Emulsion

makes children comfortable, makes them fat and rosy-cheeked. Perhaps that's why they like it so much—they know it makes them feel good.

Older people, too, who are thin or delicate will find Scott's Emulsion a wonderful strength-giver and flesh-builder.

This picture, in the form of a trade mark label, is on the wrapper of every bottle of the genuine Scott's Emulsion.

Death from Natural Causes.

The inquest to enquire into the cause of the death of George Hailstone, who died in the county jail yesterday morning, was held in the afternoon and the verdict was that death was due to natural causes. Dr. Yeomans, coroner, conducted the enquiry. Evidence was given by Dr. Farley, jail physician, the jail officials and two prisoners. The evidence showed that the deceased was subject to epileptic fits, which came upon him quite frequently and he evidently had one, which caused his demise. From the evidence it appears that Hailstone did not get up yesterday morning and a few minutes before he was found dead complained to one of the prisoners that he was not feeling well. After the inquest the remains were taken to an undertaking establishment and prepared for burial.

ANTICIPATE PLEASANT TRIP.

LORD AND LADY ROBERTS COMING OVER IN THE SUMMER TIME.

London, March 15.—Major D. M. Stewart, 13th Scottish Light Dragoons of Montreal, was yesterday a guest at luncheon of Lord and Lady Roberts. Lord Roberts showed Major Stewart a large number of war relics, among which was a flag of truce Cronje used at Paardeberg. Lord Roberts remarked, "That is where the Canadians did splendidly." Referring to the visit to Canada, Lord Roberts confirmed what had already been said by the C.A.P., that both he and Lady Roberts would visit Canada this summer, and that they looked forward with most pleasurable anticipation to the visit.

WHERE IS MR. RIELLY? CAN ANYONE TELL?

When Called Upon to Plead in Court This Morning the ex-Professor Was Missing—Quite a Dramatic Scene—Ruttan's Trial to Start To-morrow Morning—"No Bill" Against Whalen—"True Bill" Against Harryett—Notes of the Assizes.

One of the biggest sensations ever sprung in this city was that which came, like a bolt from the blue, in the Assize Court this morning. The trial of F. J. Rielly, the Kingston bogus ballot-box artist, was just getting under way; Mr. Johnston, his leading counsel, had just finished making some objections to the indictment, and, quite casually, pleaded not guilty in the name of his client. The learned Judge ordered that Rielly be placed in the prisoner's cage, in order that he might register his own plea. And then, by all that's wonderful, the daddy of all the ballot-box artists couldn't be found. He was telephoned for without avail; then Detective Chamberlain went to look for him, also without avail, and, to make a long story short, he hasn't been found yet, and the trial of Francis J. Rielly, for some time professor of Latin and Greek at Regiopolis College, and latterly the prime mover in as slick a ballot-box scheme as was ever started, is indefinitely postponed.

True Bill Against Ruttan.

At 5.30 yesterday afternoon the Grand Jury came into court and the foreman, Mr. M. Bird, stated that they had found a true bill against E. G. Ruttan on the charge of conspiracy. The time for hearing the trial was not fixed, but it is understood that it will be taken up at the conclusion of the Rielly case.

This was all the business that was brought before the Grand Jury for the day.

This Morning's Proceedings.

The Court room was filled this morning when proceedings began. The lawyers laughed and chatted together, and everybody gazed on the big guns of the profession present with interest and awe. There were the men whose names, a few short months ago, were in the mouths of most newspaper readers in Canada. People remembered how Mr. E. F. B. Johnstone, K. C., for instance, had cross-examined Mr. R. R. Gamey, M. P.P., at the bribery investigation in Toronto. Remembering that, they predicted a warm time for some of the witnesses when Mr. Johnston trained his guns on them. It would be as bad, they thought, as the guns of Oyama against the Russian centre at Mukden. We should soon see. It was 10.15 when the Judge came in.

The case of Rielly was called, and Mr. Johnston, his counsel, made some objections. He submitted that the indictment was imperfect, owing to the fact that it charged Rielly with wrong-doing elsewhere than in Ontario. The indictment could only legally specify wrongful actions which might have taken place in Ontario. He claimed that the indictment charged that the crime was conceived in a foreign country. That must be either amended or struck out. He also objected to clause 8 of the indictment, which by inference charged personal intereference with the voter. There was no such action charged on the part of his client, though the indictment quoted section 112 of the Dominion Elections Act Statutes in regard thereto. He also took another objection, namely, that there were two separate conspiracies, and that his client could only be charged with one of them.

Mr. Hellmuth replied to the objections of Mr. Johnston. He said that section 112 of the Dominion Election Act was an omnibus section, and was meant to cover all fraudulent cases.

The judge overruled Mr. Johnston. Mr. Johnston also objected to section 9 of the indictment, which he contended was too indefinite. The air was full of talk of technicalities.

The Judge said that for the present he would reserve comment.

RIELLY CALLED.

In answer to a question, Mr. Johnston said his client would plead not guilty, subject to the objection he had made.

The Judge instructed that Rielly had better be placed in the dock. The crier called "Frank J. Rielly," but there was no response. Mr. McCamon went to telephone to the Quinte for Rielly. Mr. Johnston said he had told Rielly to be in court at a quarter to ten this morning. The time dragged on slowly, but Rielly did not turn up. It was whispered that he had skipped. The Judge ordered that an officer be sent after Rielly.

The Judge said that in the event of Rielly not turning up by 12 o'clock the case against Ruttan would be taken up.

Mr. Riddell asked for more time, but the Judge did not promise to grant it.

In the meantime Rielly did not turn up. Detective Chamberlain, who had been out to look for Rielly, came in, and the Judge asked what he had found out. The Detective told the Crown Prosecutor that he had been to the hotel and ascertained that Rielly had left the hotel last night at 12 o'clock and had not been seen since. It was presumed that he had left the country.

Mr. Johnstone said that he had talked with Rielly at 11 o'clock last night, and he had told him that he was going to the telephone to communicate with a Mr. Riddell, of Kingston, one of his counsel.

The Judge then ordered that Rielly's bondsmen be called on to produce Rielly, otherwise his bail would be estreated. The crier of the Court called Rielly, and also called his bondsmen.

Mr. Johnston said that, under the circumstances, he asked to be allowed to withdraw his objections to the indictment, and also the plea of not guilty.

At the request of the prosecuting attorney, the Judge ordered a bench warrant to be issued for Rielly.

Rielly's bondsman is Mr. James H. Smith, of this city.

Things were now at a standstill. The prosecuting attorney conferred with the Judge and the other lawyers whispered together.

Where was Rielly?

The opinion was freely expressed that he had lost his nerve after the Judge's address to the Grand Jury, and decided to do what B. O. Lott and Shibley could not persuade him to do last November, namely, leave for the realms of Uncle Sam.

The Crown Prosecutor and Mr. Shepley gathered up their bags and books and went out. What was going to happen next? It was soon seen. The petty jurors were dismissed till 10 a.m. to-morrow, when the trial of Ruttan will be commenced, providing, of course—

The court then went on with a civil case, Burgoyne vs. City of Belleville.

"No Bill" Against Whalen; "True Bill" Against Harryett

Just before the court adjourned for lunch at 1 p.m. the Grand Jury filed into the Court room. In answer to the usual question as to whether they had anything to present to the court the foreman answered in the affirmative.

A "True Bill" against Samuel Harryett for conspiracy was recorded.

The foreman held in his hand another paper which proved to be a "No Bill" against T. E. Whalen.

Mr. O'Flynn, who was present in court on behalf of Whalen, asked for his client's formal discharge which was given by His Lordship. Whalen will, however, be required to remain here, as he has been subpoenaed as a witness.

The Disappearance of Rielly.

Enquiry at Hotel Quinte elicited the information that Rielly left that hostelry, by the front door, last night about 12, in company with Mr. Hope McGinnis, of this city. The latter party states, it is said, that he only went as far as the corner with Rielly, and left him there. Rielly, it appears, was rooming at the Quinte with a Kingston man named Johnson, who, at midnight, retired, Rielly stating to him that he would be up in half an hour. He failed to make good his threat.

It was ascertained that the slippery Mr. Rielly forgot to settle his hotel bill, but, inasmuch as he left his suit case behind, the hotel management are probably insured against loss.

It is surmised that Rielly went to the station on leaving the hotel, and took the 12.40 a.m. train for the east. Should the above surmise be correct, and had Rielly made the connections necessary, he could have landed in Uncle Sam's domains at 6 o'clock this morning.

Rielly's bondsman was Mr. James H. Smith, stockbroker, of this city, who was, when the bonds were entered into, stated to be acting on behalf of the Knights of Columbus, a Roman Catholic organization with which Rielly was connected. It is stated that Mr. Smith, in company with a Mr. Ridley, Rielly's Kingston legal adviser, yesterday called on the County Crown Attorney, Mr. P. J. M. Anderson, and requested that the $2,000 which had been put up as bail for Rielly, should be refunded, as he was here present at the court. The County Attorney demurred. It was a bad thing to give up money, he said, in his jocular way, and anyhow, it would be time to give up the money when Rielly had been surrendered into the custody of the court. This afternoon Mr. Anderson is shaking hands with himself.

The question of responsibility for the disappearance of Rielly is a ticklish one. Some lawyers express the opinion that, when a true bill was returned against Rielly, his bail should have been cancelled at once and he himself placed in durance. The responsibility for this not being done is said to be between Col. Sir Percy Sherwood and Sheriff Hope.

It could not be ascertained, this afternoon, whether any steps had been taken to guard against the "skipping out" of Messrs. Harryett and Ruttan, against whom true bills have also been found.

Detective Chamberlain, when asked if he or his confreres were watching the accused, said no. They had not either, he said, taken any steps to discover the whereabouts of Rielly. No instructions, so far as he knew, had yet been given. Detective Parkinson left this morning for Bancroft, where he had gone after witnesses.

It is said that a point has arisen in connection with Rielly's bail, and his bondsman is alleged to claim that the bail cannot now be estreated, inasmuch as he was committed for trial at the "next court of competent jurisdiction." It is now claimed that the "next court of competent jurisdiction" was the Sessions, last December. A gentleman learned in the law, when spoken to about this point, said, "But did they, last December, ask to be relieved of their obligations; if not, the bail still holds good."

However, that is a matter for the lawyers.

Up to the hour of going to press, nothing had been heard of Rielly, so far as we could learn.

A leading doctor of this city, who has treated Rielly, said this afternoon that, had he been convicted, he would never have gone to the penitentiary. "I feel sure," said the medical man, "that he would have committed suicide."

Col. Sir Percy Sherwood went east on "the flyer" to-day.

Mr. Joseph James, of Actinolite, told a reporter to-day that he was talking to Rielly a few minutes before 12 o'clock last night, and that Rielly was crying as he talked about his case.

As we went to press this afternoon Messrs. Harryett and Ruttan, against whom True Bills have been found, were still at liberty, on bail.

The Responsibility.

WHERE DOES IT LIE?

MR. E. GUSS PORTER, M. P., SAYS SHERIFF HOPE AND THE DOMINION SECRET POLICE CAN FIGHT FOR THE HONOR BETWEEN THEM.

The question has been asked, "Where does the responsibility lie for the escape of F. J. Rielly, the man against whom a True Bill had been found by the Grand Jury?"

The Intelligencer this afternoon took occasion to interview Mr. E. Guss Porter, M.P., in regard to the matter, and asked him the following pointed question:

"Will you kindly tell us where the true responsibility lies for the fact that Rielly was not arrested when a True Bill had been returned against him?"

To which Mr. Porter replied: "The responsibility is wholly that of the Sheriff and the Dominion Secret Police, who were both notified by the County Crown Attorney that they should take Rielly into custody as soon as a True Bill was found. It was not part of the duty of Crown Counsel Hellmuth to look after this."

The Assizes.

Bryer vs. Farrow.—This case occupied the attention of the court the whole of yesterday, not being concluded until a late hour in the evening. The plaintiff claimed damages for the acts of the defendant in removing unlawfully a piano from the plaintiff's residence in Sidney township on the 9th of January, 1904. The defendant also set up a counter claim against the plaintiff for damages for malicious prosecution, the plaintiff having caused the arrest of the defendant for the alleged theft of the piano. The addresses of the counsel and Judge's charge were completed at 7 o'clock, and the jury, after being out about two hours, returned into court with their answers to the questions submitted to them by His Lordship, who reserved judgment.

His Lordship's charge to the jury was rather strongly in favor of the defendant. He considered that the plaintiff's story was not altogether consistent with the facts of the case. Messrs. Porter & Carnew for the plaintiff, and Mr. Morden for the defendant.

James vs. Rathbun.—This was an action for damages claimed by the plaintiff from the defendant. It is alleged that the defendants blew up a dam which the plaintiff had erected upon a stream in the northern portion of this county. By an agreement between both parties the case was traversed to the fall assizes, with the understanding that it would be the first case upon the docket. S. Masson for the plaintiff and G. E. Deroche for the defendant.

A DESPERATE BATTLE NOW BEING WAGED NORTH OF THAT POSITION.

(Special to The Intelligencer.)

Tokio, March 16.—The Japanese occupied Tie Pass at midnight on March 15.

Details of the occupation have not yet been received at Imperial headquarters.

An official bulletin reports the action and that the Japs are in hot pursuit of the retreating Russians, but it does not mention any particulars about the fighting.

Tokio, March 16, 4 p.m.—The Japs occupied Singching (Singking) March 13. Singking (or Yenden) is situated about 80 miles almost due east of Mukden.

Santoupu, eight miles north of Tie Pass, March 15th, evening. — The Russians have abandoned their advanced positions on the Fan River, where the desperate attacks of the Japs on Tuesday were repulsed, and have fallen back upon the defences at Tie Pass. A desperate, bloody battle is now raging north of Tie Pass.

Old Boys' Reunion.

JULY 24th AND 25th HAVE BEEN SELECTED AS THE DATES.

A meeting of the general committee of the Old Boys' Reunion was held in the Council Chamber of the city building yesterday afternoon. Mr. Wm. Johnson, chairman, presided and a number of the committee were in attendance.

The first and important matter discussed was that of the dates when the Reunion would be held. It was decided that the two principal days would be Monday and Tuesday, July 24th and 25th. It is expected that a large number will arrive here on the Saturday preceding, to be here over Sunday. The reception committee will be on hand that day to receive those who come and extend to them a hearty welcome.

Some other matters of a minor nature were brought up and discussed. As the time has been arranged the various committees will now be in a position to get to work and map out details.

A throng of the fair sex to-day visited Miss Campbell's millinery parlors, on Front street, and were much pleased at the display made of the latest fashions in head-gear. The list of spring and summer fashions was complete, and the great variety of beautiful colors rendered it easy for ladies of the most fastidious tastes to discover something appropriate for themselves. A very unique and novel shaped hat is the Charlotte Corday, which is slightly of the mushroon type in front in its scoop shape, and shows trimming underneath next the face. THEY HEARD THREATS.

Crown Continues Its Evidence in King Township Arson Case.

Toronto, March 16.—The King Township arson case is dragging along in the Criminal Sessions before Judge Morgan. The Crown has not yet concluded its evidence for the prosecution. A number of witnesses testified they heard Godson make threats against Bell, but they thought it was all idle talk. They would have thought no more about the matter had there not been any fires. Mrs. Elizabeth Hunter saw two people running from the fire towards and into the swamp. One was a man, but could not tell whether the other was a man in a long coat or a woman.

Neil Campbell said he met Godson after the suit in the Division Court had been decided in Bell's favor. Godson told him he "would have satisfaction."

Leslie, agent for a proposed lobster trust, to enter the combine. This means that the lobster trust is a certainty. It will reach Canada also.

T. BLACKBURN.

DECLARED INSANE.

Mrs. Dee Will Be Committed to the London Asylum.

Woodstock, March 16.—At 7 o'clock last evening the jury in the Dee case, after being out one hour, returned a verdict that the accused Mrs. Lena Dee, was insane, and therefore unfit to receive her trial at the present time. She will accordingly be committed to London Asylum.

If she ever regains her reason, the charge of murder will be proceeded with, as she is not discharged. The decision to try Mrs. Dee solely on the question of her mental fitness to receive her trial at the present time was decided upon after Mr. Blackstock had made application for the same, and the medical expert testimony indicated that there was great doubt as to her mental capacity.

For the defence, Rev. Mr. McArthur and Rev. Mr. Kelly, former pastors of the accused, declared their belief that she was not responsible for her actions. The addresses of Crown Prosecutor Wilson and Mr. Blackstock followed. The former stated that if the jury found the prisoner sane her trial could not take place at the present court, as another jury was not secured. If declared insane, she would be committed to an asylum, and if at any time in the future she regained her reason, she would be put upon trial on the charge of murder.

Chief Justice Falconbridge addressed the jury at some length. His remarks were slightly in favor of the contention that Mrs. Dee was insane.

Buffalo, N. Y., March 16.—Mrs. Olive G. Sternaman, whose trial in Haldimand County, Ontario, on a charge of murdering her husband attracted much attention some time ago, has won her suit which she brought against the Metropolitan Insurance Company to recover $1,600, the amount of insurance on the life of her husband.

The Court of Appeals, the highest tribunal in the State, Tuesday affirmed the findings of the lower courts, which decided without execution in favor of Mrs. Sternaman.

Just what the full amount of the interest and costs will be does not transpire, but the original judgment has been multiplied by half a dozen times, which will make a neat sum for both the plaintiff and her lawyers.

Identity of Senators.

Ottawa, March 16.—Senator Casgrain yesterday moved the second reading of his bill requiring railways to carry members of Parliament free on the production of a card of identity. He argued that so long as the Railway Companies issued passes, members were made to feel a certain obligation, and this was not in accordance with the spirit of the act of Parliament which compels the railways to carry members of Parliament free. Although there was some opposition, the bill received its second reading on a vote of 21 to 10.

Puts Questions to Sir Wilfrid That Annoy the Premier.

In Doing So the Leader of the Opposition Puts the Drafting of the Autonomy Bills in a Very Clear Light—Sir Wilfrid, However, Does Not Vouchsafe Any Further Information—Other Speakers.

Ottawa, March 16.—Upon motion to go into supply yesterday,

Mr. Borden's Speech.

Mr. Borden said he proposed to discuss certain passages of the letter written by Premier Haultain to Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Mr. Haultain's letter would of course be laid on the table, together with other documents bearing on the bill. The situation which had developed between the month of October last and the present was, Mr. Borden said, a very peculiar one. The question of provincial autonomy for the Territories had been discussed in 1901 and 1902 and again in 1903. A formal resolution had been moved in the House, declaring that the time had arrived when autonomy should be granted to the Territories.

Mr. Borden said he distinctly stated when the resolution was introduced that it would take some time to arrange the details of autonomy. He realized that there should be no haste.

Their Brute Majority.

The Government benches voted solidly against the resolution, but on Oct. 4 last, the Prime Minister, in the midst of an election campaign, awoke to the gravity of the situation. He suddenly concluded that the question must be taken up, and wrote Premier Haultain accordingly. The former Minister of the Interior, Mr. Borden said, had also pursued a peculiar course. When the resolution favoring autonomy was before the House, Mr. Sifton spoke against it, described it as mischievous and said serious results might follow from it. Mr. Sifton had also explained that the question could not be taken up while the Minister of Finance was in Europe. Yet two years later, in the absence of both the Minister of Finance and the Minister of the Interior, the presence of whom had been declared absolutely necessary, the measure was brought down on Feb. 23 last. In spite of that indecent haste, not a single step had since been taken to advance the bill.

Premier's Profound Contempt.

The Prime Minister, Mr. Borden said, had shown a profound contempt for constitutional precedent. He brought the bill before the House, supposedly as the product of the collection of wisdom of the Cabinet, yet soon transpired that two of his colleagues had not even been consulted in the preparation of the bill. That circumstance the Premier had not yet explained.

More extraordinary still was the treatment accorded the representatives of the Northwest Territories. The Government of the Territories was summoned to Ottawa to discuss with a sub-committee of the Federal Cabinet the terms of the autonomy bill. It would naturally be supposed that the territorial representatives would be consulted on the important question of education, but they were not consulted. The exponent of liberty of 1896 was the tyrant of to-day.

The Net Result.

From Premier Haultain's letter it appeared that he had not seen the educational clauses of the bill until noon of the day upon which it was introduced in the House. The net result was that the Minister of the Interior was not consulted, the Minister of Finance was not consulted and the Premier of the Territories was not consulted.

"The question naturally arises," said Mr. Borden, "whom did the Prime Minister consult?"

Mr. Borden said he would like to know of any amendments to the bills that were under the consideration of the Government. He would like also to know the personnel of the sub-committee of the Cabinet that dealt with the question. Was one of its members charged with special guardianship of the interests of the Territories? Mr. Borden referred to a paragraph published in the Government organ here, to the effect that some questions arising out of the autonomy bill were to be referred to the Supreme Court. If, he said, the bill was properly prepared in the first place there would be no necessity for such a reference.

Sir Wilfrid's Reply.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier was encouraged by loud applause from the Government benches as he rose to reply. He referred to Mr. Borden's suggestion that the autonomy bill had been hastily prepared. His heart sank when he reflected that in the sight of the Leader of the Opposition he was always approaching questions in the wrong way. As to the delay in proceeding with the bill, Sir Wilfrid pointed out that the member for East Grey had specially requested the second reading to be deferred for some time, so that the west could be heard from. He thought he was pleasing Dr. Sproule as well as his leader by putting this matter off. He wouldn't try to please them again.

Sir Wilfrid denied that the bill bore evidence of hasty preparation. Mr. Haultain objected to every clause in the bill, but petitions from all over the Dominion showed that the only objection to the bill brought out in the country was to the educational clauses. He admitted that, in attempting to deal with the educational question he was treading on tender grounds, and he knew that if this clause was eliminated there would be no objection to the bill.

Stickler for Confidence.

As to Mr. Haultain's charge, that he had not been consulted in regard to it, Sir Wilfrid repeated that the conferences were confidential, that no record was kept, and he still thought he, himself, had no right to give his version of what had taken place. It was a somewhat risky thing to do in the absence of a written record. Sir Wilfrid read the concluding sentence of Mr. Haultain's letter, in which he thanked the Government for their "courtesy and consideration," and another paragraph in which he said Mr. Haultain admitted the educational clauses had twice been discussed with him, once on the Friday preceeding the introduction of the bill, and again on Feb. 21, the day the bill was introduced.

"Not considered," interrupted Mr. Lennox.

"Well, Mr. Haultain called it a casual reference," the Prime Minister answered, but what might have seemed to Mr. Haultain a casual reference might have been sufficient for somebody else. That was a result of having no record."

Practical Use Gone.

"The discussion of the 21st," Sir Wilfrid continued, "disclosed the fact that Mr. Haultain and he differed on the educational clause. Mr. Haultain took the ground that section 92 of the British North America Act applied mechanically to the new Provinces, and there was no necessity of going beyond section 2 of the bill. But the Government said, "No, we don't agree with you and will prepare a clause and submit it to you." That was done, and, of course, the clause, as submitted being the view of the Government there then was no practical use in Mr. Haultain's further discussing it."

Sir Wilfrid declared, amidst Opposition laughter, that he was not called on to give Mr. Borden any more information than he had already given him.

"My hon. friend has asked me if we contemplate amendments to the bill," continued the Prime Minister. "I do not know, sir, that any wrong will be done to anybody if we are contemplating amendments. Would it be the first time for a Government, after introducing a measure, to endeavor to see whether it is possible or not to satisfy all sections of the country in that measure?"

A Delicate Subject.

I am sorry my hon. friend has treated this subject to-day a little more lightly than I would have expected of him on an occasion of this kind. What is the spectacle we have to-day? We have the spectacle of numerous petitions being presented, asking that the educational clauses should be withdrawn from the bill, and numerous other petitions asking that the bill should be passed as it is. This is a very delicate subject. It is not the first time this question of education has come before the House. In 1872-3, with regard to the New Brunswick school question, and in 1875 and 1896 there was an exhibition of sentiment and of contrary opinions.

Before Taking.

"Sir, under such circumstances, if the Government so thinks and resolves to reconsider the position we have taken, and again to look at what we are going to do, is there any man on either side of the House or throughout this broad country who will say the Government is not doing right in thinking twice before taking a final step upon this question? Sir, I claim that I have some sense of the responsibility that attaches to the Government and to those who are entrusted with the administration of the affairs of the country, and in a question of this kind, especially. When such a matter is brought up and the Government is faced with a difficulty, or, perhaps, finds difficulties which no man could have foreseen, and looking also to the violence of the sentiments which are entertained, perhaps, sir, there is some reason why a Government should be slow to take any action and should hesitate in coming to a final decision.

Violent Passions Aroused.

I have spoken of the violence of the sentiments exhibited—I do not say that offensively. I would not do so; I know that public passions, strong passions, are not always ignoble, sometimes, on the contrary, they are only the exaggeration of a noble sentiment, but even the exaggeration of a noble sentiment may lead to outbursts of public passion. I say to my hon. friend, if he wants to know, that this subject gives me a great deal to think about, and if it be possible to amend this bill the Government need not fear to consider the matter. We are thinking upon these matters, it is our duty to do so, and the result of our deliberations shall be given in due time to the House, but at the present moment I think I have given to my hon. friend all the answer to which he is entitled."

Other Speakers.

The debate was continued by W. B. Northrup, E. B. Osler, McCarthy (Calgary), Lake (Qu' Appelle), Dr. Roche (Marquette), Schaffner (Souris), Herron (Alberta), Hon. Geo. E. Foster, Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick (who declared the Government had consulted the westerners on every phase of the bills except the autonomy clauses, and that the bill was prepared to give the people of the Northwest what they have and nothing more), Bennett, Boyce (Algoma), and Dr. Sproule.

GERMANY'S RUSSIAN POLICY

Chancellor Von Buelow and Socialist Chief Cross Bitter Wordy Swords in the Reichstag Thursday.

Berlin, March 17.—Chancellor von Buelow and Herr Bebel, the Socialist leader, engaged in a bitter discussion in the Reichstag yesterday over Germany's Russian policy. The Chancellor's usual composure and good humor in debate were disturbed by the almost savage criticism of the Socialist chief, who said that Germany's "Creeping before Russia had humiliated her in the eyes of the world, and had brought her to shame." He held Von Buelow responsible for Prussia's "Engaging in the nasty work of catching fugitives from Russian military service and turning them over to agents of the autocrat and for forcing men and women whose only offence was love of liberty to leave Prussian territory at the instance of Russian spies."

A. O. U. W. Officers.

The Grand Lodge of the A. O. U. W. yesterday decided to put into effect the higher scale of rates on May 1. The following Grand Lodge officers were elected: P. G. M. W., Joseph Gibson, Ingersoll; G. M. W., J. M. Peregrine, Hamilton; Grand Foreman, C. E. Cameron, Iroquois; Grand Overseer, J. T. Allan, Mount Forest; Grand Recorder, M. D. Carder, Toronto; Grand Treasurer, F. G. Gen. Linevitch Will Be Chief.

Succeeds Kuropatkin as Commander-in-Chief in Manchuria

Russians Off to the North—Kirin and Vladivostock Now Objective of Russians, But This is Regarded as Impossible—Keen Work Promised in Race for Sungari Bridge in Ensuing Fortnight.

St. Petersburg, March 17.—It is officially announced that Gen. Kuropatkin will be replaced by Gen. Linevitch as Commander-in-Chief of the Manchurian army.

Gen. Kazibee has been appointed Commander-in-Chief of the forces at Vladivostock.

The Russians sustained a severe reverse at Tie Pass, involving the abandonment of their remaining artillery, and the Japanese have cut the railway north of Changtufu, forty miles above the Pass.

Race For the Bridge.

London, March 17.—An unconfirmed report from St. Petersburg states that General Kuropatkin will retreat, not to Harbin, but to Kirin and Vladivostock. This, however, is regarded as quite impossible, and the ensuing fortnight is expected to witness a keen race between the Russians and Japanese for the great railway bridge over the Sungari River, as it is believed that after Tie Pass there is no fortified place of sufficient strength at which to make a stand until the Russians reach Harbin, if Kuropatkin should be able to make a successful retirement thither. The correspondent of The Daily Telegraph learns that the Japanese left army advanced towards Mukden at flying speed, and the last four days covered 30, 35, 20 and 15 miles. One force was sent specially to search for General Kuropatkin and his staff, but they had already gone.

Enveloping the Russians.

St. Petersburg, March 17.—With the evacuation of Tie Pass Wednesday night the Russian army abandoned the last stronghold in Southern Manchuria and definitely turned over the section to the Japanese for the campaign of 1905. At least no other strategy is possible for General Kuropatkin, in view of his scanty supplies of ammunition and stores, the shattered condition of his army and the wide enveloping movements which the Japanese have continued almost without a stop since the Russian defeat at Mukden.

Japs in Hot Pursuit.

Tokio, March 17.—The Japanese occupied Tie Pass at midnight, March 15. Details of the occupation have not yet been received at imperial army headquarters. An official bulletin reports the action, and that the Japanese are in hot pursuit of the retreating Russians, but it does not mention any particulars about the fight.

Bloody Battle Waging.

Santoupu, Eight Miles North of Tie Pass, Manchuria, Wednesday, March 15.—(Evening)—The Russians have abandoned their advanced positions on the Fan River, where the desperate attack of the Japanese Tuesday was repulsed, and have fallen back upon the defences at Tie Pass. Previous to the retirement, the supplies of wood, etc., collected there were set on fire. A desperate bloody battle is now waging north of Tie Pass.

Japs Occupy Singching.

Tokio, March 17.—The Japanese occupied Singching (Singking) March 13.—Singking (or Yenden) is situated about 80 miles almost due east of Mukden. A report received in Tokio on March 14 from the Japanese headquarters in the field said: "In the direction of Singking our forces have been dislodging the enemy from Yingpu, eighteen miles east of Fushan, and on March 11 occupied that place."

Why Newchwang is Glad.

Newchwang, March 17.—Traffic on the Yinkow-Koupantse-Sinmintin Railroad was opened yesterday. It is probable that merchants' shipments of provisions will be unquestioned in the future. The inhabitants of Newchwang are jubilant over the capture of Tie Pass, which will release, when the river becomes free of ice, a thousand junks, which have long been detained in the upper Liao River, having on board vast accumulations of beans and bean cake.

Before the Japs Got In.

St. Petersburg, March 17.—The following despatch has been received by Emperor Nicholas from Gen. Kuropatkin, dated March 15: "The troops are traversing Tie Pass in good order. I have inspected the fourteenth division of infantry. The men seemed in good spirits. Up to the time of my departure from Tie Pass fighting had not commenced. During my progress northward I saw many troops and trains in good order. I also inspected the regiments recently from Russia, who presented an excellent appearance."

Train Service Partially Restored.

A telegram from the Command-in-Chief, dated March 14, said: "I received no further reports of fighting after the repulse of the Japanese at the Fan River. Individual soldiers and bodies of men have been rejoining their commands during the past two days. The train service is partly restored to order, the troops have been provisioned again and are ready for fighting." The Commander-in-Chief concluded with saying he had not received exact reports of the number of killed, wounded and missing, or of the losses in artillery and trains.

Will Retreat to Harbin.

Chicago, Ill., March 16.—A special cable to The Daily News from Tokio, yesterday, says: "Tie Pass, which was held by about a division of Russian troops, is now in possession of the Japanese. After a slight resistance, the Russians evacuated at midnight the strong positions they had prepared months ago, setting fire to the railway station and other buildings. The Japanese troops, which had occupied Yinpao and East Fushun, are in hot pursuit along the Kirin road. It is predicted that the Russians will retreat to Harbin. Tokio is preparing a municipal celebration of Japan's victory for Saturday."

Mikado to His Soldiers.

Tokio, March 17.—The Emperor of Japan has sent the following message to his victorious Manchurian armies:

"Since autumn the enemy erected strong defences around Mukden, held the district with a superior force and were confident of victory. Our Manchurian armies, however, forestalling the enemy, boldly and vigorously assumed the offensive, and after strenuously fighting for more than 10 days and nights through snow and bitter rain defeated their strong foe, driving them to Tie Pass, taking tens of thousands of prisoners and otherwise inflicting serious injuries. By this signal victory, our Manchurian armies have enhanced the military prestige of our country at home and abroad. We are deeply gratified by the courage and endurance with which our officers and men have been able to achieve such a great success, and we look to you for even greater exertions in the future."

Mobilization Means Revolt.

Warsaw, March 17.—One of the highest officials in Poland said yesterday: "It is all very well to talk of continuing the war; but with no leaders, no generals, no soldiers, no guns, and the theatre of war so far away, we are unable to transport troops quickly, and the war now appears to be ended. It is true we have soldiers in the empire, but it is imposible to withdraw them from Central and Southern Russia to Manchuria while the disturbances continue. All is quiet in Poland now, but let orders for mobilization be given, and we will have a revolution."

A Prince for Peace.

St. Petersburg, March 17.—Prince Mestchersky, in an article in The Grashdanin, advises the Government to promptly conclude peace, and says:

"Let us have the heroic strength to confess defeat before the world. Better conditions will be obtainable now than later, when Vladivostock and Sakhalin have fallen into the hands of the Japanese, and the conclusion of peace will prove the salvation of the country by averting internal shipwreck."

These words from such an influential reactionary as Prince Mestchersky have caused a sensation.

Japs Want German Loan.

Berlin, March 17.—The Lokal Anzeiger says Japan is sounding German financiers with reference to the placing of a Japanese loan on the German market. The results of the interchange of views are not yet known, but it is not improbable, The Lokal Anzeiger says, that bankers will agree to accept Japan's offer. The conferences thus far have been merely preliminary.

TO BLOW UP BUILDINGS.

Alarm Caused at St. Petersburg and Moscow by Threats.

St. Petersburg, March 17.—Considerable alarm has been caused here and at Moscow by the receipt of anonymous letters announcing the intention to blow up buildings. The threat as to Moscow applied particularly to the depots of army stores destined for Manchuria.

The action of the Moscow Corn Exchange in voting an address to the Emperor on the subject of his recent rescript shows the extent of the liberal movement, only two of forty-six members present raising a timid voice against the address, which contained a reference to "liberating the people," even these two later signing the address.

(London Mirror.)

What is probably the world's record in naval gunnery has just been announced at Whale Island by Capt. Percy Scott.

This feat was accomplished recently by A. Hollinghurst, A.B., who, on the Excellent, made seven hits out of ten shots on a target six feet by eight feet, at a distance varying between 1,500 and 1,600 yards.

"Attitude and action in the art of gunnery and whiskers make the man, used to be the motto in the navy twenty-five years ago," remarked Capt. Scott, "but this firing shows that one man has arrived at the standard to which every gunner should aspire.

"Hollinghurst stands now in the proud position of being the only pebble on the beach. He has made the finest firing that has ever been made by anyone in His Majesty's fleet or any other fleet, I am sure.

"We have passed through various stages in the Excellent. In one stage the gun-layer was converted into a sort of automatic delivery machine. You put a penny in the slot and he recited the drill-book by heart.

"We have now come to another period," continued Capt. Scott, "when practise is the road to gunnery and holes in the target make the man.

"Mind, I say holes in the target, not imaginary or towing target hits. I am going to have this target of Hollinghurst's modelled in silver, and presented to the men at Whale Island, with Hollinghurst's name and the date when he made the holes engraved upon it.

"You will all be able to look at it, but I hope it will not remain long the record target."

PROVINCIAL RIGHTS AND PUBLIC BENEFIT.

The Toronto News (Independent Liberal) referring to the claim of the Liberal party to have been the champions of Provincial Rights for many decades past, comments on that and Sir Wilfrid's "school clauses" for Alberta and Saskatchewan as follows:

"It is to be presumed that local self-government was not taken up as a mere cry, to serve some temporary purpose. Some principle must have been involved in a policy maintained so persistently in every phase of politics for sixty years. And we have no hesitation is saying that the principle was sound, and that it has contributed to the peace and stability of the Empire and of Canada. The principle does not rest on the supposed infallibility of the local authority. It is conceivable that the British Parliament could have made some laws for Canada better than Canada could have made them. It is conceivable that a 'strong' Governor-General could have saved Canada from some political scandals, that 'strong' Lieutenant-Governors could have saved the Provinces from some political scandals. But in the main it has been found best to allow the people to govern themselves; to make their own mistakes, to suffer by them, and to rectify them; to rise on stepping-stones of their dead selves to higher things.

"The essence of the federal system is a division of powers between the central and local authority. It is not pretended that this division was made with infallible wisdom. Western Canada may believe that it could make a better tariff for itself than is made at Ottawa. It is not beyond belief that a strong central government could give Quebec a better system of education than it now enjoys. But, on the whole, the public convenience is served by leaving trade and commerce to the Dominion Parliament and education to the Provincial. Confusion would result from allowing the Provinces to frame their own tariffs. Confusion would result from an attempt to frame and administer educational laws at Ottawa. Confusion worse confounded would result from an attempt to manage educational affairs partly from Ottawa and partly from the Provincial capitals."

A Chicago Alderman Owes His Election to Chamberlain's Cough Remedy.

"I can heartily and conscientiously recommend Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for affections of the throat and lungs," says Hon. John Shenick, 220 So. Peoria St., Chicago. "Two years ago, during a political campaign, I caught cold after being overheated, which irritated my throat and I was finally compelled to stop, as I could not speak aloud. In my extremity a friend advised me to use Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. I took two doses that afternoon and could not believe my senses when I found the next morning the inflammation had largely subsided. I took several doses that day, kept right on talking through the campaign, and I thank this medicine that I won my seat in the Council. This remedy is for sale by all druggists.

A penny saved by a miser means a dollar earned by his heirs later on.

O THE SHAMROCK.

Through Erin's Isle,
To sport awhile,
As Love and Valor wander'd
With Wit, the sprite,
Whose quiver bright
A thousand arrows squander'd;
Where-er they pass,
A triple grass
Shoots up, with dew-drops streaming,
As softly green
As emerald seen
Through purest crystal gleaming.
O the Shamrock, the green, immortal
Shamrock!
Chosen leaf
Of Bard and Chief,
Old Erin's native Shamrock!

Says Valor, "See,
They spring for me,
Those leafy gems of morning!
Says Love, "No, no,
For me they grow,
My fragrant path adorning."
But Wit perceives
The triple leaves,
And cries, "Oh, do not sever
A type that blends
Three godlike friends,
Love, Valor, Wit, for ever!"
O the Shamrock, the green, immortal
Shamrock!
Chosen leaf
Of Bard and Chief,
Old Erin's native Shamrock!

So firmly fond
May last the bond
They wove that morn together,
And ne'er may fall
One drop of gall
On Wit's celestial feather!
May Love, as twine,
His flowers divine,
Of thorny falsehood weed 'em!
May Valor ne'er
His standard rear
Against the cause of Freedom!
O the Shamrock, the green, immortal
Shamrock!
Chosen leaf
Of Bard and Chief,
Old Erin's native Shamrock!

The dear little Shamrock.

Here's the top of the evening to all who wore the green to-day.

And Kuropatkin Rielly also ran!

Shibley, Lott and Rielly can now get together and sing "There's nothing quite so easy as Home, Sweet Home."

Perhaps Reily went to look for a Shamrock for St. Patrick's day.

The ex-professor is Irish, but there is no green in his eye.

The Street Surveyor should get a bouquet of shamrocks—or real rocks—for the elegant way he looks after our streets.

The City got "soaked" in the case of Burgoyne vs. Belleville, $245 and all the costs Perhaps if we had a few more officials they might be able to leave the streets so that it would be safe to drive on them at night.

Have the bogus boxes been counted? Perhaps R'elly took one with him.

The learned Judge, in his address to the Grand Jury yesterday afternoon, charged against the defendant in the criminal libel case, but there is, at present, no indication that he will do the Rielly act.

The Mad Mullah is said to be on the rampage again. Perhaps he heard about Rielly doing the disappearance act.

Kuropatkin's backward steps will soon land him on the Russian steppes, and that's no joke.

A prominent local citizen said last night that he would bet a good cigar that the hower bridge will be carried away by the ice this spring. He bases his belief on the fact that, when the broken main was repaired last fall, a covering of rocks and cement was placed over it, thus slightly raising the bed of the river just below the bridge. The man who wants to bet the cigar says that slight raise will be enough, this spring, to cause the ice to pile up and carry away the bridge. Remember this, and we'll see what kind of a prophet this chap is in a few days.

Judging by appearances, not much more may be heard of the Autonomy Bill in the Commons this session. But enough has been done to show where Laurier stands, anyhow. He can't rub out his record.

AGED DETROIT MAN MEETS HORRIBLE FATE

CLOTHING CAUGHT FIRE AND HIS BODY BURNED TO A CRISP.

Detroit, March 16.—Pinned under a burning table, surrounded by angry flames that reached out from all sides and from the floor beneath him, aged Robert Carter slowly roasted to death, shortly before noon to-day, and his body now lies at his late residence, a blackened and unrecognizable human form.

The old man, who has been residing for several years with his niece and nephew, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Briggs, 371 Lansing avenue, was usually left alone in the house during the day, the husband and wife being absent at their occupations. At noon a 12-year-old daughter of Mrs. Briggs would come home from school and prepare dinner for herself and Mr. Carter.

It had been the custom of the old man to have the kitchen fire lighted and everything in readiness for the preparation of the noonday meal, and he was employed at this duty when it seems, his clothing caught fire from the coal stove, the lid of which was found removed. Being helpless from age and injuries received earlier in life. Mr. Carter was soon overcome by the flames. In a vain endeavor to reach the door he fell under the kitchen table, which soon became ignited.

In the meantime, Wm. Longmate, another nephew of the dead man another nephew of the dead man, found him in his terrible predicament. Longmate stopped in to pay his uncle a friendly call. As he walked towards the kitchen, he heard the crackling of flames, and entering he was appalled at the sight before him.

The burning form of his uncle lay under the table, which was all ablaze, Underneath the old man was a bed of fire, and on all side of him tongues of flame shot out. He was already dead. The clothing had been burned almost entirely from his body, and in places the flesh was burned to a crisp. The features of the old man were so blackened and distorted as to be wholly unrecognizable.

The flames, which by this time were shooting through the windows of the kitchen and reaching out toward the front part of the house, were making rapid progress when the fire department arrived, but they were soon extinguished.

Noon-day Lenten Address—Y.M.C.A.

The address was given to-day by Rev. Wm. B. Heeney on the subject "Christ." The speaker began by saying that whoever lived for the next twenty-five years would witness one of the strongest and most healthy revivals which the Christian church has ever experienced. Protestant Christendom is ready for the movement. We see the beginning of it even now in Wales and other parts. Why may we look for this revival? the speaker asked. Because materialism, which has exercised such a mighty influence on religion during the last half century is a spent force. 'Science was once thought to be in opposition to religion, but in the words of its greatest representative, Lord Kelvin, "Science is not agnostic, but a help to religion. Science positively affirms a creative power." He who admits the necessity of a Creator is surely in a frame of mind to hear what Christ has to say about the Creator and his relation to men. The search for the real Christ is proceeding along various lines. Scholars are not so much engaged to-day in defending dogmatic systems as they are in getting back to the real Christ of history; this trend of thought is seen in the historical criticism; in the work of the archaeologist; in paintings of Tessot; in the many works which have been produced of late on the Person and Work of the Holy Spirit and in other ways. The cry is to-day, as ever, "Sir, we would see Jesus." And when we have found the real Christ who lived and taught 1900 years ago in Palestine he first appears as man, Son of Man. But association with him will soon show him to be more than man, even Son of God, and experience will prove him to be the ever present Christ. This is the real Christ, the human Christ, the divine Christ, the ever present Christ. There were thirty men present.

WERE BOYS AGAIN.

OUR CITY SCHOOLS, PAST AND PRESENT, THE OCCASION OF A HAPPY GATHERING.

Until the "wee sma' hour" this morning, the dining parlor of Mr. James Wallace's establishment echoed to a flow of eloquence for over three hours, the orators being the representatives of the educational institutions of our city, who, at the invitation of Mr. F. E. O'Flynn, "Last Past" Chairman of the Board of Education, had met to pass a few hours together in talking over the past and present of our seats of learning. Fittingly the host of the evening was also the Chairman, and a "Past Master" he is in a position of that kind. He had at his right the Rev. Dr. Dyer, representing Albert College, and Mr. J. Frith Jeffers, of Belleville Business College. At his left Mr. J. Franklin Wills, Chairman of the Board of Education, and Mr. W. A. G. Hardy, Principal of the Separate School. The vice-chair was occupied by Mr. J. W. Johnson, Principal of the Ontario Business College. The excellence of the viands was attested by the length of the time the guests took to enjoy them. As will be seen the toast list was not a lengthy one, but the names of those who responded to the toasts will be a guarantee that in most cases brevity was not "the soul of wit".

The National Anthem was again sung, and the pleasant function terminated.

St. Patrick's Day, 1900.

(By the Duchess of Buckingham and Chandos.)

Och! Dublin boys, and did ye hear
The news that's goin' round,
How the Queen of Ireland's settin'
Of her foot on Irish ground!

CHORUS:

'Tis the most enchanted country
That iver ye have seen,
Where St. Patrick will be honored
By the wearin' of the green!

So pluck the Shamrock from the soil
And wear it on your breast,
'Twas won in fiercest battle
By the bravest and the best.

We're the most uplifted regiment
Bedad, we're mortal keen!
The Shamrock in our forage caps
By order of the Queen!

They may speak of boldest England,
Or of gallant little Wales,
Of lion-hearted Scotland,
But Ould Ireland never fails!

Our boys will take the biscuit—
There's no need of Blarney stone
To magnify their valor.
For they've won by that alone!

With trefoil in our helmets,
On this glad St. Patrick's Day,
Tune Erin's harps in concord,
And sing a mirthful lay!

Written on the occasion of Her late Majesty's visit to Ireland in 1900.

Bigger, Better, Broader.

Those three words will in part form the meaning of our decorative painting — paperhanging and wall paper departments for the year 1905.

1904 was the largest trade in our history for any one year notwithstanding the several small stocks shown in opposition.

Ample evidence this that the purchasing public favor the large assortment from which to select.

This year already we have placed in stock nearly sixty thousand rolls of the newest and finest of wall papers possible to find and with twenty years of hunting we know where to find the game—.

For your convenience and our profit we have a staff of workmen engaged for 1905 numbering twenty. Expert workmen in their several branches—of Paperhanging — painting, decorating, graining, etc.

At the present time we have a number of our workmen executing decorative work in Toronto — we go anywhere for business — no city too large, no village too small Worry Goes to the Stomach.

TEARS DOWN THE LITTLE TELEGRAPH LINES THAT OPERATE THE DIGESTIVE PROCESSES.

How to Repair These Telegraph Lines.

I Will Gladly Give any Stomach Sufferer a Full Dollar's Worth of My Remedy Free to Try.

I ask no deposit—no reference—no security. There is nothing to risk—nothing to pay, either now or later. Any stomach sufferer who does not know my remedy may have a full dollar's worth free, if he merely writes and asks.

I willingly make this liberal offer because Dr. Shoop's Restorative is not an ordinary stomach remedy. It does not, indeed, treat the stomach itself. It goes beyond—it treats the nerves that control and operate the stomach. The nerves that wear out and break down and cause stomach trouble. For stomach trouble is really only a symptom that there is serious nerve trouble inside. That is why ordinary remedies fail. That is why my remedy succeeds. That is why I can afford to make this offer.

Yet do not misunderstand me when I say "nerves." I do not mean the nerves you ordinarily think about. I mean the automatic stomach nerves, over which your mind has no control. I have not the space here to explain to you how the nerves control the stomach, or how they may be vitalized and restored. When you write I will send you a book which will make these points clear. But this much is certain—ailing nerves cause all forms of stomach trouble—indigestion, belching, heartburn, insomnia, nervousness, dyspepsia. No stomach medicine will cure these ailments. Only nerve treatment will do that. No other remedy than Dr. Shoop's Restorative even claims to reach these nerves.

What ails the stomach nerves? Worry, probably. Mental anguish destroys their tiny fibres and tears down the telegraph lines without which the stomach has no more self-control than a sponge. Overwork will do it. Irregular habits will do it. Overeating will do it. Dissipation will do it. But the effect is the same stomach failure.

No matter how these nerves became impaired—I know a way to rebuild their strength — to restore their vigor. It is a remedy which took thirty years of my life to perfect—a remedy which is now known in more than fifty thousand communities—in more than a million homes—as Dr. Shoop's Restorative.

If you have stomach trouble and have never tried my remedy, merely write and ask. I will send you an order on your druggist, which he will accept as gladly as he would accept a dollar. He will hand you from his shelves a standard sized bottle of my prescription, and he will send the bill to me. This offer is made only to strangers to my remedy. Those who have once used the Restorative do not need this evidence. There are no conditions—no requirements. It is open and frank and fair. It is the supreme test of my limitless belief. All that I ask you to do is to write—write to-day.

Veterans and Their Lands

(Kingston News and Times.)

The veterans who have been waiting for the opportunity of locating their lands in order that they might settle on them and make homes for themselves in their old age, have been, in many cases, disappointed. Thousands of those entitled have been kept waiting for surveys to be made. The new Government has, however, taken the matter up, and Mr. Whitney has pledged his word to press the surveys.

The regulation permitting of only one location to every square mile, might well be reconsidered. For in a case where only one lot is taken up in a square of 640 acres, the forest area would be too great for family life. Of course where land is simply reserved by veterans, and remains unsettled and unimproved, it is a disadvantage to others who may live on adjoining lots and to have many unoccupied lots in a community would be an evil.

Insolvency Sale

If not sold by tender on the above date the same will be sold by public auction at 10 o'clock a.m. on Friday, the 24th day of March, 1905, subject to a reserve bid. INTERESTING PERSONALITY.

PEN PICTURE OF HON. W. F. G. HAULTAIN, PRIME MINISTER OF THE NORTHWEST TERRITORIES.

The Ottawa correspondent of the Toronto Star contains a very interesting pen picture of the Hon. F. W. G. Haultain, Premier of the Northwest Territories, who commands some attention in these stirring days of Autonomy bills and Separate school questions. Mr. Haultain was introduced at the Press gallery dinner the other night as a potentate whose domain was lessened by half, and whose authority and importance were multiplied by two. The newspaper men who had a chance of looking over him came to the conclusion that he was a man who would be equal to any position.

Mr. Haultain's is a strong quiet personality. No stretch of imagination can picture him as carried out of himself, and saying things that he would regret afterwards. A very, calm, judicial mind lies at the back of his dearest convictions, and is reflected in the dispassionate language in which his views are couched. His moderation of statement must not be mistaken for weakness. It is the reserved force of a man who is quite sure of himself. What he aims at is absolute clearness of expression, and what he elects to lose in the way of flowers of speech he gains in vigor of thought and perspicuity. Mr. Haultain scorns to be rhetorical for let us say, three reasons—because it is detrimental to good logic—because it is outside his temperament, and because it would be bad form. The man who will be Premier of the new Provinces has the Anglo-Saxon contempt for "slopping over," and the scorn of the upper classes for abandoning oneself to large emotions. Mr. Haultain is well-born, comes of a race of British soldiers and follows the code of an English gentleman, which is very much the same as that of the ancient Stoic and the red Indian, namely, to allow nothing in fate or circumstances to excite one out of one's pose of easy indifference. It is the nil admirari attitude that Horace talks about. With the aristocratic Englishman it is no longer a pose but a habit, and Mr. Haultain shows it in the degree that one would expect from his birth and training. He differs radically, I am told from the provisions of the Autonomy bill, thinks that there would be one province instead of two, and that the educational clauses are ultra vires of the Federal Parliament, but he does not deal in heroics nor try to set the heather afire. Perhaps a larger measure of elective institutions may change. Mr. Haultain's methods of procedure, but so far he has displayed none of these demagogical arts which ally themselves with responsible government. If Mr. Haultain, under the new conditions, chooses to go on in the old way, the Province of Saskatchewan, if it acknowledges his influence should be distinguished by the sweet reasonableness of its politics. The prospective Premier considers it bad taste and worse tactics to get hot under the collar about anything.

Exteriorly Mr. Haultain is of middle height, spare, sinewy, bronzed of face, and moustached. He is somewhere in his forties but he does not show his years. The impression given is of a man in the prime of his faculties the sound mind in the sound body, and both of them promising to wear well. He has lived in the Northwest for a long time, but he is still an Englishman in dress, manners and speech. His accent is not imported. It does not rub off in spots, and will not come off in the wash. In short, it is quite natural, and, if anything were lacking to prove it genuine, there is the English intonation also — the rising inflection, I suppose, they call it—which is something the make-believe Englishman entirely forgets.

It must not be counted against Mr. Haultain that he smokes cigarettes He likes his pipes strong and his tobacco flavored. The cigarettes are a concession to fashion. People who have read Sir Gilbert Parker's novels will remember a most charming and unusual person named Pierre who was always talking like a book and smoking cigarettes of the Egyptian variety. Nobody but Sir Gilbert Parker ever ran across this Pierre in the Northwest Territories and most of us were inclined to discredit his pictures of that vast and interesting region because Pierre could not be found. In defence of Sir Gilbert it may be urged that the best fiction has a foundation of truth. and he would hardly have introduced Egyptian cigarettes into the literature of our great West without having seen something that would bear him out. In view of all the circumstances I am disposed to adopt the theory that Sir Gilbert took dinner one day with Mr. Haultain, and that thereafter Pierre was equipped with his cigarette as a delicate compliment to the Premier of the Northwest.

ENGLISH RAILROADS

A NOTED WRITER POINTS OUT WHY THEY ARE SAFER THAN AMERICAN AND CANADIAN ROADS.

A question that has been the subject of many discussions and numerous articles during the past few years is the persistent slaughter of human beings and the enormous loss of property the result of accidents on the railways of this continent. The statistics compiled have indeed been appalling; but when a comparison is made with the English railroads the case for Canadian and American management looks even blacker.

The most recent contribution to this discussion is made by James Davenport Whelpley in the March number of The World's Work. "Why English Railroads are Safe" is the title of a most interesting and instructive article. That English railroads are safe, that they are operated at minimum risk to life and limb of passengers, employees and others who cross or frequent the tracks is proven by statistics. In 1903 there were 6,167 collisions and 4,476 derailments on the American railroads. In the same year in England there were 111 collisions and 80 derailments. The American railroads only carried 655 million passengers on a track mileage of 200,000, while the English carried 1,200 millions on a track mileage of 22,152. The comparison is indeed startling. The secret of the difference in the results of the operations is that in England the "human factor" is reduced to a minimum, and the least possible dependence is placed upon the judgment of employees and passengers. The American roads employ 1,189,315 persons; the English roads 575,834. Mechanical devices are used in England wherever possible to do so; and every provision is taken for the safety of trains, employees and the travelling public. The entire safety of the roads is obtained through the following arrangements:

The use of the block system on all double-track roads.

The use of the electric "staff," or ticket system, on single-track roads.

Protecting by automatic, interlocking gates and signals, the few crossings still maintained at grade.

Excluding the public from the right of way of the railroad by substantial barriers and by legally imposing heavy fines for trespass, but at the same time providing ample facilities for overhead or underground crossings for pedestrians and vehicles.

The free use of automatic devices for track, trains and operation, thus reducing the "human factor" to the lowest possible point.

Maintaining a department of the government with authority to investigate all accidents, and to suggest measures for preventing repetition of them.

The enforcement of national laws compelling the operation of all railroads with the maximum of safety, even to the point of prescribing systems or devices to be used.

And last, the practical utilization of outraged public sentiment in compelling immediate reform in cases of gross mismanagement. The companies have reduced the "human factor," but it is the people who force them to it.

Public opinion in England is a tangible, practical, working force, which can be utilized to secure almost any desired change in affairs touching the comfort, safety or welfare of the people. There is no good nature shown in the treatment of corporations or individuals trenching on what are held to be the rights of British citizens. Once aroused, and it does not take overly much to arouse it, public indignation is no flash in the pan; it is powerful, lasting and effective. The railways do not control the people in England. Accidents there do not receive but passing notice. It takes but a very slight accident from the American point of view to set this great force of public opinion in motion. Then, if a corporation or an individual is to blame, the guilty party is hunted to earth, and in the end pays damages in money and in loss of prestige, and is put under increased surveillance calculated to prevent a repetition of the accident. It is this power that supports the government in its efforts to make English railroads safe. It is this power that in reality has brought such a degree of safety to English railroads.

The lesson is one for the people of Canada, as well as for those of the United States. The passengers killed on Canadian railways in 1903, according to the Statistical Year Book, were 2.39 per million carried; in the United States, 0.53 per million; in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, 0.07. The passengers injured on Canadian railways in the same year, according to the same authority, were 11.06 per million carried; in the United States, 10.20 per million, and in the United Kingdom, 1.43 per million. In England in 1903 the total number of passengers killed was 25; total number of employees, 9. In Canada in the same year the total number of passengers killed was 53; employees, 186. Evidently there is in this country a call for the exercise of a strong and healthy public sentiment in favor of the protection of human life.

CLOSE SHAVING.

(Harper's Weekly.)

The following is told of a politician in a Pennsylvania town well known for his arden support of the principles of the prohibition party. According to the physician who was consulted by this man, who fancied himself quite ill, he was told that there was really nothing the matter with him. "What you need," said the doctor, "is a stimulant — a little whiskey now and then will make you all right in no time."

"Whiskey!" gasped the politician, "why doctor, my folks wouldn't stand such a thing for a minute! Don't you know that I am a prohibitionist?"

"I think," replied the physician, "that the difficulty may be overcome. I'll send you a jug of excellent liquor. You'll take it in hot water from three to four times a day."

"But, doctor," persisted the prohibitionist, "when I send for the hot water, the family may suspect something."

"You shave, don't you?" suggested the physician. "Send your shaving-mug downstairs. The hot water may be sent to you in that."

A short time after, the physician called to see how his patient was getting on. Every one in the house appeared to be greatly perturbed. In response to the doctor's surprised query, the family chorused:

"Oh, he's all right physically, doctor, but we really think he's quite out of his mind. Why, he's been shaving himself every hour or so for a week."

SUPERIOR MERIT.

Remarkable Curative Properties of a Remedy for Indigestion and Stomach Weakness.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, a preparation for the cure of dyspepsia and the various forms of indigestion and stomach trouble, owes its great success as a cure for these troubles to the fact that it is prepared for disease and weakness of the stomach and digestive organs only, and is not recommended or advised for any other disease.

It is not a cure-all, but for any stomach trouble it is undoubtedly the safest, most sensible remedy that can be advised with the prospect of a permanent cure. It is prepared in tablet form, pleasant to taste, composed of vegetable and fruit essences, pure pepsin and Golden Seal, every one of which act effectively in digesting the food eaten, thereby resting and invigorating the weak stomach; rest is nature's cure for any disease, but you cannot rest the stomach unless you put into it something that will do its work or assist in the digestion of food.

That is exactly what Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets do, one grain of the digestive principle contained in them will digest 3,000 grains of meat, eggs or similar wholesome foods, they will digest the food whether the stomach is in working order or not, thereby nourishing the body and resting the stomach at the same time, and REST and NOURISHMENT is nature's cure for any weakness.

In persons run down in flesh and appetite these tablets build up the strength and increase flesh, because they digest flesh-forming food which the weak stomach cannot do, they increase the flow of gastric juice and prevent fermentation, acidity and sour watery risings.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets can be found at all drug stores at 50 cents per package.

The Sensitive Plant.

Why does the sensitive plant collapse on being touched? Louis Lapicque gives an interesting answer to this question in Die Umschau. In India, where this plant grows wild, it furnishes food for cattle and deer. But when walked over it collapses and looks withered and uninviting, thus gaining an advantage in the struggle for existence.

Cheese—Firm, unchanged; receipts, 1422.

CATTLE MARKETS.

Cables Unchanged—Hogs 5c to 15c Higher at Buffalo.

London, March 16.—Live cattle are quoted at 10¾c to 12¼c per lb.; refrigerator beef, 8½c to 9c per lb.; sheep, 12c to 13c per lb.

TORONTO LIVE STOCK.

Receipts of live stock were 77 car loads, composed of 814 cattle, 3020 hogs, 245 sheep and yearling lambs and about 75 calves.

A limited number of shipping cattle sold all the way from $4.50 to $4.90 per cwt. and one choice pair sold at $5 per cwt.; the bulk of export steers sold at $4.60 to $4.80 per cwt.

There was a fair demand for the best cattle. Choice picked lots of heifers and steers sold at $4.25 to $4.40, and one or two lots good enough for export sold at $4.50 to $4.60; loads of good at $3.75 to $4; fair to good, $3.50 to $3.75; medium, $3.25 to $3.40; common, $3.12½ to $3.25; good cows at $3.25 to $3.50; common cows at $2.50 to $3; canners, $1.50 to $2.

There was a good demand for well-bred steers. The farmers of Ontario are more interested in improved stock than ever before. Feed is too high to waste upon common scrub stock. The demand is for the high-class cattle at the highest price, yet there are a large number of the cheap inferior kind coming forward. Well-bred steers, 1100 to 1200 lbs. each, sold at $4.25 to $4.50; steers, 1000 to 1100 lbs. each, sold at $4 to $4.25; light steers, 800 to 950 lbs. each, at $3.35 to $3.65 per cwt.

About 30 milch cows and springers sold all the way from $22 to $55 each. Trade in milch cows is not as good as a couple of weeks ago. One dealer was offering two cows that cost $80 in the country, and the best bid he got was $30 for the pair, altho he offered to take $55. The cows were unsold at the close of the market.

The bulk of the calves offered were of common to medium quality. Wesley Dunn quotes prices from $3.50 to $6 per cwt., but something of choice quality would bring $6.50 per cwt.

On account of light deliveries and a good demand prices were firmer. Export ewes sold at $4.50 to $5.25 per cwt.; bucks, $3.50 to $4.25 per cwt.; yearling lambs grain-fed ewes and wethers, $6.75 to $7.25 per cwt.; barnyard lambs, $5.50 to $6.50; spring lambs, $4 to $8 each, according to quality.

Receipts were large, 3020, all of which were bought by Mr. Harris, at unchanged quotations. Selects $[illegible], light and fats at $5.75 per cwt., fed and watered.

EAST BUFFALO CATTLE MARKET.

Sheep and Lambs—Receipts, 6000 head; slow and steady; native lambs, $6.50 to $8.40; western, $8 to $8.25; wethers, $6 to $6.25; ewes, $5.75 to $6; sheep, mixed, $2.50 to $6.

NEW YORK LIVE STOCK.

New York, March 16.—Beeves—Receipts, none; nothing doing in live cattle; feeling steady; exports to-morrow, 70 cattle.

Marconi Married.

London, March 17.—The marriage of Guglielmo Marconi to the Honorable Beatrice O'Brien, half sister of Lord Inchiquin, took place yesterday at St. George's Church, Hanover-square. Signor Marconi's mother and brother, the latter being best man, came from Italy for the ceremony. Lord Inchiquin gave away the bride, who was attended by four bridesmaids. The couple afterwards started on their honeymoon, which will be spent in Ireland. They expect to sail for New York March 25. Later, they will be the guests of King Victor Emmanuel and Queen Helena at the Quirinal.

Old Cabinet Returns.

Rome, March 17.—After two weeks of fruitless attempt to form a new Cabinet, Deputy Fortis yesterday declined the task, and the members of the old Giolitti Cabinet held a council under the presidency of King Victor Emmanuel, who decided that they should all return to office.

What is that which is lengthened by being cut at both ends? Answer—A ditch.

There can be a difference of opinion on most subjects, but there is only one opinion as to the reliability of Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator. It is safe, sure and effectual.

What coat is finished without buttons and put on wet? Answer—A coat of paint.

Are you a sufferer with corns? If you are, get a bottle of Holloway's Corn Cure. It has never been known to fail.

If you were to ride a donkey what fruit would you resemble? Answer—A pair.

Sudden transition from a hot to a cold temperature, exposure to rain, sitting in a draught, unseasonable substitution of light for heavy clothing, are fruitful causes of colds and the resultant cough so perilous to persons of weak lungs. Among the many medicines for bronchial disorders so arising, there is none better than Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. Try it and become convinced. Price 25 cents.

Why is bread like the sun? Answer—Because it rises from the yeast.

They Are Carefully Prepared.—Pills which dissipate themselves in the stomach cannot be expected to have much effect upon the intestines, and to overcome costiveness the medicine administered must influence the action of these canals. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are so made, under the supervision of experts, that the substance in them intended to operate on the intestines is retarded in action until they pass through the stomach to the bowels.

Name something with two heads and one body. Answer—A barrel.

A Small Pill, but Powerful.—They that judge of the powers of a pill by its size, would consider Parmelee's Vegetable Pills to be lacking. It is a little wonder among pills. What it lacks in size it makes up in potency. The remedies which it carries are put up in these small doses, because they are so powerful that only small doses are required. The full strength of the extracts is secured in this form and do their work thoroughly.

What black thing enlightens the world? Answer—Ink.

A Requisite for the Rancher.—On the cattle ranges of the West, where men, and stock are far from doctors and apothecaries, Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil is kept on hand by the intelligent as a ready made medicine, not only for many human ills, but as a horse and cattle medicine of surpassing merit. A horse and cattle rancher will find matters greatly simplified by using this Oil.

An Irishman gave his wife away by talking in his sleep. That is nothing. Plenty of wives give their husbands away by talking while awake.

It is worse than madness to neglect a cough, or cold which is easily subdued if taken in time but becomes, when left to itself, the forerunner of consumption and premature death. Inflammation, when it attacks the delicate tissue of the lungs and bronchial tubes, travels with perilous rapidity; then do not delay, get a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, the medicine that grasps this formidable foe of the human body, and drives it from the system. This medicine promotes a free and easy expectoration, subdues the cough, heals the diseased parts, and exerts a most wonderful influence in curing consumption, and other diseases of the throat and lungs. If parents wish to save the lives of their children, and themselves from much anxiety, trouble and expense, let them procure a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, and whenever a child has taken cold, has a cough or hoarseness, give the Syrup according to directions.

Linked by Fate

BY CHARLES GARVICE

Author of "The Verdict of the Heart," "A Heritage of Hate," "Nell of Shorne Mills," "Paid For," "A Modern Juliet," Etc.

He threw himself on the bed at last and slept; but it was only to dream of the island, only to go over the scene of the marriage and the too few days that followed it.

Letchford, going to him in the morning, found him asleep, but tossing restlessly, and returned to Lady Letchford with a doleful shake of the head.

But when Mannering appeared at breakfast he was, outwardly at least, calmer and more like a man in a normal condition.

"I'm afraid I upset and distressed last night, Lady Letchford," he said with grave apology. "The—the shock—"

"That's all right. Blanche understood," said Letchford, cheerily. "Have some more bacon—it's of no use offering you anything else, because no one eats anything at breakfast but bacon. Shall I go with you to Mr. Tressider, Vane? I will, if you like."

"We will do anything and everything you like, Lord Lesborough," murmured Lady Letchford.

Mannering started at the "Lord Lesborough," and abruptly set down his coffee cup which was on its way to his lips.

"No, I think I'll go alone," he said; and soon after breakfast he set off.

Mr. Tressider was one of the old-fashioned lawyers who stick to the Inns. His office was in Grey's, and Mannering, as he mounted the steep and not too clean stairs, paused and looked absently at the trees in which the rooks had nested and brought out their young; he did not seem in any hurry to put in his formal claim to the title.

A confidential clerk, of as old a fashion as his master, received Mannering, and with a grave earnestness ushered him into the presence of the lawyer.

Mr. Tressider came to meet him with outstretched hand, and exclaimed with intense satisfaction and pleasure:

"Lord Lesborough! At last! How do you do? I need scarcely say that I am glad to see you! My advertisement will be sufficient proof of that."

"I've seen none," said Mannering. "I've been abroad—been wrecked. I heard the—the bad news for the first time last night, from my friend, Sir Charles Letchford—"

Mr. Tressider nodded; he had a nod which Lord Butleigh would not have been ashamed to own.

"Quite so; quite so! I have the honor of Sir Charles Letchford's acquaintance. So, of course, you know the—er—sad circumstances which have placed you in possession of the title. Very sad; very sad! But I am very glad to see you, my lord."

The title was still strange to Mannering and he moved uneasily.

"All the more glad," continued the old lawyer, "because at one time we almost feared that you had completely disappeared, in fact, were lost. Of course, we heard of the wreck of the Alpina. I am so rejoiced you were saved! I have done the best I could during your absence, and I think the business of the estate has been carried on as you would have wished it to be."

Mannering nodded. It all seemed so unreal, so impossibly. Why, a few months ago he had been a mere nobody, of no consequence, a kind of adventurer, free to do and go as he willed, in whose affairs no one was interested. And now— He looked round the snugly furnished office, at the white-haired, smiling, deferential old lawyer as if the whole thing were a dream from which he should presently awake.

"Of course you will go down to Lesborough at once," continued Mr. Tressider. "Do you propose living there, or will you go into the town house? It has been closed for some time; you know that the late earl was—er—economical? He amassed a large fortune; you will benefit by his economy and prudence, my lord!"

Vane gazed absently at the window, through the grimy panes of which he could see the rooks which had attracted his attention as he entered; and they still seemed to have more interest for him than the lawyer's remarks.

"I think I'll go to Lesborough," he said, at last, but with an indifference which disappointed Mr. Tressider, who had expected the new earl to display some eagerness if not excitement. "I haven't made any plans."

"Quite so; quite so! Too early yet; you have scarcely realized your sudden accession to the title, the change in your life. I will write to the steward, Mr. Holland—you remember him?—he will want to make some preparations. Dear, dear, how glad I am to find you are alive! None of your friends can be more rejoiced, I assure you, my lord. Strange"—he smiled and paused—"I was just writing to the next heir. I am afraid you can scarcely expect him to share in my satisfaction."

Vane looked interested for the first time.

"The next heir?" he said, enquiringly.

"Yes; your cousin, Mr. Julian Shore. He wrote to me, and called on me when poor Lord Augustus and his boy died, and we feared you were lost in the Alpina. He was, very naturally—er—interested in the question of the succession."

"How can he, with the name of Shore, be the next heir?" asked Vane.

"Oh, don't you know? Weren't you aware that there was a feud between his father and the late earl? So great and bitter that he discarded the name of Mannering and took the name of Shore, which Mr. Julian now bears."

"I never heard of him," said Mannering. "I'm afraid he will be very disappointed at my turning up," he added, grimly.

"No doubt; no doubt," asserted Mr. Tressider, dryly.

"What kind of man is he?" asked Mannering.

Mr. Tressider hesitated. It was the sort of question which a cautious old lawyer would not be disposed to answer very readily.

"He is a young man about five-and-twenty, I should say—a remarkably good looking young fellow; not like the Mannerings, by the way; but dark, very dark. His mother was a Spaniard. He has very nice manners—nothing could be more tactful and—er—proper than his way of regarding his claim to the title and estates."

"Is he poor or rich?" asked Vane.

"Well, he is not particularly well off. He has a small income, left him by his father, and he makes a little in some way on the Stock Exchange, I fancy; but I am not quite sure. Of course, I knew his father, but I had not seen Mr. Julian since he was a lad until the other day."

"Is he married?" asked Vane.

"No; oh, no! I asked him that question. By the way, Lord Lesborough, it is one I should like to ask you. I am under the impression that you are a bachelor."

Vane looked away to the window again.

"I have no wife," he said, gravely.

Mr. Tressidor nodded with almost obvious relief. For the moment, as Vane hesitated, he had dreaded that he should hear that the young earl had married—and probably beneath his present rank.

"Ah, yes, yes!" he murmured. "Plenty of time; though I trust I may have the pleasure of seeing a Countess of Lesborough before long."

Vane rose, but Mr. Tressider extended his hand appealingly.

"Oh, pray don't go yet, my lord," he said; "there are so many things I want to speak to you about, to arrange. And—er—perhaps the first subject is the important and inevitable one of—er—money. I do not know whether you need any at the present moment—you will excuse me?"

Vane smiled.

"I have a few shillings," he said.

Mr. Tressider nodded as if this were not the least satisfactory moment of the interview.

"Quite so; quite so! I will make arrangements—will pay a sum, as large as you please, into the bank this afternoon. Meanwhile, you will permit me to be your banker. Let me see. I have some notes and will not trouble you to cash a cheque!"

He went to the safe and from his cash box took out a little pile of notes, counted them and laid them on the table before Vane.

"There is a hundred and twenty pounds there, I think you will find. It is fortunate that I had just received a payment this morning. If that is not sufficient I will send a clerk to the bank—"

Vane smiled gravely.

"I sha'n't spend more than a hundred and twenty before to-morrow," he said.

As he spoke the door opened and the clerk brought in the usual piece of paper with a visitor's name written on it.

Mr. Tressider looked rather embarrassed.

"Strange coincidence!" he said. "It is Mr. Julian Shore. Ask Mr. Shore to kindly wait—"

Vane looked up quickly. "No, no. Will you let him come in? I should like to see him."

Mr. Tressider nodded and the clerk went out and ushered in a tall, thin young man with a remarkably handsome face and a graceful bearings. He was almost as dark as a typical Spaniard, with eyes that were well nigh black, and screened by long silky lashes.

As he entered, he looked from the lawyer—still rather embarrassed—to Vane; then his eyes fell on the sheaf of notes, and the black orbs seemed to deepen suddenly, swiftly, but in an instant the fleeting expression had vanished and given place to one of courteous curiosity.

"I beg your pardon, Mr. Tessider," he said in a singularly soft and low voice. "I did not know you were engaged—"

"Pray take a seat, Mr. Shore," said Mr. Tressider, "you have called at a most auspicious—" the word seemed rather inappropriate, not to say heartless, and he paused and stumbled in search of a better, but failed to find one, and so gave up the idea of "breaking" the news to the next heir and blurted out the introduction.

"I must make you two gentlemen known to each other. Mr. Shore, this is Mr. Mannering—tut, tut! I mean Lord Lesborough."

Vane, with a feeling of pity and sympathy, was watching the man whose hopes he was destroying, and he saw the polite look of inquiry, doubt and then dismay and pain which passed over the dark, handsome face. The lids fell over the dark eyes, as if their owner desired to hide them.

"Lord—Lesborough!" fell from his lips, which had grown almost white. "Lord Lesborough! Then—then—"

"Exactly!" put in Mr. Tressider, as the soft voice broke and fell away. "Mr. Mannering was not lost in the Alpina. He was rescued and has only just returned to London; has indeed only been here with me a few minutes. Of course, I should have let you know—"

It was an awkward, a trying moment for both the young men. Vane felt as if he had been guilty of inexcusable meanness in not getting drowned; and with a flush and a frown he rose and held out his hand.

"I' sorry—" he began, then he shrugged his shoulders. What could he say?

But Julian Shore had recovered from the shock, and rising instantly he took Vane's strong, firm hand in his soft, white one; a smile glittered in his eyes and curved his rather thin lips, and the low, musical voice said:

"And you are the new earl! Well"—he drew a quick, short breath, then he shrugged his shoulders—"we can't both have the title, and—Lord Lesborough, I assure you that I am heartily glad that you are alive!"

Nothing could have been better done; and Vane, feeling if anything still more guilty and ashamed of his existence, gripped gratefully the white hand of the disappointed man.

"Thanks," he said. "Thanks! I'm almost sorry that I didn't go down with the ship. You'd have made a better earl than I shall, Mr. Shore."

"Oh, come, come!" murmured Mr. Shore, laughing softly. "Don't say that—and—we are cousins, aren't we? I hope you'll call me Julian!"

CHAPTER XI.

Would he call him "Julian?" Of course Vane was pleased by such good nature and magnanimity displayed by the man between whom and the prospect of an earldom he had stepped.

"Certainly—Julian," he said with so much lighter a tone in his voice that Mr. Tressider was surprised. "And of course you'll call me 'Vane'; we are cousins, as you say, and, though we haven't met before, I hope we shall be friends. I only heard of my good fortune last night, and I am a bit confused. I see it is lunch time. Mr. Tressider, will you let us off for an hour or two? I should like to go out and get something to eat with—Julian."

The old lawyer smiled, but rather ruefully, as he thought that the new earl was likely to be rather an erratic client.

"Oh, well!" he said, with a shrug of his shoulders. "I'll wire to Holland to say you may come to Lesborough at any moment, and I hope you will pay me a visit before long. There is much to be done, to be seen to."

"That's all right," responded Vane, serenely. "I'll leave everything in your hands, Mr. Tressider, and it will be sure to pan out perfectly." He pocketed the notes and Julian watched him with lowered lids.

The two young men went down the stairs and into the courtyard, where the pigeons fluttered and strode at their feet with the fearlessness of the London bird.

"Where shall we go?" asked Vane. "I used to have a club, but my subscription ran out, and I couldn't afford to renew it. Restaurant?"

Julian laughed—his laugh was as soft as his voice and his smile, soft and caressing.

"How strange to hear that from the Earl of Lesborough!" he said.

"Yes; but I wasn't earl then, and I was poor," said Vane.

Julian slowed up for a moment.

"I was going to lunch at my place," he said with a hesitation that was only momentary. "Perhaps you won't mind coming home with me? It's rather out of the way, though it isn't far from here. We shall be free to talk—"

"Right," said Vane. "I shall be very pleased."

Julian called a cab and gave the address—Vane did not catch it—to the cabman; and they drove across the Strand and alongside the House of Parliament to an old-fashioned row of houses facing the river.

Vane, as they alighted, looked round him curiously. It was a bit of old London hemmed in and flanked by newly-built flats and modern residences.

"Quaint place," he said. "I've never been here before."

"No? I live here because it's quiet and out of the way; and I own the house. It was my father's. It's rather a nice view, especially at night, with the lights on the water. The house is old, very old, and it wants repairing, modernizing and all that, and I mean to do it—when I can afford it."

He pulled at an old-fashioned bell and the door was opened presently, and with an air of caution, by an old woman with so strange an expression on so pallid a face, that Vane could not help staring at her; and he stared the harder when, instead of speaking, Julian Shore made signs to her in the deaf and dumb alphabet on his fingers.

The old woman took her eyes for a moment from her master's face to glance at Vane, then nodded assentingly, and closing the door disappeared through another which led to the basement.

"Come upstairs, will you?" said Julian. "I live on the upper floor for the sake of the view."

He led the way into a sitting-room which was as old-fashioned as the exterior of the house. The walls were of oak, blackened by age—not Tottenham Court Road varnish—there was a massive mantelpiece as black as the panelling, and the furniture, old and heavy, was in perfect harmony with the room. There was a piano, also of oak. It was a very quaint room, and imposing, but it struck Vane as sombre, not to say weird.

He went to the window and looked out.

"You've a fine view of the river," he said, "and this is a grand old room."

As he spoke he noticed a faint smell like that emitted by pungent chemicals. It came from a door leading out of the room, and Julian stepped to it and closed it softly.

The old woman appeared with a tray and presently set out a nice little lunch of sweetbreads, pate-de-foie gras, Swiss cheese, and a blancmange. The claret was in a Venetian flask, and a small bottle of yellow Chartreuse stood beside it. Having laid out the table, the woman, after a fixed look at her master—the kind of look one sees in the eyes of a well-trained and devoted spaniel—left the room, and Julian drew a chair to the table for Vane and invited him to be seated.

"You seem to have very comfortable quarters," said Vane. "Your servant is deaf and dumb, isn't she?"

"Yes," said Julian. "She was an old servant of my father's. I'm afraid to say how old she is. But she is very faithful and attentive, and serves my purpose."

"And you don't mind her—affliction?" said Vane as he helped himself to sweetbread.

Julian smiled.

"No," he replied. "I suppose it's because I'm used to her. She is very—intelligent, and, as I say, she is devoted to me."

"She looks it," remarked Vane. "This is splendid claret."

Julian smiled, the smile of a man whose wine is praised.

"It is some my father left me. By the way, I fancy it came originally from Lesborough Court."

"Then I hope there is some left there," said Vane. "You know the place?"

"No," replied Julian as he handed the pate. "I have never been there. My father and the earl quarrelled—but no doubt, you know all about that. No, I have never been there. But you know it; you have stayed there?"

Vane nodded as he looked round the room. It seemed strange, improbable that he should be sitting here so cosily with this newly-discovered cousin.

"Yes; I used to go there as a boy; and until recently I was asked to pay a kind of regulation visit. But the earl quarrelled with me as he quarrelled with your father. He—expected too much."

"As how?" asked Julian, filling his glass.

"Oh, well, he wanted to plan out, direct my life. Wanted me to go into politics and stand for the borough, in the Conservative interest."

"And you are a Liberal?" suggested Julian.

"No, I'm not. I'm nothing. But I declined to take my politics from his lordship, and also declined to become a—a dependent. So we parted and I went abroad—" His voice died away.

"And were wrecked?" said Julian, interrogatively.

Vane seemed to dry up, to freeze, on the moment.

"Yes," he said, absently. "But let us talk of something else, of yourself. I could almost have found it possible to be sorry that I was alive when you came into Mr. Tressider's just now."

Julian's dark face flushed for a moment and his lids drooped—his face looked like a mask when his eyes were closed, so expressive were they—then he raised them, smiled and shrugged his shoulders, and waved his hands with a gesture that reminded Vane of his cousin's Spanish blood.

"That's very kind and generous of you—Vane," he said, with a little pause before the "Vane." "Of course I should have liked to have been the Earl of Lesborough; but—ah, well, perhaps I shall be as happy as if I were."

"I dare say," said Vane in his blunt way. "I don't suppose"—he stifled a sigh—"that it will make me any the happier."

Julian looked at him with veiled curiosity. "Oh, you!" he said. "I can imagine that you will make quite a typical English nobleman. You are cut out for the position and will fill it well. While I"—he waved his white hands again—"I'm scarcely so suitable a subject. I'm only half English. My mother was a Spaniard, and I have nothing—what do you call it?—feudal about me. You will marry—but perhaps you are already married; yes?" he broke off, his almost almond eyes on Vane's with an apparently frank and disinterested interrogation.

Vane filled his glass and replied, as he had replied to Mr. Tressider: "No, I have no wife."

"Ah, but you soon will have one," said Julian, smilingly. "You will be a great catch. The parti of the season. You know that you are tremendously rich as well as noble?"

Vane nodded. "So I'm given to understand," he said. "But I shall never marry."

"Never is a long time," commented Julian with a smile. "Try this Chartreuse, will you? It also came from the Lesborough cellars, I believe. You will go down there at once, will you not?"

Vane filled his liquer glass. "I suppose so," he answered, slowly. Then, with his characteristic abruptness, he said: "See here, Julian. My turning up in this fashion must have been—inconvenient to you. I—I want to make it up to you, in some way; but upon my life I don't quite know how to. Do you mind telling me something about yourself, your—your means?" He faltered and looked at the table and round the well-furnished though weird and rather sombre room. "I don't want to play the inquisitive business you know, but—"

Julian laughed at his cousin's embarrassment.

"You have a particularly transparent mind, my dear Vane," he said in his soft voice. "I know exactly what you are going to do. You are going to offer to—make it up to me for the loss of my expectations. Is it not so?"

"That's about hit it," assented Vane in his direct fashion.

"I thought so!" said Julian with his charmingly candid smile. "You would offer me an allowance, an income—"

"That's so," assented Vane. "Why shouldn't I? I'm immensely, beastly rich, I believe, and if I hadn't turned up you would have been the Earl of Lesborough."

As he pronounced the title Julian Shore's lids quivered, but the smile was still hovering about his lips.

"As it is," went on Vane, "you are the next in succession, the heir. I shan't marry—you shake your head, but I know what I am saying—and you will come into it all. Why shouldn't you accept an income, allowance, from me? If you were my brother or son you would have to do so."

Julian shook his shapely head again.

"But I'm not your brother or your son; I'm only your cousin. And—we are speaking candidly, are we not?—I do not like the role of a dependent. No! I will not take a penny from you."

"You are an awful fool," put in Vane in his blunt way.

"Perhaps. But I have a small but sufficient income; enough for a bachelor and I value my independence.

DAN'S DEBT

By EPES WINTHROP

Copyright, 1904, by T. C. McClure

Danny deliberately chewed up his ticket. When he had masticated it to a pulpy condition he waited for the conductor. He was rather sorry he was not better acquainted with that official's movements, for a chewed railroad ticket is not a tasty morsel.

At last, after what seemed to be hours of waiting, he caught sight of a blue coat and brass buttons in the far end of the car, and a moment later he began to choke. The traveling man across the aisle pounded him upon the back, and presently his gasps subsided.

"What's the matter?" demanded the conductor, coming up, whereon Dan let out a wail that would have shamed the whistle of the powerful engine ahead.

"I swallowed most of me ticket," he sobbed, "an' now I gotter walk all the way to Pittsburg."

Sundry bits of pasteboard on the floor furnished corroborative evidence, but the conductor was adamant.

"The gateman told me you had a ticket to Newark," he declared firmly. "You get off there."

"He's a liar," protested Dan, "and so're you!"

The conductor made a grab at his collar, but the drummer interfered.

"Don't get gay with the kid," he said. "You know very well you are not telling the truth when you say that you know where his ticket was for."

The conductor sized up the traveling man and became diplomatic. "I can't let him ride," he declared apologetically. "He's got to have a ticket or he can't stay on the train."

"Two to Pittsburg," said the drummer, producing a mileage book.

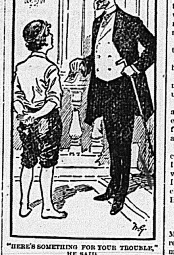
The conductor punched two slips and passed on. If a passenger wanted to be taken in it was none of his business, especially when the passenger stood almost six feet.

The drummer turned to Dan. "Your fare is paid," he said. "On the level, where was your ticket for?"

"Newark," admitted Danny, "but dat big stiff didn't know."

Jack Somers laughed lightly.

"I guess the firm can stand it," he said as he tucked the book back in his pocket. "I've had good luck this trip. What do you want to go to Pittsburg for?"



"HERE'S SOMETHING FOR YOUR TROUBLE," HE SAID.

"Me fader's dere. He ain't got the money to send for me, but I want ter see him."

"Going to sit up all night?" asked Somers as he saw the Pullman conductor at the other end of the car.

"Naw," said Dan contemptuously. "Dey put on me sleepin' car when I want it."

"Well," the other returned, "I guess I can get a place in the sleeper, but I'll come and take you in the diner when it's time." And with that he followed the conductor down the aisle and on to the car where a berth had been found after the reservations had been checked up.

He was as good as his word about the dinner. The idea of a whole dollar for just one dinner appalled Dan, but there was no outward display of the awe he felt. He might have been used to the best for all the wonderment he showed.

With another dollar in his pocket the next morning he stepped off the train and passed out into the street. The town was new to him, but he was used to strange cities, and before noon he had located his father and had become a resident citizen, to the old man's surprise. He had not sent for Dan, but a workman had told the boy where his father was, and he was welcome since he had come. From the age of six Dan had been a burden to no one.

Six months later Dan was a passenger in a car going to a summer park and occupied a seat directly behind Somers and a young woman, whom he immediately classified as "Somers' steady."

It was evident that things were not as they would have them, for the talk that floated back to Dan's keen ears told him that her father objected to Somers and that this was a clandestine meeting.

"Don't butt in," was one of Dan's rules, and he was lost in the crowd at the trolley terminal before Somers had had a chance to recognize his one time protege. The band was good, and the green grass was a most pleasant carpet, but the talk on the trolley rang in Dan's ears.

The girl was old Henry Greyson's daughter—he found that out—and Greyson objected to Somers because he thought him fast—the old type of drummer. It was evident that Somers took the matter as much to heart as did the girl, and Dan was quite disgusted over the state of affairs.

Henry Greyson was known everywhere in Pittsburg. The Greyson building was one of the most modern structures, and Greyson's interests were as varied as they were enormous. It was an easy matter to find his office, but a lot more difficult to get at the man. Dan waited from 11 in the morning to 3 in the afternoon, and then from a side door around the corner of the hall from the main office the spare, alert figure of the millionaire stepped out. Dan pounced upon him.

"Say, Mr. Greyson," he demanded, plunging into the midst of the business, "I come to ask yer a favor."

Greyson's hand went to his trousers pocket, and Dan's lips curled.

"Nixey," he said decidedly. "When I want cash I earns it. I want your daughter."

"My daughter!" repeated the astonished Greyson, looking about to see what help might be at hand.

"Fer a friend of mine," completed Dan. "Y'see, Paul Somers was on de car yesterday, an' your gal was wid him. I heard him tell 'er you kicked because he was no good. Say, dat's dead wrong."

"Do you mean to say that my daughter was with young Somers yesterday?" demanded Greyson, forgetting for the moment to whom he was talking.

"I was right behind 'em," declared Dan.

Greyson produced a ten dollar bill. "Here's something for your trouble," he said. "If you see them together again let me know, and you may have another."

"G'wan, yer old geezer!" retorted Dan. "Did yer s'pose I'd break a friend like that? I wanter tell yer you're nutty about Mr. Somers. He's an all righter. Didn't I see a dame try ter win him out in N'York, an' didn't he tell her to chase herself? G'wan! Get wise! He's watcher want for de girl. Dere ain't none better."

With a slight draft on his imagination he told the old man of how Somers had helped him to Pittsburg and how when he was selling papers in New York he had seen Somers often and how the man had done none of the things with which he had been charged by other interested parties. There was the ring of truth in his tones, and the old man relented. He was accustomed to forming his own judgment, and he would accept even the statement of a ragged newsboy if it seemed to him right.

"It'll be all right, boy," he said as the tale was done. "He can have her."

With a whoop Dan was down the hall. Greyson called him back.

"Ain't goin' ter 'nig,' are yer?" demanded Dan suspiciously as he came up.

"No," smiled the magnate, guessing at the meaning of "nig." "I just wanted to say I have a place in my office for you. Come around in the morning, and I'll put you to work."

"Dat's all right," said Dan. "Yer come down to the corner tomorrer, an' I'll lend yer enough papers to start wid. I'm in business fer meself too. I don't want ter work for no dude clerk." And this time the boy kept on. His debt had been paid.

His Lonely Hours.

Miss Spears was visiting her sister, Mrs. Cummings, and had just finished reading the one magazine which monthly found its way into the Cummings family.

"There's a real affecting piece of poetry in here," said Miss Spears, furtively wiping her eyes. "It's called 'When I Miss You,' and it's telling her how many years they've lived together, and how, while she's away, the twilight hour seems different, and—I could read it out to you if you'd like to have me."

"I guess not," said Mrs. Cummings pleasantly, but firmly. "I've read a good deal of that kind, first and last. And if you'd ever been married, Joanna—not but what you had an opportunity; you needn't look so injured—if you'd ever been married you'd have known years ago that she'd be full as apt to remember how long they'd been together as he would and that the time he'd miss her wouldn't be half as likely to come at dusk, unless he'd had a poor supper, as it would in the morning, when he couldn't find his collar button, or in the middle of the day, when he wanted her to take a splinter out of his finger. If you'll turn over to the last two pages and read me out that recipe for a throat poultice I'd be obliged. William seems to think he's got one of his quinsies coming on."

A Scotch Golf Story.

A golf story comes from Scotland, where a couple of old antagonists met on a course every Saturday afternoon to determine their own private championship for the week. They were all "square" at the seventeenth, and the loser of last week had just played his third in the shape of a nice approach to the green. Last week's winner came up to his ball with grim purpose. He had an easy pitch to the green, but a number of young sheep were unconsciously browsing along the edge, all oblivious of the Olympian contest that was on the point of settlement. "Rin forrard, laddie," said last week's winner to his caddie, "and drive awa' they lambs." "Na, na!" vigorously protested his opponent. "Bide where ye be, laddie! Ye canna move any growin' thing! That's the rule of gowff."

VILLAGES IN THE DARK.

Japanese Settlements Amid Dense Groves of Evergreens.

Without having actually seen them you cannot imagine how dark some Japanese country villages remain, even in the brightest and hottest weather. In the neighborhood of Tokyo itself there are many villages of this kind. At a short distance from such a settlement you see no houses; nothing is visible but a dense grove of evergreen trees.

The grove, which is usually composed of young cedars and bamboos, serves to shelter the village from storms and also to supply timber for various purposes. So closely are the trees planted that there is no room to pass between the trunks of them; they stand straight as masts and mingle their crests so as to form a roof that excludes the sun. Each thatched cottage occupies a clear space in the plantation, the trees forming a fence about it double the height of the building. Under the trees it is always twilight, even at high noon, and the houses, morning and evening, are half in shadow. What makes the first impression of such a village almost disquieting is not the transparent gloom, which has a certain weird charm of its own, but the stillness.

There may be fifty or a hundred dwellings, but you see nobody and hear no sound but the twitter of invisible birds, the occasional crowing of cocks and the shrilling cicadae. Even the cicadae find these groves too dim and sing faintly. Being sun lovers, they prefer the trees outside the village. I forgot to say that you may sometimes hear a viewless shuttle—chaka-ton, chaka-ton—but that familiar sound in the great green silence seems an elfish happening. The reason of the hush is simply that the people are not at home. All the adults have gone to the neighboring fields, the women carrying their babies on their backs, and most of the children have gone to the nearest school, perhaps not less than a mile away.—Atlantic.

CATCHING COLD.

The Way This Is Aided by Improper Methods of Feeding.

The really important question is, In what does predisposition consist? We talk of a man "catching a cold." But it would be more correct and equally graphic to say that the cold has "caught" the man, for it does catch him unawares and often when he least anticipates it. But no cold ever caught any man unless he had first prepared the ground for it by a careful process of fertilization.

No amount of mere exposure to a low temperature alone will cause a "cold" in a perfectly healthy man in whom the product of wear and tear of nerve and muscle with adequate excretion of waste products on the one side is evenly balanced by food supply and exercise on the other. Where this equilibrium does not exist such exposure then operates as a "chill."

Now, who are the people who are liable to catch cold? Not those whose dietary is so carefully adjusted to the work they have to do that there is no opportunity for the accumulation of unused foodstuffs in their tissues, but those who in the better fed ranks of society eat and drink more than they need to meet the daily requirements of their bodily activity and are thus continually storing up in their tissues and excreting organs material which if appropriately used would form valuable ammunition for the development of energy either of body or mind, but which when stored beyond a certain point has to be blown off in a "cold" or a "billious attack" or in a more pronounced fit of gout.—Dr. Francis T. Bond, a London Expert.

Hearts Attuned to Joy.

There is a lot of fun in the world if we keep our fun eyes open and our hearts attuned to joy. Did you ever note how your very soul lighted and buoyed by the mere mental turning of self to the gladsome side? Teach your thoughts to run in a channel bathed in the sunlight of good cheer. Dwell upon the flowers that grow beside the road rather than the dust upon the turnpike. Laughter and good cheer lighten many a burden and make the tedious way a ramble in a woodland path. Wake up to the delightfulness of the birds' sweet melodies. Sing as you travel on your way, and God's eternal morning will dawn upon you when life's tempestuous voyage will for you have ended.

The Spell of the Theater.

The glamour of the stage! No one can define it or explain it; no one who has fallen under its spell can resist it. You see it at work in the great artist who, confident of success, already crowned with laurels, comes daily down to rehearsal with the zest and buoyancy of youth. Satiety does not touch him; a blase actor is an unheard of anomaly. A man may act for twenty, thirty, forty years, and if he is stricken with illness his one lament is that he can act no more.—George Alexander in Pelican.

Those Two Words.

"She broke off the engagement yesterday, and now she's sorry for it."

"I don't think so. She told me last night that she didn't care."

"Yes, but she told me today that she didn't care—very much."

Antiseptic Baptism.

"The Joneses took every precaution at the christening of their first baby."

"Every precaution?"

"Yes; they boiled the water."

Patience is not nerveless and weak, but vigorous and powerful. The Scriptural synonym is steadfast endurance. —Boston Watchman.

NO DANGER FROM EATING SPRAYED FRUIT.

(Guelph Herald.)

"Death from Sprayed Fruit." It is well known that fruit tree spraying is largely carried out in the American, Canadian, and Australian orchards, and, in fact, in some growing districts is compulsory. Up till now hundreds of thousands of barrels and boxes of sprayed fruit have been marketed without ill effects. A warning note, however, is struck from a report we have received from California, that, as the result of eating sprayed apples which had not been washed, death has been caused.—'Fruit Trades' Journal.'

The above silly and untruthful statement has been going the round of the press, more particularly in Great Britain. Recognizing the damage to our apple trade which it might be capable of doing The Herald forwarded the extract to Prof. Lochhead of the Ontario Agricultural College, with a request for his opinion on the question, as he is well known as one of the best authorities on such matters.

The following is his reply, and it is to be hoped that it will forever put a quietus on the absurd statement circulated by the English press:

"Every now and again a report like the above is sent out in England to the effect that somebody somewhere has died from the effects of eating sprayed apples. Thirty years ago such baseless, illogical reports were very common, but it was proven beyond a doubt then that there was not the slightest danger in eating sprayed fruits.

In practice, apples are not usually sprayed late in the season, probably for two, three or four weeks prior to their being picked, so that at harvest much of the Paris Green and Copper Sulphate has been washed off.

When a calculation is made as to the probable amount of poison that would lodge on an apple when sprayed, it is clear that the amount is very, very small indeed. Four or six ounces of Paris Green are used with each barrel of spray, which ordinarily suffices for thirty trees. So we have six ounces—2,880 grains of Paris Green upon thirty trees or 96 grains upon one tree. If we assume moreover, that an ordinary sized apple tree in full foliage contains 50,000 leaves and apples, then we find that there is 1-500 grain of Paris Green upon each leaf or apple. As there are about five hundred apples to a barrel, it would require three barrels of apples to furnish enough Paris Green to poison a man,—3 grains of Paris Green being a poisonous dose for a man.

Similar calculations show that there is less danger of poisoning from the Bordeaux Mixture constituent of the spray mixture.

But why need I give all these details; they have been given often before and the public have long ago been convinced. But a panic is sometimes produced by a careless or a sensationally cruel reporter who writes a statement based on hearsay only, and makes no effort to verify the statement before publication.

Maple Sugar.

(Hamilton Spectator.)

With the promise of the Canadian Government to stop the adulteration of maple sugar and syrup, and the able advocacy of the Toronto Globe in the same direction, it is quite possible that Canadians may again enjoy these old-time delicacies. But it will require severe measures. The makers and sellers of bogus maple sugar and bogus maple syrup will have to be punished promptly and severely for a while, in order to induce them to quit the lucrative business of buying sugar at four cents a pound and selling it at ten, twelve or fifteen cents a pound, according to the gorgeousness of the label.

It is now too late in the day to resurrect the maple sugar business in the old settled portions of Ontario. Adulteration killed the business. Farmers could not boil sap and compete with cheap sugar flavored with maple chips, and they made firewood of their sugar bushes.

But in the newer parts of the province there is plenty of maple, and the sugar business, protected against the adulterator, can be carried on there to good advantage. The same may be said of many portions of Quebec, and even further east, and it will be well worth while for the Government, even at this late day, to make such arrangements as will give farmers the profitable industry of maple sugar making, and restore to the Canadian table one of its very choicest delicacies.

SEE WHAT THEY DIED FOR.

GHOSTS OF BRITISH SOLDIERS HOLD A CONVERSATION.

London, March 16. — The Daily Mail publishes the following: "Mr. Lyttelton has written to a Burton-on-Trent correspondent with reference to a cartoon published by a London morning newspaper, in which the ghosts of two British soldiers witness manacled Chinamen passing before them, one saying. 'Look, Bill, that's what you, I and twenty thousand others died for."

"The Colonial Secretary says that he regrets that party rancor should be so strong that it leads some to forget the respect due to men who have died for their country, and to make use of their memory as a weapon with which to injure, through calumnious misrepresentation, the governing authorities of the Transvaal, who are doing their best to restore the prosperity of the colony.

"When in the House of Commons he characterized the picture as 'infamous' not a whisper of dissent was heard. He therefore assumes that the continued propagation of these productions is the work of persons who merit nothing but contempt from all honest men."

RIELLY RETURNS TO STAND TRIAL

Something of a Relief to Those in Authority—Objections Taken by Mr. Riddell—Cases Resubmitted to Grand Jury—Judge's Charge in Possible Criminal Libel Case—Notes of the Assizes.

Porter vs. Carman

Just before the court adjourned yesterday afternoon the Grand Jury were sent for and His Lordship addressed them in reference to the criminal libel case. He said it was possible that a case of criminal libel would be presented to them for consideration, and it was advisable that he should address them in reference to it. The bill, or proposed bill, was against Mr. Carman, who is the proprietor of the Daily Ontario, a paper published in this city. It is alleged that Mr. Carman, through his paper, libelled Mr. Porter, who was a candidate for Parliamentary honors for the West Riding of Hastings. It is alleged that an article appeared in that paper in which it referred to Mr. Porter as "a snake in the grass, which attacks its victim unawares." It is also alleged that the paper in question, in the article, stated that Mr. Porter, or his friends, were trafficking in bogus ballot-boxes, and that he was a deceitful man and a political trickster. Anything which imputes to a man that he is guilty of such offences, and such is not the case, then there is ground for an action for libel. An action for damages can be brought or a bill charging the accused with a criminal offence can be presented. The party charged can set up the claim that the article is true, and if that can be proved satisfactorily then the action fails as far as damages is concerned. When an indictment is presented by the Grand Jury the party charged may set up the plea that it is true and was published in the interests of the public. This must also be proven to be true. If the defendant fails to do this then his case fails. In the paper referred to, namely, the Ontario, it also accuses Mr. Porter of having in his possession certain bogus ballot-boxes, with which he intended to defraud the electors. "You can see," said the Judge, "by what has been presented to you during this court that Mr. Porter had nothing to do with the matter in the manner charged against him. Mr. Carman fully realized this and subsequently through his paper stated that the imputations against Mr Porter were without foundation." Witnesses would detail the facts to them and show that there was no truth in the allegations made. They should have no difficulty in dealing with this bill. They should reach a conclusion, and that conclusion should be a true bill against the defendant, T. S. Carman.

This Morning's Proceedings.

Rumors are thick in the court room this morning. It is said that Rielly is on the way back to stand his trial Mr. Johnston, his lawyer, is said to have received a communication from him. The court was prompt this morning, it being only 9.50 when the petty jurors' roll was called. Bunches of shamrocks were very much in evidence. A pot of shamrocks was on the Judge's desk in honor of St. Patrick's day.

THE BAIL QUESTION.

The Crown Prosecutor read a letter from Mr. Anderson, County Attorney, which stated that Mr. Jas. H. Smith, Rielly's bondsman, had handed him a letter requesting that the bail in the case of Rielly be not estreated, as it was expected that he, the bondsman, would be able to surrender Rielly on the arrival of the noon train. The Crown Prosecutor said he did not think he should take any notice of the letter, but should ask that the bail be estreated forthwith. The Judge said he would wait until the last day of court, and if Rielly was not produced by then he would estreat the bail.

Mr. Riddell made various objections, one of which was that the case should have been tried in the Court of General Sessions last December. He argued at length on this point, saying that the accused were remanded to the first court of competent jurisdiction, which he claimed was the Sessions in question. He moved that the indictment be quashed. He also objected to the venue.

Mr. Hellmuth, Crown Prosecutor, argued in reply, and quoted statutes galore. There was no doubt at all that this court had the right to try any person against whom a True Bill had been returned by the Grand Jury. He had the direction of the Attorney-General to proceed with these cases.

The Judge said he would accept this statement and allow the Crown Prosecutor to go on with the case, or re-submit the case to the Grand Jury.

TO THE GRAND JURY AGAIN.

The Crown Prosecutor said that, to make assurance doubly sure, he would re-submit the case to the Grand Jury. Things were at a standstill now for a while. Messrs. Hellmuth and Shepley counselled together earnestly. It was 10.45, and the Grand Jury was called to meet at 11. Everybody looked at the clock and felt like pushing it on. This was surely a case of waiting for something to turn up. Mr. Riddell and his partner whispered and smiled together. The big legal gun had succeeded in, to a certain degree, upsetting the indictment. Why shouldn't he smile?

In the meantime the rumors in regard to Rielly were working overtime.

"He will be back at noon, sure," said some people, who claimed to know.

"I'll believe it when I see him," said others.

The Judge left the bench and went into his private room. The Grand Jury was now in session. How long would they be? Mr. O'Flynn had on his best St. Patrick's day smile. His client, Whalen, had escaped the meshes of the law, and, judging by the expressions one heard, there are many people gratified over that, as well as his lawyer. The general opinion is that Whalen simply did what he did to oblige Rielly, with no thought of evil intent, and without knowing what he was actually doing, so far as bogus boxes were concerned. The ex-excise officer has lost his position and gained a little experience. He paid rather a high price for it, perhaps, but that's the kind a fellow generally values the most.

A MISSING GRAND JUROR.

It has now transpired that the Grand Jury cannot go into session owing to the fact that one of their number is absent from the city and was expected back on the 11.45 train from the east. It turns out that the train is two hours late, and it will be at least one o'clock before the Grand Jury can get together.

A county official just told the newspaper men that Rielly was coming back on the same train. It does not appear, now, that anything more will be done this morning.

The Judge came into court and announced that, owing to the many delays in the conspiracy cases, he would be compelled, much against his will, to order night sittings of the court, and also order that the morning sessions begin at 9 o'clock. He then ordered the crier to adjourn the court till 2 o'clock this afternoon.

The Afternoon Session.

There was much speculation in the court room, prior to the opening of court this afternoon, as to whether Rielly would be back or not. Every time the door opened the crowd "rubbered," but the scholarly features of the whilom professor were not seen coming through the door. The story at this writing is that he did not come on the train due at 11.15, and which arrived about 2, but will be here on the train due at 2.20 this afternoon. The Grand Jury is now in session, considering the points raised by Mr. W. R. Riddell, K.C., this morning.

The Grand Jury came into court at 1.30, and announced that they had found true bills against Rielly, Ruttan and Harryett, after hearing the case re-stated by the Crown Prosecutor. There was a conference between the Judge and Mr. Maybee, of Toronto, one of Ruttan's counsel, and then Mr. Maybee and the Crown prosecutor, Mr. Hellmuth, went outside to confer. What was up now? Were there any more sensations in the wind? They returned and the Crown Prosecutor asked for the arraignment of all the men who were accused of conspiracy. The Judge said it would be sufficient to arraign the one who was to be tried.

Ruttan was arraigned and pleaded not guilty, after Mr. Riddell, his counsel, had reiterated his objections of the morning. In reply to a question Ruttan said he was ready for his trial, and was ordered to take a seat in the prisoner's dock. He did not look excessively comfortable.

Just at this point the news reached the court room that Rielly had returned, and was at the Quinte. The securing of a jury was then proceeded with.

Rielly Returns.

At 2.35 this afternoon an open sleigh drove up to the main entrance of Hotel Quinte, and emerging from the conveyance were two gentlemen. They were Mr. Frank J. Reilly and Mr. Rigney, a solicitor from Kingston. As they entered the rotunda of the hotel the guests present viewed with astonishment the former, and many expressed surprise that he had returned to the city. After taking a glance over the register Rielly moved about and shook hands with a number who knew him. One of his friends remarked that his temporary absence had caused considerable commotion, to which Rielly replied: "I believe it has." He also stated that he was not drunk when he went away, as had been published in some newspapers.

A representative of The Intelligencer endeavored to have a talk with Rielly, but was unable to do so, as he and his solicitor, Mr. Rigney, went to a room in the hotel.

Later in the afternoon Rielly visited the Court House.

A Possible Misapprehension.

To-day's Globe, in a despatch from Belleville, quotes Mr. Hope McGinnis as saying that Mr. Frank J. Rielly "was quite sober" when they parted on Wednesday evening. Mr. McGinnis states positively that he told the Globe representative that Rielly was "perfectly sober" at that time.

TEACHER WELL TIMED.

MR LUTON PRESENTED WITH A CLOCK BY HIGH SCHOOL PUPILS.

The High School pupils assembled this morning to say good-bye to Mr. J. T. Luton; many eyes were tear-dimmed and universal expressions of admiration and esteem for Mr. Luton and regret at his leaving were heard. Mr E. F. Milburn, the Principal, presided, and in his remarks testified to the zeal and success of Mr. Luton. Miss L. Monaghan of the 4th Form, on behalf of all the school, read an address to Mr. Luton, couched in choice English and replete with encomiums of Mr. Luton as a man and a teacher. Master Wallace Robb of the 2nd Form, presented Mr. Luton with a beautiful clock as a reminder of the pupils when he was far away.

Nearly all the pupils were at the G.T.R. this afternoon to give Mr. Luton a send off on "the flyer."

Mr. Porter, M.P., Makes Correction.

WAS MISTAKEN IN STATEMENT THAT DOMINION POLICE SHOULD HAVE APPREHENDED RIELLY.

Mr. E. Guss Porter, M. P., this morning asked The Intelligencer to make a correction with regard to the statement made by him concerning the flight of Rielly. In yesterday's paper, it will be remembered, Mr. Porter was quoted as saying that the responsibility for Rielly's escape lay between the members of the Dominion Police and Sheriff Hope, they having, he said, been notified by County Crown Attorney Anderson, the day before, that it would be advisable to take Rielly into custody now that a True Bill had been returned against him.

Mr. Porter now says that, after consultation with Detectives Chamberlain and Parkinson, he finds that he was mistaken in his statement, inasmuch as the Dominion Policemen were sent here, so they say, simply to give evidence, and had no orders in regard to the prisoners charged with conspiracy.

"Then you entirely exonerate the members of the Dominion Police?" Mr. Porter was asked.

"Entirely," said Mr. Porter.

And do your remarks of yesterday with regard to Sheriff Hope still hold good?" said The Intelligencer.

"Most certainly," said Mr. Porter.

The Assizes.

Bryer vs. Farrow.—In this case His Lordship gave judgment yesterday, and it was virtually in favor of the the defendant, being as follows: Judgment for the plaintiff for $2.50 and Division Court costs, the defendant to have the right to set off his Superior Court costs. Judgment for the defendant on his counter claim without costs. Messrs. Porter & Carnew for plaintiff; Mr. Morden for the defendant.

Burgoyne vs. City of Belleville. — This case occupied the attention of the court yesterday. The plaintiff claimed damages amounting to some $600 for injuries to himself, horse and hack. He was driving along William street, when his conveyance was upset, on account of a pile of stones which were on the road. It was claimed that the obstruction was not properly protected by a light being placed thereon. Judgment was given for the plaintiff for $245 and costs. Mr. O'Flynn for the plaintiff and Mr. S. Masson for the defendants.

WANT TO HELP THE DEAF, DUMB AND BLIND.

ONTARIO INSTITUTIONS ANXIOUS TO HEAR OF AFFLICTED ONES—LIBERAL TERMS OFFERED—THOSE WHO KNOW ANYTHING OF CHILDREN WHO ARE NOT RECEIVING ATTENTION SHOULD WRITE TO THIS CITY OR BRANTFORD.

The following letter has been issued by Mr. R. Mathison, superintendent and principal of the Ontario Institution for the Deaf and Dumb, in this city, and explains that which may be of interest to several in this part of the country.

It is headed to the friends of the deaf and reads,—

I am anxious to learn of the whereabouts of all deaf mutes of school age (from 7 to 20 years old), and also those under seven years of age, in the Province who have not attended any school for mutes, with a view of giving their parents or friends particulars about this institution. The object of the province in founding and maintaining this school for the deaf is to afford educational advantages to all youth of the Province, who are on account of deafness, either partial or total, unable to receive instruction in the Common or Separate schools. Idiots, feeble-minded, paralytic children, and those who have normal hearing but are unable to speak, are not admitted.

Would you kindly make enquiries in your locality and let me know the names of any deaf and dumb children you may hear of, by filling up the blanks on the postal card, herewith enclosed. If there are no deaf mutes in your section, please state the fact across the card, sign your name, give post office and county and return to me at your earliest convenience. If there are deaf and dumb children that you know of, I would feel obliged by your bringing this circular to the attention of their parents or friends, with a view of getting them to make application for the admission of the children.

We are indebted to teachers, and many other good people in the past for information in reference to deaf children. I feel sure the present request will be promptly and cheerfully responded to. Teachers, especially, may obtain the names of deaf children from their pupils. Papers will be sent to all parents whose names are reported to us. You may be the means of carrying good news to some anxious father or mother who has a deaf child. Parents unable to pay, will not be called upon to do so.

All deaf mutes between the ages of seven and twenty, not being deficient in intellect, and free from contagious diseases, who are bona fide residents of the Province of Ontario will be admitted as pupils. The regular term of instruction is seven years, with a vacation of nearly three months during the summer of each year.

Tuition, books and medical attendance will be supplied free. Clothing must be supplied by parents, friends or the municipality, except in the cases of indigent orphans who are clothed by the Province.

In addition to an ordinary Common school education, the trades of printing, carpentering, shoemaking, baking and barbering are taught to boys; the female pupils are instructed in general domestic work, tailoring, dress-making, sewing, knitting, the use of sewing machines, and such fancy work as may be desirable. Manual training in woodwork for boys and domestic science for girls have been introduced.

It is to be hoped that all having charge of deaf-mute children will avail themselves of the liberal terms offered by the Government for their education and improvement.

Blank forms of application and any other information may be had by addressing Mr. Mathison.

If you visit Belleville at any time while the school is in session, I shall be glad to see you at the institution."

EDUCATION OF THE BLIND.

The following note has also been sent out by Mr. H. F. Gardiner, principal of the Ontario Institution for the Education of the Blind at Brantford. Mr. Gardiner says:

"May I ask your kind assistance to enable me to open correspondence with the parents or guardians of the blind children in your neighborhood? By blind children I mean all those whose eyesight is so defective that they are not capable of receiving instruction in the Public or Separate schools. The Ontario Legislature maintains this institution for the education of the blind, and for their instruction in handicrafts suitable to their condition, free of cost for board and tuition, for books and medical attendance; and it is highly desirable that all those for whose benefit the institution is designed should take advantage of its facilities.

"The age limit for admission is from seven years to twenty-one years, but I am anxious to get the names and addresses of blind children under that age, as well as of those who are now eligible for admission.

"The reading of this circular to your pupils a couple of times, with a request for their co-operation, will probably be the means of bringing to you the required information, which you can send to me on the enclosed postal card. If no children with defective sight are to be found in your district, please state the fact over your signature and mail the card to me.

"With full confidence that you will gladly do what you can for the benefit of a class whose affliction merits universal sympathy. I thank you in anticipation of your prompt attention to this matter."

WHERE IS TERMINAL?

That G. T. R. Will Have Nearer Than the St. Lawrence.

Important Statement Made by the Chairman of the Allan Steamship Line at a Luncheon on the New Steamer Victorian—New Allan Liner Attains a Speed of Nearly Twenty Knots.

London, March 17.—(C.A.P.)—Though designed for a speed of seventeen and a half knots, the new Allan liner Victorian attained nearly twenty knots at her trials on the Clyde yesterday. At the luncheon on board, Mr. N. Dunlop, Chairman of the Allan Company, said he believed the Grand Trunk Railway contemplated having a great terminal point nearer the ocean than the St. Lawrence. Then the Canadian route would be the great waterway to the American continent, with steamers running at unequalled speed and safety.

The Victorian left for Liverpool on Thursday with 1,300 passengers and mails for the other side.

BUSINESS IS BUSINESS.

Lord Stanley Replies to Deputation re British Postage.

London, March 17.—(C. A. P.)—Replying to the deputation of members of Parliament yesterday afternoon, introduced by Sir Gilbert Parker, Lord Stanley disposed of the hope of a reduction of postage on British newspapers and magazines to Canada, at least while he remained Postmaster-General.

Sir Gilbert said the deluge of American magazines, many containing 50 to 75 per cent. of advertisements, did a great deal to divert trade from Great Britain to the States. He referred to the resolutions passed in Canada, and read a petition signed by the President of the Press Association, the President of the British Empire League, and the late Premier of Ontario, amongst others; and also commented upon the people becoming imbued with American ideas, and asked that the rate should be reduced from four pence to a penny a pound.

Lord Stanley had great sympathy with the sentimental side of the question, but his business was to run his department on a business basis. The only method by which the matter could be remedied would be to equalize the British rates with those of the United States, and that, he calculated, would mean a loss of revenue to the amount of three millions sterling.

First Rhodes Dinner.

London, March 17.—The Canadian Press learns that the first annual dinner of the Rhodes' scholars will be held at Oxford to-day. It is understood that the dinner will be confined to the trustees, 80 scholars, the joint secretaries and Dr. Parkin.

Favors the Yankees.

London, March 17.—W. Gilbert, Son & Co., Limited, of Swansea, writing to the Canadian Press, say the action of the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway, charging two cents per 100 pounds more for goods destined for all points beyond Montreal, has the effect of discriminating in favor of American manufacturers.

Parsonage Burns Down.

Wheatley, Man., March 17.—Early yesterday morning the Baptist parsonage here was found to be on fire. Mr. Davies, the minister, immediately gave the alarm but before a sufficient number of people arrived on the scene the fire had gained such headway that all efforts to put it out were abandoned. Most of the furniture was saved, but a valuable set of dishes, a century old, was lost. No insurance on the contents. The cause of the fire is unknown. Loss on the building about $1,500; insurance $950 in the Commercial Union.

Constable Shoots Laborer.

Ottawa, March 17.—Bernard Britton, a laborer, 29 years of age, was shot in the leg early yesterday morning by Constable Graham of the Ottawa Improvement Commission. Britton and his brother were engaged in what Graham and another constable believed to be an attempt to steal lumber for firewood. The prisoner made a break for liberty, and when recaptured struck Constable Blanchfield with a hatchet he had intended to use in prying off the boards. Crown Attorney Ritchie is investigating the case.

Paralytic Burns to Death.

Chatham, March 17.—Joas Peltier, an aged fisherman, who lived alone in a little shanty near Jeannette's Creek, a hamlet about 17 miles from the city, was burned to a cinder before he could escape from his abode, which was in flames. Peltier was afflicted with a paralytic stroke some days ago, and it is supposed that he was taken with another Wednesday night while carrying a lighted lamp, and thus came to his frightful end.

Five Years for Counterfeiter.

Halifax, March 17.—James Tutty, of Glace Bay, was sentenced yesterday by Judge Rodd to five years in Dorchester, for uttering counterfeit money as one of a gang of three or four that were arrested at Glace Bay last year, on a charge of counterfeiting Bank of Montreal bils. Proctor, one of the counterfeiters, was sentenced last week to five years, and Strange is still out on bail awaiting his trial in the same connection.

PASSED BAD CHEQUES.

Three Young Men at Petrolea to Be Tried for Bold Work.

Petrolea, March 17.—A bold piece of work was attempted here Wednesday, when three young men, whose names are Porter, Seymour and Humford, secured some blank cheque forms and forged the name of John Kerr to them.

They went to the store of Mr. McDermaid and bought a pair of boots and handed one of the cheques in payment. Mr. McDermaid, thinking the cheque was perfectly good, took it, giving them their change. They then proceeded to the Ford's millinery and dry-goods store and tried to pass another for the amount of $19.50, but the clerk did not think the cheque was good and had it taken to Mr. Kerr, who said it was not his.

The police were quickly notified and succeeded in getting Seymour easily. Porter and Humford tried to escape, but Chief of Police Ferguson arrested them. Their trial comes off this morning.

SHOCKING EVIDENCE.

Inquiry Into Finding Child's Body at Millgrove at Dundas.

Hamilton, March 17.—At the enquiry held by Coroner Ross at Dundas last evening on the body of the infant dug up under the barn of William Marshall, Millgrove, the evidence was of a shocking nature.

Martha Roberts, the mother of the child, is only 16 years of age, and is a step-daughter of Marshall. She took the stand against him. She swore that he was the father of the child. She said it was born on Friday, and died the following day.

Testimony was given by a little girl that the family were looking for laudanum, but she thought Marshall wanted it for himself. The enquiry lasted until about midnight, and was adjourned until next Monday.

DOMINION PARLIAMENT.

Ottawa, March 17.—Yesterday in the House passed without the remotest reference to the School question, beyond the presentation of petitions. Marine and Fisheries estimates to the amount of $639,750 were passed.

The Canada Atlantic.

Ottawa, March 17.—The conditions under which the Grand Trunk Railway Company is to take over the Canada Atlantic were the subject of a brisk discussion in the railway committee today. Two bills were before the committee, both having the one object of facilitating the transfer. The bill was passed, but the other was held over to enable the Government to make a statement in connection with running rights for the Intercolonial over the Canada Atlantic Railway.

Where is Mamie Kelly?

Weston, March 17.—J. Gilchrist, a shoemaker, living on Main-street, a veteran of the Indian mutiny of 1857-58, and who served more than 21 years in the famous 86th Royal County Down Regiment of Ireland, is mourning the disappearance of his adopted child, Mamie, whose mother's name is Kelly. Mamie is 9 years old, and has been attending the Weston Public School. On Tuesday, after dinner, she left for school and has not been seen or heard from since. She has been one of his family since she was six weeks old, and her loss is greatly mourned. The child's mother is a domestic, and stayed with the Gilchrists until Tuesday. It is believed that she took the child with her.

COSTIVENESS SPELLS SICK ALL OVER

Costiveness, if allowed to go unremedied, will lead to habitual constipation, and that means bad blood, poor digestion, unhealthy complexion, headaches and nervousness. It is the business of the liver to secrete and remove the bile from the blood, which acts as a cathartic and keeps the bowels regular. Let the liver become sluggish, torpid or inactive, and you are as sure to become costive as the sun is to shine. Smith's Pineapple and Butternut Pills cure costiveness in Nature's way. They restore the liver to normal activity; they remove foul secretions and establish regularity. THE AGENT DIDN'T KNOW.

A Story of an Editor and a Life Insurance Solicitor.

There are today some thousands of varieties of life insurance policies, each of which has a technical name and is capable of being made quite unintelligible to the average man. Some unscrupulous agents trade on this. Many do not really understand the meaning of terms themselves, but have learned their lesson parrotlike, and most of them apparently find it unnecessary to describe in plain English to those about to insure what they are contracting for. The result is a mass of misinformation and confusion about the whole subject.

For instance, an agent was trying to insure an editor on some new plan. The editor had a theory that any fact could be put into plain, everyday English if the man behind the fact really knew what he was talking about. After listening to an involved flow of "premiums," "deferred dividends," "cash surrender values" and "optional choices" he said gravely:

"See here, I don't understand what you're talking about. But I'll tell you what I'll do. If you'll write that proposition out in ordinary English so that an ordinary man can understand it I'll not only take the policy, but I'll publish the explanation as an article and pay you a hundred dollars for it."

"Will I? Sure, I will," exclaimed the overjoyed agent, thinking he had indeed struck an easy job. And he departed, adjuring the editor not to forget.

A week passed by. The agent called up on the telephone to say that he was working on the thing. There was less exultation in his voice.

Two weeks more elapsed. The editor had forgotten the whole thing, when the agent's card came in one day. It was followed by the man himself.

"Well," said the editor, "got my article?"

"N-no," said the agent sheepishly. "The fact is, I guess, I can't do it the way you want it, after all. Let's call it off."

It is hardly too much to say that this is typical.

WEDDING SUPERSTITIONS.

The bridegroom who carries a miniature horseshoe in his pocket will always be lucky.

The bride who dreams of fairies on the night before her wedding will be thrice blessed.

Never give a telegram to a bride or bridegroom on the way to the church. It is a sure omen of evil.

Marriages on board ship are considered unlucky. If you can't be married on dry land, remain unwed.

The finding of a spider on the wedding gown by a bride is considered a sure token of happiness to come.

If during the marriage ceremony the wedding ring should fall down, the bride's fate will not be an enviable one.

If a bride should by chance see a coffin as she starts off on her wedding tour, she should order the driver of the carriage to turn back and start over again.

Speechless.

Two workmen were engaged in digging a well when suddenly a portion of the earth gave way, falling on and knocking down one of the men. His companion called to him and listened anxiously for a reply.

"Pat, speak, man!" cried Mike again from above. "Are ye dead?"

"No, Mike," came the answer, with a groan. "I'm not dead, but I'm spachless."

Without more ado Mike set off for help as fast as his legs could carry him. Thumping loudly on the door of Pat's kinsfolk, he summoned help, explaining that Pat had been knocked "spachless" and was buried by the earth in the well.

"Who told ye so?" was the unexpected matter of fact inquiry.

"He told me himself," retorted Mike, indignant at his word being doubted, "and, begorra, woman, if ye don't believe me come and ask him, and he'll tell ye it's the truth I'm speaking!"—London Tatler.

Realistic Music.

Once, during his second term, Grover Cleveland was asked to speak at a function in a certain town, and when he arrived at the depot the wind was blowing a gale, sleet was driving and hailstones nearly as large as marbles were fiercely falling. Of course the inevitable brass band was there, and at the sight of the president the performers struck up with all the strenuosity at their command. "That is the most realistic music I ever heard," remarked Cleveland. "What are they trying to play?" asked Secretary Olney, who accompanied him. "'Hail to the Chief!'" replied the president, with a cheerful smile.

Ore and Fuel.

Pennsylvania, which makes more than half the iron used in the United States, produces less than 2 per cent of the iron ore mined. Ohio, which comes next to Pennsylvania as an iron-maker, mines less than 1 per cent of the total. In both cases the ore is brought to the fuel, and this is the policy in this country. Only in Alabama are the ore and fuel found together.—Scientific American.

Revenge.

"Why didn't you stop for that man?" inquired the passenger on the front platform.

"Because," said the motorman, with a metallic ring in his voice, "he used to run one of these cars when I had a job of clerkin' downtown. I'm gettin' even with him, by gosh!"—Chicago Tribune.

ENDS WITH A SHOT.

Robt. Almond, Toronto, Makes Fatal Use of a Revolver.

Toronto, March 18.—Despondent owing to long illness, Robert Almond, a former storekeeper, committed suicide by shooting himself Thursday night, in a lane in the rear of 261 Crawford street, where he resided. Mr. Almond was forced to give up his grocery business at 596 Queen street west in consequence of his ill-health. Since that time he has brooded a great deal.

Thursday, for the first time for weeks, he got out of bed and walked around the house. His daughter, with whom he was living, regarded this as a sign of improvement. He went to bed early in the evening, and shortly after the rest of the family retired, and their slumbers during the night were undisturbed.

About 6 o'clock yesterday morning Howard Ellis, who was on his way to work, passed through the lane, and found the body of Mr. Almond. In the right hand was grasped a revolver. A wound in the forehead told how he had met his death. It is supposed that some time during the night he walked out of the house and into the lane, where he committed the deed.

ASTHMA

Permanently Cured after Physicians had Pronounced the Case Hopeless.

Asthmatics know what a waste of time and money it is to go to specialists. Their treatment is all alike—the stereotyped sprays and gargles—which may afford temporary relief, but never cure.

Clarke's Kola Compound not only affords instant relief, but completely eradicates the disease from the system.

Mrs. J. Wise, of Vancouver, writes: "I have been a sufferer from Asthma for eight years. My doctor told me I could never be better. Then I heard of a gentleman who had been cured by Clarke's Kola Compound, so I tried it. Before I finished the fourth bottle, the attacks ceased, and during the six months of damp, foggy, rainy weather, I have not had a single attack."

Such confidence have we in Clarke's Kola Compound that we will send a sample bottle free to any address. Write to-day, and get relief.

The Japanese Have Advanced.

Russians Are Losing Heavily In Rearguard Action.

Jap Columns Pushing Forward With Speed to Complete Envelopment of Russian Forces—Linevitch Will Have 268,000 Men, and This Force May Cause Japanese to Exercise Greater Caution in Their Pursuit.

St. Petersburg, March 18.—No pause in the apanese advance is possible for some time. The Russians are losing heavily in the rearguard action, and the Japanese columns are reported to be pushing northward as fast as possible to complete the envelopment of the Russian forces. Gen. Linevitch, however, will have a considerable accession of fresh troops in a day or two, the fourth European corps being now at Harbin and departing southward.

Military officials here declare there are now 268,000 men at Gen. Linevitch's disposal in Manchuria, and it is supposed this force will be sufficient to cause the Japanese to exercise greater caution in their pursuit.

Anxiety at St. Petersburg.

Decided anxiety is felt here regarding the fate of the army in Manchuria under its new commander, no news of military development the last two days having been received here. Only despatches from the front are the brief announcement yesterday that Gen. Linevitch had assumed command, and that Gen. Kuropatkin was departing for St. Petersburg, which disposes of a rumor that the latter had committed suicide. He left Changtufu last night.

Although Gen. Kuropatkin's downfall was inevitable from the military standpoint, nevertheless it arouses sympathy in circles familiar with the long campaign that has been waged against him by the general staff. Gen. Sakharoff was his open enemy, and Gen. Dragomiroff his most severe critic, and many of his own subordinates were jealous and grudgingly obedient.

Duel Awaits Kuropatkin.

Gen. Linevitch is distinctly a line officer, with a long record as a fighter. He is almost as cordially disliked by the general staff as is his predecessor, and there also is bad blood between Kuropatkin and Linevitch dating from a personal quarrel in the days when Kuropatkin was commander of the Transbaikal army, which led Linevitch to demand satisfaction. Kuropatkin assumed the position that he could not fight an officer of inferior rank. The succession of this officer will naturally increase Gen. Kuropatkin's discomfiture.

TO CUT RUSS BASE.

Jap Infantry With Cavalry Move Northwest to This End.

Changtufu, March 16.—(4 a. m., delayed.)—The rear guard action is continuing almost uninterruptedly.

Soldiers wounded in the last fight, to the number of 1,700, were despatched north from Tie Pass on March 15. The morning of March 15 the Japanese made their principal attack on the Russian left, and in the evening attacked the right also.

It is reported that several columns of Japanese infantry with cavalry, are moving north a considerable distance west of the railway, with the intention of cutting the Russians from their base. It seems evident that the advance movement of the Japanese has continued for a long time, and perhaps uninterruptedly.

The Russians, though fatiguel with three weeks of constant fighting, are offering a stubborn resistance in their withdrawal, though not attempting to hold a position, which is naturally open to a turning movement.

The wagon trains are gradually being brought into order, but many carts are missing, including those carrying private supplies of food. The distributing depot, which has done much good work at Kaiyuan, will leave today for the north.

Chinese Welcome Oyama.

General Oku's headquarters, March 15.—Field Marshal Oyama and staff entered Mukden this afternoon. They were met at the south gate by many troops encamping near Mukden, who lined the streets, displaying tattered battle flags. The Chinese officials welcomed Field Marshal Oyama and thousands of Chinese congregated in the streets to witness his entry. The buildings and streets were decorated, and thousands of Japanese flags were exhibited.

RUSSIAN RAILWAY CUT.

Surrender or Death Choice Presented the Manchurian Army.

St. Petersburg, March 18.—There is a persistent report that railroad communications have been cut behind the Russian army. No official despatches have been given out up to this hour, and no private or Press despatches have been received. News is awaited with intense anxiety.

Fleet Sails Away.

Antananarivo, Madagascar, March 18.—The Russians second Pacific squadron left Nossi Be, the afternoon of March 16. Its destination is not known.

How He Got It.

London, March 18.—The Times' St. Petersburg despatch says: "Gen. Linevitch's appointment to succeed Gen. Kuropatkin was decided upon at the last moment, because all the generals Emperor Nicholas consulted, including Grand Duke Nicholas, Soukhomlinoff, Grodekoff, and Roop, declined to assume the heavy burden."

Tie Pass Tenable.

Paris, March 18.—The correspondent at Harbin of The Matin telegraphs a graphic description of the scenes of disorganization witnesed during the railroad journey from Tie Pass to Harbin. The wounded, the correspondent says, were lying exposed and unattended everywhere, and the soldiers were unable to obtain provisions. Hundreds of stragglers cannot find their regiments. The trains hastening to Harbin were frequently attacked by Chinese bandits, who at several places displaced rails. Russian officers are indignant, stating that the retreat was ordered when the position at Tie Pass was tenable.

British Sympathy For Him.

London, March 18.—The greatest sympathy is expressed by the British Press and public for General Kuropatkin, and there is strong criticism for the curt manner of his dismissal, without a word of thanks for past services. Gen. Kuropatkin is considered to have been to a large extent a victim. Little or nothing is hoped for from the appointment of General Linevitch, whose task is admitted to be almost superhuman.

Japs Got 25,000 Tons of Coal.

San Francisco, March 18.—Officers from five British steamers that were captured by the Japanese while trying to run the blockade into Vladivostock, have arrived here from Yokohama. The amount of the coal cargoes of these steamers falling into the hands of the Japanese reached nearly 25,000 tons.

To Try Stoessel.

St. Petersburg, March 18.—A commission has been appointed under the presidency of Gen. Roopaw, of the Council of the Empire, to investigate the surrender of Port Arthur and act as a court to determine the responsibility of Gen. Stoessel.

NO PLOT SHOWN.

Court Martial of Officers of Battery Concluded at St. Petersburg.

St. Petersburg, March 18.—The court-martial of officers and several men of the battery firing the salute at the blessing of the waters of the Neva on Jan. 19, which scattered bullets all around the Imperial party, participating in that ceremony, was concluded yesterday, and the verdict will be announced to-day.

During the trial the accused testified that the guns had not been inspected since the practice of two days before; that no count of cartridges had been made; that the guns were loaded in the absence of proper officers as provided by the regulations, and that no responsible officer attended to the training of the guns, and all pleaded guilty to charges of neglect of duty. No testimony, however, tending to show the existence of a plot against the Emperor was brought out.

Czar Now Held Prisoner.

London, March 18.—All the St. Petersburg correspondents of London newspapers are most pessimistic. The Daily Mail's correspondent thinks the central fact of the situation is that since the blessing of the Neva (Jan. 19), the Emperor has been a prisoner at Tsarskoe Selo, and never once has ventured to the capital. It says: "In the moment of the greatest national emergency, needing [illegible] sympathy between the Government and the people, the ruler remains secluded behind triple bars and bayonets, as remote and absolutely aloof from the people as if he were in another planet."

WOMAN IN MAN'S ATTIRE.

Chased by Victim of Incendiary Fires Who Identifies Clothing.

Toronto, March 18.—Four days' work and the King arson case is not half over. The expense to the County is about $200 a day.

Lincoln Bell, son of Jas. Bell, whose houses, goods and chattels went up in smoke, swore that immediately after the fire started in the hay-stack he chased Mrs. Hamilton Bateman, one of the prisoners, across the field until she disappeared in the swamp.

She was wearing a man's coat and hat, a red skirt with white dots, and man's shoes, similar to those which were subsequently fitted to the footmarks discovered afterwards. Under her skirt she wore blue overalls. All this wearing apparell was brought into the court-room and identified by witness. They were found in Bateman's house after the arrest.

The case will be resumed Monday.

To Stop Sunday Cars.

Toronto, March 18.—A large deputation representing the Ontario Lord's Day Alliance waited on Premier Whitney and the Cabinet yesterday afternoon to ask for legislation regarding the running of electric railways on Sunday and for the protection of the Sabbath in general. Special request was made for a measure that would enable the alliance to make a test case in the Supreme Court and Privy Council. The Premier, in his reply, said: "You may be assured we look upon the question with a sympathetic eye, and in due time we will give it the attention it deserves. Then we will announce a distinct decision upon the matter."

Alarming.

New York, March 18.—Deadly cerebro-spinal meningitis is claiming scores of victims in New York. Children are killed swiftly by it, and adults are not escaping. The medical profession is aghast at its almost epidemic spread, for there is no known cure. Only a few of those stricken survive.

The Way to Entente Cordial.

Berlin, March 18.—Emperor William dined with M. Birhoud, the French Ambassador, last night. As this is the first time since the war with France that a Prussian Sovereign has eaten at the French embassy a certain political interest attaches to the incident.

WHY DOES A BABY CRY?

Because it is either hungry or in pain. Properly nourished it will usually grow up right and be comfortable—that's the principal thing for a baby. If its food lacks strength and nourishment add Scott's Emulsion at feeding time. A few drops will show surprising results. If a baby is plump it is reasonably safe. Scott's Emulsion makes babies plump.

WORK.

For every suffering of sense,
For sadder mental impotence,
There is a certain recompense
In work.

When penury would vision kill,
Mid lassitude of flesh or will,
Oh, keep this slogan ringing still,
To work.

There lurks no conjury of fate,
No spider web of human hate,
But thou canst shatter—only wait
And work.

Thine enemies are all within—
Deliverance must there begin.
Arouse, thee, soul, and thou shalt win
By work.

Thy triumph from its final height
May cheer some comrade in his fight
Dispel his shadow with the light
Of work.

—Ernest Neal Lyon.

TO BREAK UP A COLD

Right quickly nothing works so nicely as Nerviline taken real hot. It sends a glowing warmth all through the body, and when rubbed on the throat and chest loosens up the cough and relieves tightness and soreness in the chest. Nerviline is used as a preventive and cure for colds, coughs and winter ills in thousands of homes because it goes right to work and brings relief quickly. Don't Nag

If you wish to help the world a little in your humble way,
Don't nag.
Your wife, if you're a husband, doubtless has her faults, but—say—
Don't nag.
You may be too busy toiling for your little bit of crust
To be able to lift others who are lying in the dust,
But you still can help in making the world brighter, if you just
Don't nag.

If you wish to give him courage who has chosen you for life,
Don't nag.
If you wish to be his helper — and he'll need help in the strife—
Don't nag.
He may have a few shortcomings—
husbands generally do—
And he may sometimes sit beaten
when he should have triumphed, too,
But he'll rise with newer courage and new strength, if only you
Don't nag.

All around you there are others who have painful wounds to nurse,
Don't nag.
Rubbing on the raw has ever and will always make it worse,
Don't nag.
You can see your neighbor's foibles—
all his weaknesses are plain—
But, then, what's the use of prodding
when it cannot bring you gain?
Why add by a look or whisper to the world's supply of pain?
Don't nag.

If she has her days for fretting, oh, be patient then with her—
Don't nag.
If he makes mistakes remember it is human still to err—
Don't nag.
You may not have strength to rescue the pale ones whose burdens kill,
Or to lift the weary toilers who are stumbling up the hill,
But you can refrain from making the world sadder, if you will—
Don't nag.

THE GOVERNMENT BACKDOWN

Sir Wilfrid Laurier plainly intimated to the House on Wednesday that he was prepared to back down on the educational clauses of the Autonomy bills. The storm of dissent within as well as without his own party which the measure evoked, was more than the Government could brave. But not with his usual grace is the Premier bowing to the inevitable. He committed himself so irrevocably to the principle and the terms of the measures when he introduced them: he bowed the dissentient Sifton out of the Cabinet with such calm satisfaction, that it must indeed be galling to him now to have to take the course that his rebellious Minister of the Interior insisted upon. And yet that apparently is the course Sir Wilfrid must take.

In an evidently inspired article the Ottawa Free Press on Thursday said:

> "Sir Wilfrid Laurier has listened to the voice of the people. The Government has decided to reconsider the position it has taken with regard to the Separate school issue in the Autonomy Bills. The clauses to which such grave and serious objection has been taken are still the subject of anxious deliberation. They may be eliminated from the measure, or it may be that an interpretation will be obtained from the Privy Council as to the section of the British North American Act, upon which there is such conflict of opinion. It is now clear that there will be no attempt to force through the House legislative provisions that are viewed with evident dislike by a large and influential body of the people. The voice that has spoken in this case is not that of the demagogue or the frivolous, reckless or irresponsible, whose excitement can be so easily stirred by the glib-tongued politician, but the great body of the thinking people of Canada, who look upon the issue as one seriously affecting the whole future of the country west of Lake Superior."

ST. PATRICK'S DAY CONCERT.

A PLEASING PROGRAMME PRESENTED AND AN ABLE ADDRESS DELIVERED.

As a reult of the concert held in the opera house last evening the building fund of St. Michael's Church will be added to considerably. There was a large audience present and the programme presented was thoroughly enjoyed. The opening of the entertainment consisted of Irish airs being played by the Chalaupka orchestra. Mr. Ted. Austin was first called upon and sang "Storm of Life" in a capable manner. Mrs. A. G. Parker sang "Spring Flowers," the accompaniment being played by Master Parker on the violin and Miss Parker on the piano. "The Sweetest Flower that Blooms," was the selection rendered by Mr. Sanford Burrows. Mr. T. Holgate gave "Off to Philadelphia." Mrs. Jas. Grant's selection was "The Auld Plaid Shawl." Miss M. Vermilyea, as usual, delighted all with her selection "Sing Me to Sleep." Mr. Walter Hutchinson sang "Eileen Alanna," and Miss Bawden closed this part of the entertainment by singing "The Green Old Isle."

Mrs. (Col.) Campbell and Miss Stella Mackie acted as accompanists.

Rev. Father Twomey, the parish priest, gave an address, which was highly appreciated. In his opening remarks he referred to St. Patrick's Day as one which all sons of Ireland delighted to honor. They were proud of the land and its past history. It was part of that great Empire on which the sun never sets. Ireland had a record in peace and also in war, but one surpassing glory was the fact that her sons never forget their God, nor the Christian faith which was inculcated into them. St. Patrick was an apostle of that faith and his word was kept in their bosom. In the history of the faith Ireland stood out prominently. He referred to many noble Irishmen who had taken a prominent part in the affairs of the Empire. They would take no small part in the affairs of the British Empire of which they were proud to be a part. The island had always had its distinctive nationality. [illegible] was very attentively listened to and at the close the Rev. Father was loudly applauded.

Mr. Johnston's Threat re Rielly.

that he had read the newspaper account of Ruttan's testimony before he himself testified. In reply to a question Harpell again said that Ruttan had told him he was Kerfoot. There was a sharp passage over a lapse of memory. Harpell said he did not remember. He would not swear to the exact words.

"Oh! yes, you do," said the lawyer. "you are here to swear that man into the penitentiary, and keep out yourself."

"I am not," said Harpell, "I am here to swear to the truth." He said that he had mentioned the case to nobody till he saw in the papers that Ruttan had made statements incriminating him.

John Bremner, the Bancroft editor, looked nervous as he stood in the witness box. He told of receiving the case which contained the bogus ballot-boxes. It was addressed to Harryett, and turned over to him. After the matter was blown upon Harryett asked him to help do away with the bogus boxes.

Court adjourned at 12.50 till 2 o'clock.

Afternoon Session.

Promptly at 2 o'clock the Judge came in.

Mr. Geo. Thrasher, of Stirling, testified that he was B. O. Lott's financial agent at the November elections. He had sent $50 from B. O. Lott to Shibley on Oct. 11.

Detective Parkinson testified to going to Sydenham lake on Nov. 28th, and recovering the nine bogus boxes which had been sunk by Ruttan and Harpell. They were shipped to Belleville by express and were now in the court room. Ruttan showed them where the boxes were sunk, and also assisted in the search for the tenth box.

THE DEFENCE.

Ed. G. Ruttan took the witness stand in his own behalf. He was married and had one child. Had known Shibley since he was a boy, and knew Rielly since that party was seven or eight years of age. He first met Phil Lott at Harrowsmith, under the name of Hughes. Had never met Byron O. Lott. Phil Lott himself, Ruttan said, had told him his name was Hughes. He (Ruttan) said he was working for Shibley, copying circulars the day he was asked to drive Phil Lott to Kingston. He was sent for a livery rig and when he came back Phil Lott was there. He drove Phil Lott to Kingston, but did not get a letter from Shibley to Rielly, as Phil Lott said. They did not discuss election matters, and never mentioned ballot-boxes at all. Phil Lott, Ruttan said, pulled the letter to Rielly out of his pocket and asked Ruttan to show him where Rielly lived. Ruttan again denied that he carried the letter from Shibley to Rielly. Ruttan also denied that Rielly drew diagrams of the boxes, as sworn to by Phil Lott. He was giving a blanket denial of Phil Lott's statements.

"KNEW NOTHING ABOUT BOXES.

Ruttan said he had been approached by Shibley to go to Whitney's hotel and call for a couple of boxes of literature, in company with Mr. Guess, the liveryman. He did not remember that Shibley told him the boxes were addressed to anyone in particular. He did not know where the boxes came from or any more about them. There was nothing about the boxes which would lead him to think the boxes did not contain literature. He had never told Harpell that the boxes rattled on the drive to Shibley's house. So far he had directly contradicted the statements of Harpell and Phil Lott. Ruttan told that one day Shibley had taken him into a room in his house and showed him a bogus ballot-box, saying, "Don't you think that's a slick rig?" He (Ruttan) said: "Well, a man would be a fool to try to use a thing like that." That, Ruttan said, was the first he saw or heard of the bogus boxes. This was on the Saturday before election. Ruttan related how Harpell came to his house and told him Shibley wanted to see him. He (Ruttan) said he told Harpell he didn't know how he could go, as his wife had a sick headache. His wife, however, told him to go, and he went. Ruttan then denied that Shibley had said to him: "We must get rid of them." What did happen, Ruttan said, was that Shibley took him into the house and asked him to help get rid of the bogus boxes. Ruttan said Harpell made the remark: "Well put them where the devil couldn't find them," and not he. Shibley suggested that the boxes should be put into Sydenham Lake. Harpell, Ruttan said, knew from the first that he was to go and help drown the boxes.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The programme of the Philharmonic Society next Thursday evening will be unusually varied and interesting. The concert opens with a fine chorus from Elgar's famous "Banner of St. George," and besides the part songs, quartettes and duets, there will be sung two short cantatas, Bruck's "Fair Ellen," which is a stirring and beautiful setting of the story of the Relief of Lucknow, and Gounod's "Gallia." This latter composition was written by the great French composer as a lament on the Fall of Paris in 1871, and is one of his best works. The Mendelssohn Choir recently performed it in Toronto with the Pittsburg Orchestra. Even without Mr. Tripp as solo pianist, the concert would be easily worth the small price of admission.

TENDERS.

Owing to the non-acceptance of former tenders and changing of the plans, tenders will be received till March 20th, 1905, for the work required to be done in whole or for parts. Plans and specifications can be seen at the office of Walter Alford, city. The lowest or any other tender not necessarily accepted. Sealed tenders to be addressed, H. C. Hunt, Sec'y-Treas., Belleville Hardware Co., City.

HELEN KELLER

The World's Most Remarkable College Graduate

The story of Helen Keller's life is the biography of two wonderful women—the blind, deaf and dumb girl, who for over twenty years has fought against awful odds; and the kind, ingenious and patient teacher who has led her charge into the sunlight of knowledge and of kinship with humanity.

In 1886, when Miss Annie Sullivan was called to Tuscumbia, Ala., to assume the care of Helen, the child had been living for nearly five years in the mental darkness that followed her treble affliction resulting from convulsions. The task of education seemed well-nigh hopeless, for the one sense through which the child's mind was to be awakened to consciousness was her sense of touch. But in June, 1904, eighteen years later, Miss Keller graduated from Radcliffe with distinction, and received her degree of B. A.

This fairy tale of education, this romance of the conquest of obstacles, is a superb triumph of concentration. At her entrance examination in June, 1900, as if Nature had not sufficiently handicapped her efforts, she had to submit to two additional trials. The questions were given her in the American Braille system of writing for the blind, with which Miss Keller was only slightly familiar, having learned the English Braille—the two systems being as different as two distinct systems of shorthand. This delay in puzzling out the translation of the questions was further aggravated by the fact that her little Swiss watch with raised figures had unfortunately been left at home, so she had no means of gauging the time, yet her typewriter clicked out the answers and she "passed" with flying colors in every study.

During her college course, in many studies Miss Sullivan repeated the lesson while Helen's fragile fingers feathering their way over her mentor's face, translated the muscular motions of speech into ideas. She studied English, Latin, French, Greek, German, political economy, logic, higher mathematics, chemistry and all the other myriad phases of college wisdom, through her wonderful fingers.

She uses the typewriter in five languages, has learned to speak with clear articulation, can swim, row, play cards, chess and basketball; dance, and perform a hundred other seemingly impossible things. Her memory is marvellous, her temperament sunshiny and happy; her mind is wonderfully broad, subtle and thorough, and her book, "The Story of My Life," besides being great as a biography, is the most important work of the century on psychology as a revelation of the human mind, its methods and possibilities.

Entered according to Act of the Parliament of Canada, in the year 1904, by W. C. Mack, at the Department of Agriculture.

ANIMAL ANTIPATHIES.

The Fear Horses Have of Camels and Cattle of Dogs.

"In some towns they won't let us show," said the circus animal trainer, "unless we have no camels with us. Camels are a serious drawback to shows. Horses are so much afraid of them that lots of towns won't let a camel enter their gates.

"A horse won't go near a piece of ground a camel has stood on. The very smell of a camel in the air will make a horse tremble and sweat, and this fear isn't only found occasionally in a horse here and there. It is found in every horse all over the world. Queer, isn't it? I often wonder why it is. Cattle hate dogs in the same way, and cats hate dogs so too. Here, though, we can account for the hatred. Dogs in primitive times fed on cattle, no doubt, and even today here and there they kill and feed on kittens.

"Horses love dogs. I'm sure I don't know why. Dogs fear no animals but pumas and leopards. You can take a dog up to a lion's or a tiger's cage, and he will show no fear, but take him up to the cage of a puma or a leopard and he will tremble and moan and slink away out of sight.

"All very puzzling, isn't it?"

TWO GREAT LEADERS.

Disraeli and Gladstone and Their Enmity Toward Each Other.

Disraeli wit was too much for Gladstone. The great Liberal had but one adjective for his Tory opponent, and that was "devilish." Never during the years of their opposing leadership had the two any social relations. Each made light of the other's literary efforts. Some one asked Lord Beaconsfield to define the difference between a misfortune and a calamity, and unhesitatingly it came. "If Mr. Gladstone should fall into the Thames, it would be a misfortune. If any one should pull him out, it would be a calamity."

The best of all the Gladstone-Disraeli stories tells how once at a London dinner party the ladies at the table were asked which they would marry if they had to marry one or the other, the great Liberal or the great Tory. All declared promptly in favor of Beaconsfield save one, who hastened to explain that she had rather wed Gladstone that she might elope with Disraeli and so break her husband's heart. This happening was of course retold to Disraeli, and so pleased was he over it that he suspended a cabinet debate on the chances of a continental war in order to relate it.—Warwick James Price in Criterion.

THE BIG DIPPER.

It Is the Hour Hand of the Woodman's Celestial Clock.

The pole star is really the most important of the stars in our sky. It marks the north at all times. It alone is fixed in the heavens. All the other stars seem to swing around it once in twenty-four hours.

But the pole star of Polaris is not a very bright one, and it would be hard to identify but for the help of the so called pointers in the "Big Dipper," or "Great Bear." The outer rim of the dipper points nearly to Polaris, at a distance equal to three times the space that separates the two stars of the dipper's outer side. Various Indians called the pole star the "Home Star" and the "Star That Never Moves," and the dipper they call the "Broken Back." The "Great Bear" is also to be remembered as the pointers for another reason. It is the hour hand of the woodman's clock. It goes once around the North star in about twenty-four hours, the reverse way of the hands of a watch—that is, it goes the same way as the sun—and for the same reason—that it is the earth that is going and leaving them behind.—Country Life In America.

Do Bargain Hunters Smile?

"I went out shopping the other afternoon," said a well known pastor of New York city, "and, having in mind the hymn 'Brighten Your Way With a Smile,' I looked about to see if there were any smiles on the faces in the big department store.

"In all that hurrying and pushing and worrying real, genuine, hearty smiles were not to be found. I saw one smile, but it looked like a plant that had been wintered in a cellar. It was bleached and wan."

The Way a Benedict Looked at It.

Mrs. Benham—I don't believe a word of your excuse. Benham—That's just like a woman. I don't suppose Jonah's wife believed the story he told her after he had spent three nights with the whale. Mrs. Benham—How do you know Jonah had a wife? Benham—He wouldn't have been a Jonah if he had not been married.

A Sickener.

"Some people," growled Crabbe, "make me sick."

"I should think nearly everybody would make you sick," replied Cutting.

"Indeed! Why?"

"Reciprocity, you know."

Made the Parrot the Scapegoat.

Father—What did the teacher say when she heard you swear? Small Boy—She asked me where I learned it. Father—What did you tell her? Boy—I didn't want to give you away, pa, so I blamed it on the parrot.

No Evidence to the Contrary.

Friend—I think her mother is a sensible woman. The Lover—Well—a—I don't think she likes me. Friend—Oh, I merely said she was a sensible woman!

WAIFS IN AUSTRALIA.

The State Finds Them Good Homes and Has No Orphanage.

Australia is a continent without an orphanage, a country without an orphan. Each waif is taken to a receiving house where it is cared for till a country home is found. The local volunteer societies canvass their neighborhoods and send to the children's committee of the destitute board the names of any families they have found where children may be placed. The children's committee selects the home which it judges is best adapted to the development of the child in question.

No child is placed in a family so poor that the child might suffer. The foster parent receives a sum averaging $1.25 per week for the care of the child and for proper clothing. When of school age the child must be sent to school. The local volunteer committee looks after its care and culture, and zealous neighbors often assist in watching the growth and education of these happy children.

When the child is fourteen years old he begins to work. His earnings are placed in the Postal Savings bank, and at the age of seventeen or eighteen he goes out into the world an independent man. The state, at an expense of less than $70 a year, has raised a man or woman to contribute to its wealth and prevented the manufacture of a criminal and the expense of courts, prisons and reformatories.

The True Ideal.

The true ideal that should fill a man's heart and fire his energies is excellence in his own sphere, the living of his own particular life just as fully and nobly as he—not somebody else—can. True, this is an unknown quantity, but it is a real and attainable one. Day by day it is rising, and day by day a man may feel conscious of increased power. Whither it may lead him he cannot tell, but that by its guidance he will go farther and accomplish more than by any other he may rest assured. Attempting nothing impossible, he is doomed to no inevitable disappointment, nor is there any limit at which he may cease to strive.—Self Help.

SIGNS OF POISON.

What a Sudden Flow of Mouth Water May Indicate.

Dr. Trall mentions the bewilderment of a family that was attacked with a "water rage," incomprehensible until investigation revealed the fact that a lot of horseradish in their kitchen garden had got mixed with some aconite herbs.

The sudden flow of saliva betrays the effect of some metallic poison—lead perhaps or verdigris (oxide of copper)—and suggests the examination of copper cooking utensils. Old fashioned silver spoons were often imitated with plated copper and in course of time furnished a clew to their bottom facts by turning black, then black with greenish tints, but only after their secret had been intimated by a spitting epidemic. It is the same with lead. Chewing a leaden bullet for a couple of seconds makes the "mouth water"—not as a hint as a desire for additional supplies, but to rinse out the palate and remove saliva that might cause mischief by finding its way into the stomach.

A decorative painter who never touched such things as paris green or cinnabar without disinfecting his hands and mouth was greatly puzzled by the morbid activity of his salivary glands. He had to spit like a tobacco fiend and finally traced his trouble to a substance known as "bronze dust" that had settled on his lips and nostrils and, under the influence of moisture, had been developing copper poisons.

Paris green not rarely gets blown like dust all over the fields it is supposed to protect from insect plagues; then, moistened by dew or drizzling rains, forms a paste and clings to vegetable substances, where its presence is never suspected, till their consumers complain of colic and mouth water.—What To Eat.

CORPSE RINGS.

What They Are and Why They Are Worn by Sailors.

"Corpse rings, eh?" said the visitor. "It's a curious, a grewsome, name. What are corpse rings?"

"Corpse rings," the collector answered, "are rings found on the bodies of drowned sailors—identification rings.

"Look at this thick gold one. Running around it on the outside, you see, there is carved in big, plain letters 'William Ratline, born in Camden, Me., 1865. Home, Malabar.' Ratline was lost off the Needles in the big storm of 1897. Malabar was communicated with, but it appeared that he had no relatives there.

"Nearly every sailor when the blues overtake him imagines he will die of drowning. He hates to think of his body washing up on a strange shore, of his nameless grave and of the anxiety of his friends when he doesn't return and no news comes of him, and therefore he buys himself an identification or corpse ring.

"Some of these rings are costly, beautiful, strange. Here is an antique Egyptian one, a ring of green bronze from a rifled tomb. Here is a wooden one, carved with little demons, for the thumb. It came, I think, from Senegambia. This ring of ivory is Japanese. It is of beautiful workmanship. The monkeys, holding each other's tails, that go around it in a circle, are quite perfect."

Central African Elephants.

"Elephants in the swamp country of central Africa," writes a traveler, "are different in their habits from those which inhabit the forests. In the marshes they stand throughout the day immersed in water up to their bellies and with their backs almost hidden by the high growth of reeds. Here they can always be traced by the white egrets which invariably accompany them and which feed upon the ticks and other insects with which their hides are infested. A herd of elephants moving through dense grass can be kept in sight even though they themselves are invisible by the fluttering up and down of these white birds.

Not So Bad For Him.

"Yes, I used to be in the insurance business. I once got a man to take out a $50,000 policy only about a week before he happened to be killed. He was a mighty hard chap to land too. I had to talk to him for nearly six months before I got him."

"That was tough on the company. I suppose you regretted after it was all over that your persuasive powers were so good."

"Um—no, I never felt sorry about it. I married the widow."

A Diplomatic Reply.

An eastern potentate once asked a group of his courtiers which they thought the greater man, himself or his father. At first he could elicit no reply to so dangerous a question. At last a wily old courtier said, "Your father, sire, for, though you are equal to your father in all other respects, in this he is superior to you, that he had a greater son than any you have." He was promoted on the spot.

Cause and Effect.

The census bureau tells us that there is an overplus of women in the cities and a shortage in the rural districts. Merely in a desultory way it may be mentioned that there are not so many show windows in the country as in the city.

A Full Dollar's Worth Free
Can Any Ailing One Refuse?

I will pay outright for your first dollar bottle of Dr. Shoop's Restorative. I ask no deposit—no promise. You take no risk—you pay nothing, either now or later. The dollar bottle is free to those who have not tried my remedy.

I want no references—no security. The poor have the same opportunity as the rich. To one and all I say "Merely write and ask." I will send you an order on your druggist. He will give you free, the full dollar package.

I can afford to offer a dollar's worth free because mine is no ordinary remedy. Ordinary remedies treat symptoms. My remedy treats the causes that produce the symptoms. Symptom treatment must be kept up for ever—as long as the cause is there. My treatment may be stopped as soon as it has removed the cause, for that is always the end of trouble.

There is no mystery—no miracle. I can explain my treatment to you as easily as I can tell you why cold freezes water and why heat melts ice. Nor do I claim a discovery. For every detail of my treatment is based on truths so fundamental that none can deny them. And every ingredient of my medicine is as old as the hills it grows on. I simply applied the truths and combined the ingredients into a remedy that is practically certain. The paragraphs below will show you the reason why.

But my years of patient experiment will avail you nothing if you do not accept my offer. For facts and reason and even belief will not cure. Only the remedy can do that.

So now I have made this offer. I disregard the evidence. I lay aside the fact that mine is the largest medical practice in the world, and come to you as a stranger. I ask you to believe not one word that I say till you have proven it for yourself. I offer to give you outright a full dollar's worth of Dr. Shoop's Restorative. No one else has ever tried so hard to remove every possible cause for doubt. It is the utmost my unbound confidence can suggest. It is open and frank and fair. It is the supreme test of my limitless belief.

INSIDE NERVES!

Only one out of every 98 has perfect health. Of the 97 sick ones, some are bed-ridden, some are half sick, and some are only dull and listless. But most of the sickness comes from a common cause. The nerves are weak. Not the nerves you ordinarily think about—not the nerves that govern your movements and your thoughts.

But the nerves that, unguided and unknown night and day, keep your heart in motion—control your digestive apparatus — regulate your liver —operate your kidneys.

These are the nerves that wear out and break down.

It does no good to treat the ailing organ—the irregular heart—the disordered liver — the rebellious stomach — the deranged kidneys. They are not to blame. But go back to the nerves that control them. There you will find the seat of the trouble.

There is nothing new about this—nothing any physician would dispute. But it remained for Dr. Shoop to apply this knowledge — to put it to practical use. Dr. Shoop's Restorative is the result of a quarter century of endeavor along this very line. It does not dose the organ or deaden the pain — but it does go at once to the nerve — the inside nerve — the power nerve — and builds it up, and strengthens it and makes it well.

MANY AILMENTS—ONE CAUSE.

I have called these the inside nerves for simplicity's sake. Their usual name is the "sympathetic" nerves. Physicians call them by this name because they are so closely allied—because each is in such close sympathy with the others. The result is that when one branch is allowed to become impaired, the others weaken. That is why one kind of sickness leads into another. That is why cases become "complicated." For this delicate nerve is the most sensitive part of the human system.

Does this not explain to you some of the uncertainties of medicine — is it not a good reason to your mind why other kinds of treatment may have failed?

Don't you see that THIS is New in medicine? That this is NOT the mere patchwork of a stimulant—the mere soothing of a narcotic? Don't you see that it goes right to the root of the trouble and eradicates the cause?

But I do not ask you to take a single statement of mine — I do not ask you to believe a word I say until you have tried my medicine in your own home at my expense absolutely. Could I offer you a full dollar's worth free if there were any misrepresentation? Could I let you go to your druggist — whom you know — and pick out any bottle he has on his shelves of my medicine were it not UNIFORMLY helpful? Could I AFFORD to do this if I were not reasonably SURE that my medicine will help you?

SIMPLY WRITE ME.

The first free bottle may be enough to effect a cure—but I do not promise that. Nor do I fear a loss of possible profit if it does. For such a test will surely convince the cured one beyond doubt, or dispute, or disbelief, that every word I say is true.

The offer is open to everyone, everywhere. But you must write ME for the free dollar bottle order. All druggists do not grant the test. I will then direct you to one that does. He will pass it down to you from his stock as freely as though your dollar laid before him. Write for the order to-day. The offer may not remain open. I will send you the book you ask for beside. It is free. It will help you to understand your case What more can I do to convince you of my interest—of my sincerity?

For a free order for a full dollar bottle you must address Dr. Shoop, Box 69 Racine, Wis. State which book you want.

FOR STOMACH TROUBLES.

The Stomach is controlled by a delicate nerve called the solar plexus. Prize fighters know that a blow over the stomach — a solar plexus blow—means a sure knock-out. For this nerve is ten times as sensitive as the pupil of your eye. Yet the solar plexus is only one of the centres of the great inside nerve — the power nerve. It is one of the master nerves. The stomach is its slave. Practically all stomach trouble is nerve trouble —inside nerve trouble — solar plexus trouble. Dr. Shoop's Restorative strengthens the solar plexus—and the stomach trouble disappears.

FOR KIDNEY TROUBLES.

The Kidneys are the blood filters. They are operated solely by the inside nerves. The branch which operates them and regulates them is called the renal plexus. When the renal plexus is weak or irregular, the kidneys become clogged with the very poisons they should throw off. No kidney treatment can clean them out or cure them and one stage leads into another until after a while the kidneys themselves begin to break down and dissolve. There is only one way to reach kidney trouble—that is through the inside nerves that control them. which Dr. Shoop's Restorative alone strengthens and restores.

FOR HEART TROUBLE.

Your Heart beats more than ten thousand times a day. And every heart beat is an impulse of the inside nerve branch called the cardiac plexus. The heart is a muscle, but it is the nerve that makes the muscle do the work. An irregular or weak heart is, almost in every instance, the direct result of a weak or irregular nerve — inside nerve. To cure heart trouble, restore the nerve to normal. Dr. Shoop's Restorative will restore the cardiac plexus, just as it restores the solar plexus and the renal plexus. For all are equal parts of the great inside nerve system — the power nerves—the master nerves.

STORIES FOR THE LADIES

WHY SOME GIRLS BECOME UNPOPULAR.

A girl should really never be unpopular, yet many are, more's the pity, and in the great majority of cases they have themselves to blame; they adopt a wrong attitude toward their sisters, and toward men also. Perhaps some of them are misunderstood, but at any rate, unpopular they are, and many of them cannot tell why.

The fact of being unpopular is a sad thing for a girl; it not only gets her disliked by her own sex, but detested by the young men, and this latter is almost a calamity.

How does a girl drift into this most undesirable position? To begin with, she is the type of girl who must always be to the fore; her own personality must never by any chance be lost sight of; she is an egotist, more or less; she is lacking in sympathy and sincerity; she cannot feel for others. If a girl friend is feeling unwell, and says so, oh, but it's nothing to what she (the unpopular girl) is feeling; she is far worse than her friend.

Again, a new dress is exhibited to her; yes, it's very nice indeed, but not like the one she has just got home from the dressmaker; why, it is perfect. Then she begins to find fault with the cut of the dress, etc. As a matter of fact she won't give in that she can possibly be beaten in anything. A girl like this never can hope to be popular; she goes right in the teeth of her own sex, so to speak.

There is no better way for a girl to endear herself to other women than by, at a time, cordially acknowledging that they have the advantage over her, it may be so far as jewelry is concerned, or clothing, or what not; so long as she just admits their superiority occasionally she is all right; they will like her, and she can make hosts of friends.

The unpopular girl, too, is an adept at sneering; indeed, she often raises this to a fine art. She thinks nothing, for instance, of saying to a girl friend who happens to be engaged, "Whatever did you see in Mr. So-and-so? Why, he isn't even good-looking, you know; he would hardly have done for me, dear, but then, you're so contented and easily pleased that way," etc.

What can she expect? Well, she may never give the matter consideration, yet that engaged girl will almost certainly class her as a kind of enemy.

But the unpopular girl goes a step farther than this; she will, without hesitation, if talking to another girl's lover, deliberately run her down before his very face and go on her way rejoicing, heedless as to any harm she may have done, and the peculiar thing is this, she may really not mean to cause harm at all; she just has the knack of doing the very things calculated to make her shunned and disliked.

It may be argued that such a girl should be paid small heed to; that her actions are the outcome of jealousy, more or less; but still she may be the means of breaking off a good match easily enough, and it is just because sweethearts readily understand this that makes her so unpopular.

If she meddles with one girl's love affairs it stands to reason that that girl will warn other girls against her, and if a young man finds out that she, likely without reason, says things against the girl of his choice, he will most certainly have nothing good to say of her to male friends. Thus, girls and youths in her circle get to know of her character, and being suspicious of how she may treat them, avoid her as far as possible.

Does the unpopular girl ever fall in love? It is very doubtful; she may have an affair of the heart in a way, but she is so insincere that to call it by the name of love would be ridiculous.

Does she ever marry? She may, but one may take it for granted that the man she weds will not have to hunt far for trouble, for this kind of girl is just the one who develops into the terror of a neighborhood, by reason of her gossiping ways and slanderous tongue.

WHAT SULPHUR DOES.

FOR THE HUMAN BODY IN HEALTH AND DISEASE.

The mention of sulphur will recall to many of us the early days when our mothers and grandmothers gave us our daily dose of sulphur and molasses every spring and fall.

It was the universal spring and fall "blood purifier," tonic and cure-all, and mind you, this old-fashioned remedy was not without merit.

The idea was good, but the remedy was crude and unpalatable, and a large quantity had to be taken to get any effect.

Nowadays we get all the beneficial effects of sulphur in a palatable, concentrated form, so that a single grain is far more effective than a tablespoonful of the crude sulphur.

In recent years, research and experiment have proven that the best sulphur for medicinal use is that obtained from Calcium (Calcium Sulphide) and sold in drug stores under the name of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. They are small chocolate-coated pellets and contain the active medicinal principle of sulphur in a highly concentrated, effective form.

Few people are aware of the value of this form of sulphur in restoring and maintaining bodily vigor and health; sulphur acts directly on the liver, and excretory organs and purifies and enriches the blood by the prompt elimination of waste material.

Our grandmothers knew this when they dosed us with sulphur and molasses every spring and fall, but the crudity and impurity of ordinary flowers of sulphur were often worse than the disease, and cannot compare with the modern concentrated preparations of sulphur, of which Stuart's Calcium Wafers is undoubtedly the best and most widely used.

They are the natural antidote for liver and kidney troubles and cure constipation and purify the blood in a way that often surprises patient and physician alike.

Dr. R. M. Wilkins, while experimenting with sulphur remedies, soon found that the sulphur from Calcium was superior to any other form. He says: "For liver, kidney and blood troubles, especially when resulting from constipation or malaria, I have been surprised at the results obtained from Stuart's Calcium Wafers. In patients suffering from boils and pimples and even deep-seated carbuncles, I have repeatedly seen them dry up and disappear in four or five days, leaving the skin clear and smooth. Although Stuart's Calcium Wafers is a proprietary article, and sold by druggists, and for that reason tabooed by many physicians, yet I know of nothing so safe and reliable for constipation, liver and kidney troubles and especially in all forms of skin disease as this remedy."

At any rate people who are tired of pills, cathartics and so-called blood "purifiers," will find in Stuart's Calcium Wafers a far safer, more palatable and effective preparation.

FOR NATIONAL 'PHONES

Sir William Mulock Goes on Record in the House.

Postmaster-General Sees No Reason Why Government Should Not Operate Them as It Conducts Post-Office—Mr. Barker, Hamilton, Opposes Issue of Watered Stock, But Mr. Fielding Justifies — A Gamble Says W. F. Maclean.

Ottawa, March 18.—The first half hour of yesterday's sitting of the House was spent in the presentation of petitions for and against the educational clauses of the autonomy bill, the former predominating as the mails had brought in from many of the parishes in Quebec the petitions signed last Sunday.

The following bills were introduced and read a first time:

Respecting the Grand River and Western Power Company—Mr. Zimmerman.

Respecting the Presbyterian College of Halifax—Mr. Lancaster.

Respecting the Farmers' Bank of Canada—Mr. Miller.

Select Phone Committee.

Sir William Mulock moved the following resolution:

"That a select committee, composed of Messrs. Burrows, Smith (Nanaimo), Johnston (Cape Breton, South), Grant, Demers (St. John and Iberville), Monk, Maclean (York), Boyce, Roche (Marquette), and the mover, be appointed to inquire into and report regarding the various public telephone systems in operation in Canada and elsewhere, as the committee shall determine; and to consider and report what changes, if any, are advisable in respect of the methods at present in force for furnishing telephone service to the public. Such committee have power to send for persons and papers, to examine persons under oath, to engage stenographers, clerical and other assistance, and to report from time to time."

Adjunct of the Post Office.

The Postmaster-General said that the wide extent to which the telephone was used demanded from Parliament considerations of the means by which its use might be still further extended. Next to the Post Office, the telephone was of the greatest use to the people. In a few years the telephone system in England would have passed under Government control, and without prejudicing the future destiny of the telephone in Canada, the result of the committee's enquiry would at least enable the House to reach the safest conclusion as to the best means of dealing with this important question.

"If I were to confess to a bias upon this subject," added Sir William, "it would be this, that I cannot see why it is not as much the duty of the State to take charge of the telephone system as it is to conduct the Post Office."

The Postmaster-General moved to add the name of Mr. Zimmerman, of Hamilton to the committee.

Congratulates Sir William.

W. F. Maclean, Mr. Logan, of Hants, and Dr. Barr congratulated the Minister on his motion, which, after being amended to include telegraphs, was adopted.

In reply to Mr. Haggart, the Minister of Railways said he would make a ministerial announcement in reference to the Canada Atlantic Railway when the Grand Trunk Railway bill came up for its third reading.

In Committee of Supply.

The House then went into committee of supply on maritime and fisheries estimates.

Protests Against Stock Issue.

On the bill respecting the Ontario and Minnesota Power Co., Mr. Barker drew attention to one of the clauses and protested against the issue by directers of paid up stock. If a company, he said, wanted to pay promoters or others for their work it should pay them in hard cash, and ought to issue paid up shares to promoters, solicitors, engineers or others. An energetic man, he said, goes to a solicitor and an engineer and formed a company. Then they buy a small property for perhaps a hundred dollars. They sell it to the company for a million dollars of stock, and then offer another million dollars to the public. The real value of the property is $1,000,000. The stock is sold for cash to people who think it is worth its face value. By this means the promoter is enabled to put in his pocket a lot of money he has not earned. Mr. Barker believed that if they abolished such a clause they would reduce by fifty per cent. the number of applications to Parliament. Mr. Barker declared that his criticisms were not directed specially against the bill before the House, but against the practice generally.

Not So Easy to Fool.

Mr. Campbell, the promoter of the bill, thought it was not so easy to fool people, and claimed that custom sanctioned the practice.

Then Mr. Fielding justified the clause by saying that such arrangements as it authorized were necessary to enable enterprises to be floated, the men behind them holding the stock so issued to recoup them for the risks they ran.

"It is a gamble," said Mr. Maclean.

"They are betting on their intelligence," answered Mr. Fielding.

The hour for discussing private bills ended before the matter was settled.

Hands Across the Border.

Ottawa, March 18.—Hon. Senators Dandurand, Speaker of the Senate; Sir Mackenzie Bowell and Senator McSweeney, of Moncton, attended the inaugural ceremonies at Washington last month, and were royally received. In recognition of the courtesies shown them, official cognizance of the friendly act towards the Canadian chamber was duly recorded in the proceedings of the Senate yesterday.

The Queen Sails.

London, March 18.—Queen Alexandra and her party, who had been stormbound at Portsmouth since Tuesday, sailed yesterday afternoon for Lisbon. Owing to rough seas the Royal yacht took shelter in Portland Harbor at 8.30 o'clock p. m.

Off to Europe.

Washington, March 18.—Secretary of State Hay and Mrs. Hay left Washington yesterday to be absent about two months. They will sail to-day for Europe.

Restoring Faded Ink.

Faded ink on old documents, papers, parchments, etc., may be restored so as to render the writing perfectly legible. The process consists in moistening the paper with water and then passing over the lines a brush which has been wetted with a solution of sulphide of ammonia. The writing will immediately appear quite dark in color, and this color in the case of parchment will be preserved. On paper, however, the color will gradually fade again, but on a fresh application of the sulphide of ammonia it will reappear. Writing executed in ordinary ink which has been rendered illegible by age may be restored by carefully moistening it with an infusion of galls or a solution of ferrocyanide of potassium slightly acidulated with hydrochloric acid. Care must be taken to apply the liquid so as to prevent the ink from spreading.

POPULAR IDEAS REGARDING CATARRH.

It is the common belief that what is popularly known as catarrh is simply a chronic cold in the head. This is true as far as it goes, but as a matter of fact catarrh is by no means confined to the nasal passages, but extends wherever the mucous membrane extends, which means nearly every part of the body.

The mucous membrane is the inside skin of the body and is nearly as extensive as the outside skin, and any inflammation of this membrane causing an extra secretion of fluid is really catarrh.

Catarrh is, therefore, an old enemy disguised by many confusing names, for instance: Rhinitis is nasal catarrh; laryngitis and pharyngitis, throat catarrh; gastritis, stomach catarrh; cystitis and nephritis, catarrh of the bladder and kidneys.

Therefore, although the location of the trouble gives it various names, in reality the sum total is catarrh and nothing else.

Do not make the mistake of thinking you have no catarrh because the head and nose appear to be clear. If there is a cough, tickling in the throat and hoarseness you have throat catarrh, if there is no appetite, but nausea, gagging and disgust for food especially in the morning, you have catarrh of the stomach.

The surest treatment for every form of catarrh is an external remedy, which acts especially on the blood and mucous membranes; such a remedy is the new preparation sold everywhere by druggists under the name of Stuart's Catarrh Tablets, a medicine in pleasant tablet form and containing all the best and latest specifics for catarrh.

Stuart's Catarrh Tablets contain in highly concentrated form, bloodroot, red gum of the Eucalyptus tree, and many others equally valuable curative elements, and no one who suffers from any form of catarrh and has seen the inefficiency of douches, sprays and powders will ever go back to them after once trying so pleasant a preparation as Stuart's Catarrh Tablets, and one which gives so much relief in so short a time.

All druggists sell Stuart's Catarrh Tablets at 50 cts. for full sized package and the regular, daily use of them will effectually cure this troublesome and dangerous disease.

What is that which is lengthened by being cut at both ends? Answer—A ditch.

There can be a difference of opinion on most subjects, but there is only one opinion as to the reliability of Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator. It is safe, sure and effectual.

What coat is finished without buttons and put on wet? Answer—A coat of paint.

Are you a sufferer with corns? If you are, get a bottle of Holloway's Corn Cure. It has never been known to fail.

If you were to ride a donkey what fruit would you resemble? Answer—A pair.

Sudden transition from a hot to a cold temperature, exposure to rain, sitting in a draught, unseasonable substitution of light for heavy clothing, are fruitful causes of colds and the resultant cough so perilous to persons of weak lungs. Among the many medicines for bronchial disorders so arising, there is none better than Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. Try it and become convinced. Price 25 cents.

Why is bread like the sun? Answer—Because it rises from the yeast.

They Are Carefully Prepared.—Pills which dissipate themselves in the stomach cannot be expected to have much effect upon the intestines, and to overcome costiveness the medicine administered must influence the action of these canals. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are so made, under the supervision of experts, that the substance in them intended to operate on the intestines is retarded in action until they pass through the stomach to the bowels.

Name something with two heads and one body. Answer—A barrel.

A Small Pill, but Powerful.—They that judge of the powers of a pill by its size, would consider Parmelee's Vegetable Pills to be lacking. It is a little wonder among pills. What it lacks in size it makes up in potency. The remedies which it carries are put up in these small doses, because they are so powerful that only small doses are required. The full strength of the extracts is secured in this form and do their work thoroughly.

What black thing enlightens the world? Answer—Ink.

A Requisite for the Rancher.—On the cattle ranges of the West, where men and stock are far from doctors and apothecaries, Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil is kept on hand by the intelligent as a ready made medicine, not only for many human ills, but as a horse and cattle medicine of surpassing merit. A horse and cattle rancher will find matters greatly simplified by using this Oil.

An Irishman gave his wife away by talking in his sleep. That is nothing. Plenty of wives give their husbands away by talking while awake.

It is worse than madness to neglect a cough, or cold which is easily subdued if taken in time but becomes, when left to itself, the forerunner of consumption and premature death. Inflammation, when it attacks the delicate tissue of the lungs and bronchial tubes, travels with perilous rapidity; then do not delay, get a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, the medicine that grasps this formidable foe of the human body, and drives it from the system. This medicine promotes a free and easy expectoration, subdues the cough, heals the diseased parts, and exerts a most wonderful influence in curing consumption, and other diseases of the throat and lungs. If parents wish to save the lives of their children, and themselves from much anxiety, trouble and expense, let them procure a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, and whenever a child has taken cold, has a cough or hoarseness, give the Syrup according to directions.

"Heavy work, severe straining and evil habits in youth brought on a double varicocele. When I worked hard the aching would become severe and I was often laid up for a week at a time. My family physician told me an operation was my only hope—but I dreaded it. I tried several specialists, but soon found out all they wanted was my money. I commenced to look upon all doctors as little better than rogues. One day my boss asked me why I was off work so much and I told him my condition. He advised me to consult Drs. Kennedy and Kergan, as he had taken treatment from them himself and knew they were square and skillful. He wrote them and got the New Method Treatment for me. My progress was somewhat slow and during the first month's treatment I was somewhat discouraged. However, I continued treatment for three months longer and was rewarded with a complete cure. I could only earn $12 a week in a machine shop before treatment, now I am earning $3 and never lose a day. I wish all sufferers knew of your valuable treatment.

Linked by Fate

BY CHARLES GARVICE

Author of "The Verdict of the Heart," "A Heritage of Hate," "Nell of Shorne Mills," "Paid For," "A Modern Juliet," Etc.

No! I refuse your money; but—but if you offer your friendship, your affection, may I say—"

Vane extended his hand.

"Put it that way," he said, gravely. "Blood is thicker than water. See here, we will go down to Lesborough to-morrow, I as the earl and master, you as the heir apparent—I think that's the way they describe it. We'll be friends, Julian—What on earth is that peculiar scent, odor, which hangs about this room?" he broke off to enquire.

Julian looked round absently, then smiled and shrugged his shoulders.

"I am rather fond of dabbling in chemistry. My father had a like taste; it was one of the reasons for his rupture with the late earl. His Lordship could not understand how a Mannering could interest himself in such a commonplace subject. I use the room next this as a kind of laboratory. Come and see."

He arose and going to the door opened it and stood aside for Vane to enter.

Vane looked in. It was a small room lighted by a window with a screen of yellow silk. There was a strange looking fireplace with crucibles and retorts, and there were tables and shelves on which were books and chemical apparati.

Vane glanced round with faint interest; he was not scientific by any means.

"Rum fancy," he remarked. "What's the good of it?"

Julian shrugged his shoulders.

"Oh, I don't know. Not much, I suppose. But it amuses me. Now you, I imagine, go in for sport?"

Vane nodded.

"Yes; sport of any and every kind. If I remember rightly, there was not much hunting or shooting at Lesborough."

"The late earl starved it—so Mr. Tressider said."

"Quite so. Well, I'll alter that, at any rate," said Vane. "What's that thing on the fire? I fancy it's that that smells so?"

Julian Shore lifted a steel pot or kettle from the slowly-burning fire.

"Oh, only an experiment," he said. He led the way back to the sitting-room. "Are you fond of music?" he asked in a casual way. "I'm no performer, but I'm a splendid listener. You play, or sing? Let's hear you!"

Julian pushed a cigar cabinet to Vane, then, with a gesture of apology and self-depreciation, went to the piano and struck a prelude of chords and sang.

Vane listened with rapt attention and admiration.

"My dear fellow, you're almost good enough for grand opera!" he said. "You've got a devil of a voice!"

"My mother sang well, I believe," said Julian, modestly.

Vane, who was as sensitive to music as a cobra, heaved a sigh; for the soft, dulcet strain had brought back the island to him. "I must be going. My friends, the Letchfords—I'm staying with them—will wonder what the devil has become of me. Well, it's fixed; you and I go down to Lesborough to-morrow. What's the train, do you know?"

Julian knew. Had he not looked it up in Bradshaw when he thought he should be the next earl?

"Ten-fifty," he said, "from Waterloo."

Vane held out his hand and gripped the soft, white one warmly.

"Right. We'll go down together."

Julian accompanied him to the door and stood there watching the stalwart figure as it strode away. Then he mounted to the sitting-room. The old woman was clearing the luncheon things, and she stopped and looked at her master questioningly.

But he mentioned to her to go, and sinking into a chair leaned his handsome head on his hand.

Presently his thin, crimson lips moved, and he murmured:

"Only him between me and an earldom, between me and wealth—wealth! And he is not married. A young man like myself. Only him! If anything were to happened to him— But it won't. He'll live to be ninety. It's just like my luck, to be within an ace of a peerage and miss it. I feel like cursing him for all his good-natured offer of friendship. But cursing wouldn't kill him. If it would—"

There came a hissing soung from the laboratory, as if something were boiling over, and he sprang to his feet and ran eagerly into the next room, as if he had forgotten Vane and the lost earldom.

CHAPTER XII.

Vane, as he walked away from Julian's house, was in a peculiar state of mind. He felt drawn towards his cousin; blood is thicker than water; and Vane had been touched by the way in which Julian had accepted his disappointment and proffered his friendship to the man who had crushed his hopes of a peerage. But there was something about Julian—his weird place of abode, his taste for chemistry, and indifference to the awful odor arising from his experiments—which jarred upon Vane, something in the expression of his dark eyes, the sudden drooping of the lids, which militated against the favorable impression created by the handsome face and graceful form.

Vane shrugged his shoulders.

"I'm a fanciful beast; and my nerves are rags," he said to himself. "Anyway, I've got to make the best of him. He's the only relative I know, and he'll be the next earl; I shall never marry. I'll make a friend of him, treat him as the heir."

The reflection sent him off on the old track, and as he strode along he thought of Nina. Though he was convinced that she had been lost, he had, for weeks after his arrival in London, sought amongst the shipping companies for tidings of a castaway, but, chancing to miss the owners of the Island Queen, he did not hear of the picking up of the girl tied to a portion of a raft. Yes, she was dead, and he had been spared that he might spend the remainder of his life in futile remorse and regret.

Quite heedless of the direction in which he was going, he sauntered on, and presently, awaking from his reverie, he found himself in Piccadilly, at the entrance to Hyde Park. He turned in absently and strolled towards the Row. It was the fashionable hour of the day and the place was crowded, and Vane lit another of Julian's cigars and, leaning on the rail, surveyed the riders as they passed him. The walk was thronged with promenaders; and little groups of friends and acquaintances were chatting and laughing together, making a pleasant little hum and buzz which, pleasant as it was, made Vane feel very lonely.

Some of the voices were so distinct that they reached his ear. He listened mechanically and heard a man who was talking with some ladies say:

"Yes, she's just gone past. Looks wonderfully well and fit, doesn't she?"

"It's the first time she has put in an appearance since his death, isn't it? What a terrible blow and—disappointment it must have been to her! Think of missing being a marchioness! And so narrowly! Most girls would have been utterly crushed."

"But not she," drawled the man. "She's a good plucked one. Yes, she's missed the marquis, but I shouldn't wonder if she goes for a duke next time. There she is again."

"Yes, there she is," said the lady. "I suppose that black habit is for mourning?"

Vane was turning away when his eye fell on a lady who was riding slowly towards him. It would have been difficult for him not to have noticed her, for she was an extremely beautiful woman, and she was riding a superb horse which she sat with a perfect ease that the restless movements of the high-spirited animal did not in the least appear to disturb. By her side were riding two or three men; and as she pulled up close to the railing just above where Vane was standing, other men pressed up to the spot, snatching off their hats and evidently eager to attract her attention and exchange a word or two with her, while every one who rode or walked past her, whether they knew her or not, regarded her intently and with evident interest.

After all, and with a due regard to the claims of other nationalities, is there anything in the wide world more moving and heart stirring than a beautiful young English girl? And this was one of the loveliest of the type. She sat erect on her thoroughbred, with her face full in the sunlight that lit up the exquisite color of her thick hair of bronze and gold, which the gentle breeze had blown in soft rings over her forehead. Her eyes shone like sapphires in the clear ivory of her face, and her lips, as perfectly formed as those of a Grecian statue, were curved with a pensive smile. When she was alone the sapphire eyes were apt to grow cold and a trifle hard—one hesitates to write "calculating"—and the lips, without their smile, narrowed and lost their exquisite curve—but in public both the well-trained eyes and lips were on duty, so to speak, and took upon them any and every expression which their owner willed.

As Vane looked at her his heart gave one bound, then seemed to fall into an almost unnatural calm, a calm which made him marvel at himself; for not so long since the sight of this face, the sound of this girl's voice had never failed to send the blood racing through his veins.

Quite unreflectingly he remained where he was, leaning on the rail watching her with moody eyes which expressed the dead calm and indifference which had fallen on him; and when, after a moment or two, she nodded her adieux to the group—the members of which had all the attitude and manners of courtiers—and, touching her horse moved towards him, he still leaned over the rails and waited for her. She was almost abreast of him before she saw him, for she was bowing, with the pensive smile, to some friends on the other side of the ride, but it would have been well nigh impossible for any one to have passed his stalwart figure and handsome face, with their indefinable air of distinction, without noticing him, and presently her glance fell on him.

The sapphire eyes contracted and closed for a moment, the ivory of her face went a dead white, the smile fled from her lips and her hand involuntarily closed so tightly on the rein that the horse stopped and tossed his head impatiently.

She was so close to Vane that he could see the quiver of the lips, the flicker of the lids which had dropped over the brilliant eyes. He stood upright and, regarding her with the calmness which still vaguely surprised himself, raised his hat.

She bent her head and her lips moved, but at first with no sound, then she said in a low, still voice:

"Vane!"

"How do you do, Lady Marlingford?" he said in just the ordinary tone of polite greeting.

Her white teeth closed on her lip for a moment, then she bent her head. The "Lady Marlingford" was like a blow to her from the man who had been wont to breathe "Judith" as if it were a psalm of life, a sonnet of love.

"I—I did not know you were—back," she said. "And why do you call me Lady Marlingford?" she added, her brows drawn as if with pain.

He ought to have been startled by the question, but it would have taken very little less than an earthquake to startle poor Vane at this period of his existence.

"How do I err?" he asked, not bitterly, but with a placidity which cut her more deeply than any bitterness would have done. "You were just on the point of marrying Lord Marlingford when I left England—if you remember."

She raised her head and looked at him. The group to which he had been absently listening was quite close and within hearing, and she made a slight gesture with her hand.

"Will you come a little farther up the ride?" she said in a very low voice.

Vane hesitated for an instant. He had loved this girl with a love which he had thought eternal, had well nigh lost his reason when she had betrayed and deserted him; but now he had not the least desire to talk with her. His love for Nina—how in its purity and truth it shamed his old passion for Judith Orme!—had wiped out all thought of and desire for any other woman, even for this exquisitely beautiful one. But he could scarcely refuse her request and, with a nod, he moved beside her to a vacant space. She took her horse close to the rail and bent down, so that she could whisper to him; he was still sensible of the grace of her movements, but only sensible of it as one is conscious of the grace of a particularly beautiful statue or a singularly charming picture.

"Don't you know? Have you not heard?" she said with the faintest tremor in her voice, the voice which used to thrill him.

"Heard what?" he said, almost bluntly.

She regarded him with a chastened air.

"Poor Lord Marlingford died just—just before our—our wedding day," she said brokenly.

Vane's eyelids did not even flicker, and he looked at her steadily.

"Poor beggar!" he said. "I'm sorry. I'm sorry for him." And he was genuinely sorry, for he remembered what the loss of her had been to himself. "I hadn't heard—"

She drew a long breath. "No? When did you come back to England? We heard that you were lost. And I—I was—sorry. I felt—when did you come back?"

"Some time since," he replied. "And so Lord Marlingford died! Accept my most sincere condolences, Miss Orme."

The sapphire eyes rested on him with sweet reproach.

"Miss Orme! Ah, Vane, you cannot forgive! You did not understand. You do not understand, even now—"

Vane's lips began to curl.

"I beg your pardon," he said with polite interest, nothing more.

She sighed again as she curbed the impatience and restlessness of the Arab.

"I want to tell you—but this is no place. But I must congratulate you, Vane."

"On my succession to the title?" he said. "Thanks!"

Her eyes swept over his seedy serge suit, and, as if in response, he said:

"I only heard it last night. I came back from—I was in London, hard up, and, well, I suppose looking for something to do, when I heard the news. Sir Charles Letchford happened to spot me—"

She tossed her beautiful head slightly.

"The Letchfords? Yes. They used to be friends of mine, but Blanche has cut me lately, since—she did not understand, as you do not understand, that I was the victim of circumstances. You know what my father is—what my life has been—"

Vane regarded her calmly. There was a note of appeal in her musical voice which would have reached his heart and elicited a quick response some months ago; but it did not move him now.

"I—I can't tell you all now," she said. "Will you not come to see me?"

Vane hesitated a moment. If the woman who hesitates is lost, how much more so is the man!

"Thanks, I shall be very pleased," he said.

Her lips parted with a smile, a smile that was almost one of humble gratitude.

"You will? Ah, that is good of you! And I want to hear all that has happened to you. You will tell me, won't you?"

Vane, thinking that he certainly would not, replied, as in duty bound:

"Certainly."

"You—you are not looking well," she murmured, the sapphire eyes sweeping over his face and the seedy serge suit.

"I've been down on my luck," said Vane, in response to the glance, "and I heard of the change in my fortunes so recently that I haven't had time to pull myself together."

"And I am changed also; don't you notice it?" she said, sadly.

"Can't say I do," replied Vane. "You seem to me as—as charming as ever, Judith." He had intended to say "Miss Orme;" but the familiar name escaped him.

Her eyes lit up for a moment, but she veiled them instantly.

Constipation

Fruit is nature's laxative. Plenty of fruit will prevent Constipation, but won't cure it. Why? Because the laxative principles of fruit are held in peculiar combination and are very mild.

After years of labor, an Ottawa physician accidently discovered the secret process by which

Fruit-a-tives

or Fruit Liver Tablets

are made. He used fruit juices; but by combining them in a peculiar way, their action on the liver, kidneys, stomach and skin is increased many times. "FRUIT-A-TIVES" TABLETS contain all the medical properties of fruit—are a mild and gentle laxative—and the only permanent cure for Constipation, Torpid Liver, Sick Headaches, Bad Stomach and Kidney Troubles.

BURGLAR AS A GUEST.

Servant Cleaned His Boots While He Slept.

A Louth milkman named Wright Simons, on going downstairs the other morning, found a man sleeping on the couch in a sitting room which he let to a local curate. Thinking the clergyman had sheltered the man for the night, the landlord cleaned his boots, which were close to the fireplace, beside the curate's, and told the maid not to disturb the visitor.

He was surprised, however, that a clergyman should associate with a man who wore such disreputable boots, and the maid was also surprised when she took the boots in and noticed that the visitor looked more like a tramp than a gentleman.

Obeying her master's instructions to be quiet, the maid lit the fire in the sitting room and dusted the apartment with as little noise as possible. However, the sleeping man awoke, took his shining boots from the maid, and shortly afterwards left the house.

It was then found that a large piece of ham and some bread, buns and fruit which had been left for Mr. Tucker's supper had been eaten. When he came downstairs, the curate was bantered about his friend's appetite, and then Mr. Simons found, to his amazement, that the visitor must have been a burglar, for Mr. Tucker knew nothing about him.

After some enquiries, the police arrested a rough-looking man, who gave the name of Charles Backstrom, and who said he was an engineer on a trawler, and a man of German descent.

Prinsep's Will.

Mr. Valentine Prinsep, the eminent painter, who died in November last, has left estate of the value of £7,288. The will, which is dated 1889, is in Mr. Prinsep's own handwriting, sets forth that:

"I, being in sound mind and perfect health, do hereby give and devise all my property of every kind unreservedly and absolutely to my dear wife Florence Prinsep, to her implicity to do the best and act in the justest manner towards our children, and I appoint her residuary legatee of all that may fall to me.

"I have perfect confidence that she will bring up our children worthily, and give them an education to enable them to take their place in the rank they ought to hold as gentlemen in the best sense. I desire, under any circumstances, that they be brought up to believe themselves dependent upon their own exertions, and that they may be started in whatever profession their talents may seem to point, holding the opinion that a man with nothing to do is necessarily dissatisfied and consequently unhappy. In these views, I have the confidence my dear wife will agree with me."

Nobody can help being born stupid, but anybody can help becoming stupider than he was born.—Lady Helen Forbes.

The Chance He Lost.

"Why are you so sad, Alice?" her mother asked.

"I've decided not to keep company with Mr. Jonesby any more."

"Dear me! Have you heard anything about him?"

"No. But last night when I said I wished that I was a man he merely asked me why, instead of getting excited and saying that life would be hateful to him if I had not been born a girl."

SOME RED TAPE HUMORS

SCHOOLMAM EXPERIENCE WITH LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL.

How Her Simple Request for a Towel-Roller Set the Wheels of the Cumbrous Municipal Machine in Motion—Before it Was Secured an Official Visit and Vigorous Correspondence Were Required—An Astonished Official.

During the summer of 1904 the London County Council forwarded some new round towels for the use of the infants' department of a National School in a remote suburb of London. The schoolmistress rejoiced in the acquisition, but, unfortunately, the school possessed no roller on which to hang them—the towels hitherto in use being of a shape that enabled them to be suspended from a nail in the wall. She therefore requested her school managers to provide her with a towel-roller.

This simple request set the wheels of the cumbrous municipal machine in motion. The managers discussed the question, and were of opinion that a towel-roller was not a part of the fabric, but came under the head of furniture, for which the Council were responsible. So the secretary was asked to inform the Council of the need of the towel-roller, at the same time offering to obtain the article and have it fixed for the Council if they were permitted to do so.

It was ascertained that a new towel-roller could be obtained for 9½d.

After a few weeks had passed an inspector from the Embankment journeyed out to this remote infant school—return fare, first-class, 2s 9d—apparently to satisfy the Council that the towel-roller was really wanted. More weeks elapsed, and nothing was heard of the matter. So the secretary wrote again to the Council to ascertain how the question was progressing. In reply he was informed that "the Council's decision with regard to the supply of a towel-roller was that "the stores department had been requested to expedite the delivery of the article.'"

This was encouraging, and the patient teacher awaited its arrival in pleasant anticipation. A few weeks later she received the gratifying news that the roller had actually been forwarded. But by accident the long-expected roller was delivered at another school, much to the surprise of the teacher in charge, who laid it upon a shelf, thinking that the Council in its wisdow, had some special purpose in view in sending her a towel-roller that she had not asked for.

Meantime a vigorous correspondence was proceeding between the infants' mistress and the Council, and eventually the roller that had strayed was found and the mystery of its disappearance cleared up. But when it ultimately reached its destination it turned out to be only an old one—a towel-roller that had been used before and discarded by someone.

Nevertheless, the old roller was better than no roller, and the happy teacher, rejoicing in the pleasures of possession, promptly called in a man with a hammer and four stout nails. The thing was fixed firmly to the wall, and the young unwashed revelled in the joys of a round-towel.

In course of time another official appeared upon the scene. He was an executive officer who had come down to "see about putting up a towel-roller that had been supplied by the Education Committee of the London County Council."

His astonishment was great when he found the article already in position. His duty forestalled, the work done.

But the question arose, who was to pay for the fixing? This was a knotty point, and evidently occasioned considerable anxiety, for yet another official visit was made some days later to instruct the mistress to pay the bill for fixing, amounting to sixpence, send up the receipt, and the amount would be refunded. This has been done, and doubtless the Council will return the sixpence some day.

Burns Got the Silver.

Bobby Burns' associations with Carlisle were of an active personal character, as there are interesting anecdotes to prove. It was at Carlisle that he fell into the company of three farmers, and in the course of their conviviality the farmers agreed with Burns to try their hand at versemaking, and all four deposited half a crown on the table for the one who wrote the best. Burns, by the way, on entering the room, was welcomed by the others as "Johnny Peep." What the farmers wrote is not known, but the following was Burns' production, and of course he lifted the "siller":

I, Johnny Peep,
Saw three fat sheep,
And these three sheep saw me;
Half a crown apiece
Will pay for their fleece,
And so Johnny Peep goes free.

Sir C. C. Knollys, K. C. M. G.

Sir Clement Courtenay Knollys, K. C., M. G., at present Colonial Secretary of Trinidad and Tobago, who has been appointed Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the Leeward Islands, in succession to Sir Gerald Strickland, appointed to be Governor of Tasmania, was born in 1849, the fourth son of the late Rev. W. F. Erskine Knollys, honorary Canon of Canterbury, says The London Star. From Magdalen College, Oxford, he went into the Colonial Civil Service in 1874, and has at various times administered the Governments of Barbados, St. Lucia and Grenada, in addition to his present appointment at Trinidad and Tobago. In his university days he was a notable oarsman, and rowed in the Oxford and Cambridge races of 1872 and 1873. He won the Diamond Sculls at Henley in 1872, and the Goblets in 1873, and was champion amateur sculler in 1872.

Antiquity of the Cotswold.

The Cotswold must be one of the oldest breeds of sheep, for tradition has it that King Richard I. (1189-1199) sent animals of the breed to Spain, and that it was from these, always famous for the excellence of their wool, the Merino breed was raised, which breed was introduced in England at the latter end of the eighteenth century.

STOPPED AT THE ALTAR.

Family Quarrel Interrupts Wedding in England, and, Son Being Under Age, it Was Abandoned.

The romance, though happily not the tragedy of Romeo and Juliet, has just been re-enacted in real life in the small East Lancashire Town of Darwen, says The Daily Express.

Both Romeo and Juliet were members of families of equal status, and having made up their minds to be quietly married at Holy Trinity Church, the banns were put up and published the required number of times.

As no one came forward on any of the three legal opportunities on the invitation of the clergyman, the Rev. L. Savatard, to put forward any "cause or just impediment," all was assumed to be well, and the young couple made all their preparations for married life.

Then a bolt fell from the blue. The heads of the two families quarrelled; Montague and Capulet were at feud.

The young couple deemed it no quarrel of theirs, and went on with their preparations, resolving, however, to keep the date of their prospective wedding a secret. Romeo would wed, no matter what obstacle, and Juliet, like Barkis, was "willin.'"

One day, abjuring wedding finery, and wearing their everyday clothes, they each went secretly to church.

Alas! the wedding ceremony which united the real Romeo and Juliet was destined to be interrupted in this case.

They had reached the altar, and the wedding service had begun, when a commotion at the church door heralded the dramatic arrival of the father of the bridegroom.

"I forbid the ceremony," he cried. The clergyman was astonished and asked for an explanation.

"My son," he said, "shall not marry the daughter of a man with whom I am not on friendly terms. My son is a minor, and without my consent he cannot marry."

The clergyman sought to move him, the young couple made tearful appeals; but the father refused to yield, though his son will be of age in a few months. The ceremony was abandoned.

A Million Pound Will.

According to details circulated in Margate, England, a will made over one hundred years ago, and affecting the disposition of property valued at upwards of £1,000,000, has been discovered by accident. The story, which lacks confirmation, is as follows:

A few days ago a Mrs. Horn, who resides at Byron Road, Margate, was taking down from the wall an old copy of Landseer's picture, "Shoeing the Old Bay Mare," when a small parcel of parchment fell from the back.

Not thinking it of any value, Mrs. Horn gave it to her children as a plaything. The little ones soon commenced to cut it to pieces with scissors.

Some time afterwards Mrs. Horn happened to mention the find casually to a neighbor, Mr. H. Gisby, who is the caretaker of the Arcade Seamen's Rooms. His answer made her rush indoors to gather together all the pieces of the half-destroyed parchment.

"It must be the will of my great-grandfather, Jacob Gisby," said her neighbor. "He died at Swadling, in the Isle of Thanet, and was known to have money. Gisby's have been advertised for several times in the Chancery List, but we have all been too poor to claim our rights."

The will is signed by "Jacob Gisby, a yeoman," and also bears the sealed signature of Nathaniel Austen, named as executor, and John Harman, his clerk. It bears the date May 25, 1795.

It bequeaths the testator's property, which is situate in Thanet, and which of course, has increased enormously in value since 1795, to the males of the Gisby family, of whom there are now twenty-one living, all of them being in very humble stations.

The eldest surviving grandson of the testator is Mr. James Gisby, who is shrimper, living at Upper Strand St., Sandwich.

The £1,000,000 will and the picture behind which it was concealed were bought a year ago for ninepence, Mrs. Horn becoming its owner at an auction sale held in Margate.

Curious Jail.

The most curious prison in the world is in the Island of Sark, a little spot in the home dominion of England. They have very good folk in Sark, and crime is son infrequent that an "open door jail" is the only penal institution in the place. There are very few arrests. The most recent was of a woman accused of stealing handkerchiefs.

She was placed in jail, and all of the sympathizing women of the island sat around the door and told her stories to pass away the time. The next morning she walked out to the Magistrate's house and asked whether he would release her if she promised to be good and not steal any more handkerchiefs. He said she might go and formally released her in his capacity as warder. As constable, also, he offered no obstacle to her immediate departure.

This insular Pooh Bah, in fact, is as much of a curiosity as the jail.

Breaking it Gently.

"An' did ye br-r-eak th' news iv Ca-a-sey's death to th' widdy, Terence?"

"I did, an' I did ut gintly. I said: 'Good mornin', Mrs. Ca-a-sey. It's good luck ye're afther havin' to-day,' sez I.

"'An' phwat's th' good luck?' sez she.

"'Ye've come into a tidy sum iv money,' sez I.

"'Th' saints be praised!' sez she. 'An' where's th' money comin' from, Terence?'

"'From yer husban's life insurance,' sez I. 'Sure he was kilt be th' blast this mornin'!'"

Sea Gull Surprises Cigarette Smoker.

While a number of people were watching the antics of the sea gulls, which rose continually to the parapet of London Bridge recently in search of the food which several of the spectators were throwing to them, one gentleman gave a large bag of sprats to the gulls, who eagerly took the fish from his fingers one at a time.

Standing close by was another spectator who held an unlighted cigarette in his lips.

Judge of the latter's surprise when one daring bird, finding no sprat awaiting him, suddenly swooped on the cigarette and deftly removed it from the owner's mouth.—London Mail.

Kitchener as Stage Manager.

Mr. Hermann Klein relates the following little story of Lord Kitchener in his "Thirty Years of Musical Life in London":

"At Drury Lane on one occasion, actively assisting the manager in training an army of supers in an imaginary fight with African natives, was a gentleman in a frock coat and tall hat, of undeniable military appearance, who impressed me both by his quiet, masterful manner and the imperturbable patience with which he directed manoeuvres, to be repeated over and over again until they were satisfactorily executed.

"After the rehearsal Sir Augustus Harris beckoned me to approach.

"'Klein,' he said, 'I want to introduce you to my friend, Major Kitchener, who has been kind enough to come and help me with a little soldiering work.'"

REASON № 20
WHY YOU SHOULD USE
Red Rose Tea

Because it is Economical.

Red Rose Tea is composed of what are known in the trade as "high-grown" Ceylon and Indian teas. These teas are grown at high altitudes on the mountain slopes, where the tea bushes grow more slowly and are more carefully cultivated than in the valleys, where the climate is warm and humid.

High-grown tea is not only a finer quality, but contains much more tea juice or extract than valley-grown tea.

This can be easily proved by comparing a drawing of Red Rose with any other tea. By doing so you will find that a pound of Red Rose Tea will spend as far as 1¼ to 1½ lbs. of other teas.

The saving is most apparent in the Blue Label and better grades—buy a pound and make the test.

Arsenic in Beer Barrel.

Extraordinary evidence was given at an inquest at Bury St. Edmunds, England, on Robert Dickman, a farm laborer, who died after drinking a glass of home-brewed beer at the North Stow Farm, on the Culford estate.

The county analyst stated that an analysis of a sample of the beer of which Dickman had partaken had revealed the presence of 98 grains of arsenic per pint, sufficient to kill 25 or 30 persons.

The barrel from which the beer was taken was shown to have originally contained a double-strength weed destroyer, consisting of a strong solution of arsenic. When sent out by the manufacturer it bore large brass labels at either end, warning users of the dangerous contents of the barrel.

The career of the barrel was traced through various hands until it was finally sold by auction to a West Stow butcher, who afterwards sold it to Dickman's brother-in-law, the tenant of North Stow Farm, who used it for brewing beer.

Arsenic was found by the analyst still clinging to the sides of the barrel, and he estimated that there was sufficient to kill over 2,400 persons.

The jury brought in a verdict of "Death from misadventure."

Queen and Good Woman.

The London Times says: The Queen received at Buckingham Palace recently the Rev. W. Carlile, Honorary Chief Secretary of the Church Army, who laid before Her Majesty a statement of the operations of the institution. We learn from a statement furnished by Mr. Carlile that when told that her generous gift of £50 at Christmas had stimulated others to provide in all over 6,000 dinners for those who would otherwise have had none, Her Majesty said: "I was deeply touched by the accounts I read of the affectionate sympathy with which the poor deaf people received the mention of my name." Her Majesty made special enquiries after the prisoners' wives and children, and seemed most thankful that the Princess of Wales and others were helping the Church Army to get work for them till their husbands came out. She made special enquiries concerning the respectable married men, with wives and families, who were being relieved by the Mansion House fund. "I am so glad," she said, "that aid can come through you to hundreds of those who cannot qualify by six months' residence for the Mansion House relief." Her Majesty then referred to two special cases which had been assisted by the Church Army—one being a bricklayer, whom she had herself assisted. She thanked the Church Army for finding him immediate work, as it had enabled him to begin getting his furniture out of pawn. She was grateful to the Church Army for enabling a woman whom she had recommended to find work. She sent affectionate greetings to all the earnest workers of the Church Army throughout the world, encouraging them to live and labor for the good of others. Finally, she said, "Tell your dear helpers throughout the world how I think of and pray for them."

Rielly Not Called to Testify in Ruttan's Trial—Missing Ballots in Frontenac—Phil Lott, Harpell, the Watertown Tinsmith and Others Tell Same Story as at Investigation—The Defence—Ruttan's Blanket Denial of Phil Lott's Statements.

FRIDAY AFTERNOON SESSION CONTINUED.

Both defence and prosecution were liberal in challenges, and it looked as though the whole afternoon would be used up in selecting a jury. It was noticeable that the defence objected to many more than the prosecution. The following jury was finally selected:

Charles Armitage, Deseronto.
Wesley Reid, Limerick.
W. A. Gerneau, Tyendinaga.
Thos. Foley, Belleville.
Edward Demill, Rawdon.
John Fitzgerald, Thurlow.
Arthur Graham, Belleville.
John Gay, Rawdon.
H. C. Greenleaf, Belleville.
Perry Gill, Belleville.
Geo. Huffman, Madoc.
S. F. Finkle, Hungerford.

The clerk of the court read the indictment, and trial of Rex vs. Ruttan was on.

Mr. Riddell suggested a way to shorten the trial. He did not deny the existence of a conspiracy, but denied that his client was connected with it; it was not necessary to produce evidence to prove the existence of a conspiracy.

The Crown Prosecutor said it would be necessary to go on with the case proper to prove the case against Ruttan.

RIELLY ARRAIGNED.

He asked that Frank J. Rielly, who he understood was in the court house, should be arraigned.

Rielly came in and was escorted up to face the Judge. He pleaded not guilty, subject to the objections raised by his counsel yesterday.

Mr. Johnston asked the Judge to allow Rielly's bail to be renewed. Rielly, he said, had an excellent and valid excuse for his absence yesterday. He asked that bail be again granted.

The Judge said he had no objection, providing the Crown Counsel had no objection.

Mr. Hellmuth said he did most decidedly object to bail being again granted. He had not the same faith in Rielly's story that his counsel had.

Mr. Johnston then said he had another matter which he wished to bring before His Lordship. Certain comments had been made by local and other papers which reflected severely on his client. If this occurred again he would be compelled to ask His Lordship to order punishment of the papers in question.

The Judge said that the comments in question were no doubt caused by the fact that Rielly had left the County town. Had he stayed and faced his trial there would, probably, have been no comments made in regard to his case. The Judge then spoke of certain references which, he said, had been made by papers in reference to the alleged laxity of certain officials. There was, the Judge said, no responsibility in the case of anybody. No one had the right to take Rielly into custody till his bondsmen delivered him into court. Comment of this kind, the Judge said, were cruel, and unjust to the parties criticized.

Rielly left the court room, in company with Jailor Appleby. He is now in jail.

RUTTAN'S TRIAL BEGINS.

The Crown Prosecutor then addressed the jury at some length. He explained the ballot-box conspiracy. The plot, he said, originated with W. J. Shibley and had wide ramifications. The story was plainly told. Speaking of the crime of conspiracy, the Crown Prosecutor said that, though some men might have taken a more prominent part than others, all concerned were, in the eyes of the law, equally responsible if they were proven to have taken any part at all. The Crown Prosecutor produced a genuine ballot-box, and explained the difference between it and the bogus ballot-boxes brought into Canada from Watertown. They would, the Crown Prosecutor said, produce evidence to prove that one of those bogus boxes had actually been used. It was evident, from the way the Crown Counsel told the story, that he was exceedingly well posted in the main facts of the case, with which our readers are already well acquainted. Referring to the fictitious person, "Kerfoot," who got the bogus boxes from the Albion Hotel, Kingston, the Crown Prosecutor said evidence would be produced to prove that Edward G. Ruttan was the man who took away the boxes addressed to Kerfoot and took them away. The Crown had not all the boxes, though they had a number. The boxes addressed to Phil Lott were accounted for; the boxes which went to Bremner were—no one knew, except the parties who know where they put them. Nine of the Frontenac boxes were in possession of the Crown; the whereabouts of the other box were unknown. The story of the drowning of the boxes in Sydenham Lake was graphically told, and the audience smiled broadly. The Crown Prosecutor reiterated his former statement, that, if Ruttan were proven to have taken even the smallest part in the conspiracy, he must be found guilty equally as though he had taken a principal part.

The Crown Prosecutor then called his first witness, who was

MR. PHILIP A. LOTT.

The Crown Prosecutor was questioning Phil, who was telling his story as on a former occasion, when Mr. Riddell objected. The story as being told by Phil Lott was no evidence against his client. They did not deny the existence of a conspiracy, but did deny that his client was a party to it.

The Judge ruled that Phil Lott should go on and tell his story, which he did. Mr. Riddell kept on making [illegible]ections; the evidence given, he [illegible] had nothing to do with his [illegible]t.

[illegible] MacMahon gave Mr. Riddell [illegible] satisfaction. He overruled all [illegible]ections, and evidently meant [illegible] the case fully gone into. [illegible] correspondence in connection with the boxes were read, in spite of Mr. Riddell's objections. Phil told his story, and identified Ruttan as the man who had driven him from Harrowsmith to Kingston when he went down on his brother's behalf to see about the bogus boxes. Ruttan, he said, knew all about the bogus boxes, and knew where they were made. Arrived at Kingston they had tea at the Albion and went to look for Rielly. Ruttan introduced him to Rielly as Mr. Hughes. Rielly said he had "met these Mr. Hughes' before." Then he was told that Phil was Byron's brother, and was then more friendly. Rielly said the boxes were then in Prescott. This conversation took place in the presence of Ruttan. Rielly, by means of a pencil and paper, explained to Phil and Ruttan how the boxes were to be worked. Rielly told Ruttan to come Thursday night, and the boxes would be there. There had been no new points, so far, in Phil's story. After they left Rielly's house there had been no more conversation about the bogus boxes.

Mr. Riddell made some more objections, but the Judge refused to exclude any of Phil's replies. The Crown Prosecutor asked Phil who were proposed to use the boxes.

Mr. Riddell objected, and the Judge said he did not need to give the names. All but two of the men mentioned were afterwards appointed deputy returning officers. Phil said Byron told him he had tried to get John Bremner, of Bancroft, to print some extra ballots for him, and that Bremner had made a "flimmix" of it.

The Judge—"Do you spell 'flimmix' with one m or two?" (Quiet smiles in court.)

Phil's tale went on, just the same, to all intents and purposes, that he had told before.

In cross-examination by Mr. Maybee, Phil said Shibley had written a letter to Rielly before Ruttan came to drive him (Phil) to Kingston. The drive took two hours. He could not reproduce, as a positive statement, any words used by Ruttan on that drive. He could not swear whether he or Ruttan spoke of Watertown first. The lawyer tried to pin Phil down to a positive statement in regard to what Ruttan said, and there was quite a little passage of arms between Phil and Mr. Maybee. Phil said he could not state Ruttan's exact words, but stuck to the statement that Rielly told Ruttan to come after the boxes on Thursday night, and Ruttan agreed to do so. Phil said he did not recollect that Rielly mentioned the name Kerfoot in Ruttan's presence. That was his last interview with Ruttan in connection with the matter. Phil said his brother Byron was 19 years older than him. There had never been any ill-feeling between them. There was no ill-feeling yet. He felt more sympathy than ill-feeling for Byron. The lawyer again tried to tie Phil up on dates, but the witness declined to be positive in his statements. Byron, Phil said, had always tried to exercise a certain amount of authority over him. He got the letter of introduction to Shibley on a Sunday, when he and his wife were at his brother's house on a visit. Mr. Maybee asked Phil if he had gone to Shibley for the purpose of accumulating evidence against his brother.

Phil said "I got those letters to protect myself," and further said he intended from the start to "expose the contemptible thing." Some amusing discussion took place as to Phil's disguising himself, but Phil, with a smile, said he "had never done anything but cut off his moustache." The lawyer asked Phil if he had not gone into the matter of his own free will; he was not forced into it, was he?

Phil said he thought that, if he kept his mouth shut after hearing of the matter he would be a party to it. He had told his wife that, if the opportunity ever came to him, he would expose any scheme which looked to stealing an election. He had never asked any deputy returning officers to use bogus ballot-boxes, but had spoken to several people about them. He thought Sim Ashley was the first one he had spoken to about the matter.

Just here the Judge adjourned the court till 7.30.

Evening Session.

The court convened at 7.45, and all the famous ballot-boxes, which had been rescued from Sydenham lake and elsewhere, were in evidence. It looked as though interest was falling off somewhat, as the attendance was much smaller than usual. Mr. E. F. B. Johnston, Rielly's counsel, when asked why Rielly had returned, said he had private reasons for going and returning, and there was no more to be said in the matter. He would, under no consideration, allow Rielly to be interviewed.

The cross-examination of Phil Lott was continued by Mr. Maybee. Nothing new was brought out, though much amusement was created by Phil's description of his conversation with "Sim" Ashley, when the latter said, according to Phil, that he would, if necessary, sit up all night in order to learn how to use one of the trick boxes. Again Phil denied that he had ever asked anybody to use the trick boxes. He also denied that he had ever stated, in Mr. O'Fynn's office that he had asked three men to use the bogus boxes. The lawyer was after Phil very closely, and a lot of discussion ensued as to whether Rielly had written Phil's address on a card or a piece of paper. Phil reiterated his former statement that Rielly said he was to get a job on the Grand Trunk Pacific if the job worked, and that "it would take God Almighty himself to beat the Ontario Government at the next election." Considerable finessing took place between lawyer and witness, and Phil again said that his sole idea in going into the case was to entrap all "who were in the dirty mess." He got possession of the letters to protect himself.

Mr. Maybee — When will you give up the idea that you were protecting yourself? Why not be honest and say you were trying to entrap these people?

The Judge — All these people, you know, consider themselves to be public benefactors.

Re-examined by Mr. Hellmuth, Phil said he had acted best part of the time under advice.

H. M. Carscallen, the Watertown tinsmith, was the next witness.

The Crown Prosecutor said he had intended to call Mr. Rielly as a witness, but he recognized that it would be hardly fair, as he was now a defendant himself. He had about made up his mind that Rielly's case be traversed to the next Assizes.

Mr. Johnston objected. There had been, according to the recent decision of the court, no True Bill against Rielly until this afternoon.

The Judge said there seemed no doubt that, had Rielly been tried on the first indictment against him, any inaccuracies there may have been would have been cured by the verdict.

The lawyers continued to argue, and the Judge ordered the examination of Mr. Carscallen to proceed.

Mr. Carscallen told how a man, who he since learned was named Rielly, had visited him in Watertown in regard to the manufacture of bogus ballot-boxes. Rielly had given him a paper which was the design for a bogus box. The witness told, in a naive way, how he had been approached and manufactured boxes with false sides. He had turned over the matter to a Mr. Roof. Carscallen's story tallied in every way with the story told by Rielly when he gave his sensational evidence last November.

RIELLY WILL NOT BE CALLED.

An argument then ensued as to whether or not Rielly should be called as a witness. The lawyers quoted authorities by the yard.

Mr. Johnston argued that it was not fair to try the defendants severally and thus try to use their evidence one against the other. He submitted that that was not fair.

Mr. Hellmuth argued that the Statutes did not uphold Mr. Johnston's view and quoted authorities.

After a long discussion the Judge decided that Rielly could be called.

Mr. Johnston said he was compelled to say that, if his client Rielly was called he must advise him not to answer.

Mr. Hellmuth said that under the circumstances he would not call Rielly.

Patrick Cotter, the Watertown lad who gave evidence at the investigation, told practically the same story as he told then, incriminating Rielly.

Thos. E. Whalen was next called. He told the same story as at the preliminary investigation. He thought the boxes he brought over contained something necessary to Mr. Rielly's studies.

The court adjourned at 9.20.

Saturday Morning Session

There is a report current that the defence will to-day make a fierce attack on the character of Phil Lott. Opinions of lawyers seem to be divided as to the justice of Mr. Johnston's course in refusing to allow Rielly to testify against Ruttan, after the Judge had decided that he could be called, but all unite in pronouncing it to be an audacious stroke, which is all the more to be admired as it turned out to be successful.

Court opened at 9.40. The trial of Ruttan was resumed. The Judge announced that all petty jurors who were not on the panel could go home if they desired as there would be no other case than that of Ruttan tried to-day.

Ruttan's father, a patriarchal looking old gentleman, had a seat inside the bar, just in front of his son.

Dennis P. Horan was the first witness. He is proprietor of the Hotel Alexandria, at Prescott. He testified that Rielly, Lott and Whalen were in company together at his hotel last November.

H. E. Wells, express agent at Prescott, testified to shipping the boxes containing the bogus boxes to Messrs. "Kerfoot," Phil Lott and Bremner.

Charles Cochrane, proprietor of Albion Hotel, Kingston, testified that certain boxes had come to his hotel last October, addressed to J. A. Kerfoot. Ed. G. Ruttan had told him these boxes were expected before they came.

Cross-examined by Mr. Maybee, Mr. Cochrane said he knew Ruttan's name was not Kerfoot. Ruttan had told him to sign for the boxes when they came.

Leighton Guess, liveryman, of Kingston, was next. He swore that, in company with Ruttan, he had taken two boxes of literature from the Albion hotel to Shibley's house at Harrowsmith. Ruttan helped to carry the boxes out and put them in his wagon.

HAWKEY'S BALLOT COUNT.

William J. Franklin, returning officer for Frontenac at the last Dominion election, testified that he had appointed one Hawkey a deputy returning officer at the request of W. J. Shibley. Hawkey's appointment was objected to by Mr. Avery, the Conservative candidate. He knew that Hawkey came from Chicago and was a professional wrestler. He gave Hawkey 125 ballots to use at Clarendon and Miller, and Hawkey said he had only received 100. There were 103 voters at the poll. This was said when Hawkey came to return them to him. The returning officer's sheets were produced, and bore out Mr. Franklin's testimony. Hawkey had receipted for 125 ballots. Then, the Returning Officer said, he had taken Hawkey's word, and had changed the figures on the sheet from 125 to 100. He (the Returning Officer) had made his returns to the Crown in accordance with what Hawkey had claimed, and not in accordance with the opinions of himself and his poll clerk.

Patrick Shortell, clerk for Mr. Franklin, returning officer, corroborated him in regard to the mix-up in the number of ballots. He admitted that they had changed the figures, thinking Hawkey might be right and that they had made a mistake.

Thompson Chadwick, clerk in the office of G. A. Lamothe, Clerk of the Crown at Ottawa, identified the returns for the Clarendon and Miller poll at the last election. The returns showed that 101 ballot papers had been returned.

Col. Sherwood was called. He was commissioner of police for the Dominion Government. He had inspected the ballots in the Riding of Frontenac, among them those of Clarendon and Miller. He had found 101 ballots in the deputy returning officer's envelope, though the book showed that only 100 people voted. In the whole riding 652 ballots should have been returned, whereas only 625 were returned. There were two spoiled ballots, leaving 25 ballots missing.

Cross-examined by Mr. Maybee, Col. Sherwood admitted that there was a possibility of the count being wrong.

In reply to the Crown Prosecutor, Col. Sherwood said he had counted the stubs in Frontenac, which showed that there had been no mistake in the count.

Mr. Franklin, recalled, told Mr. Maybee that he had counted all the ballot-books received by him. He had gone over them to correct any mistakes.

The Crown Prosecutor pointed out that the stubs were numbered. It would be easy to correct mistakes if any were made.

Patrick Shortell, recalled, testified that a man had told him there had been an extra ballot received in one poll. He did not know how the ballots were numbered.

Thos. Tappings, scrutineer at the Clarendon and Miller poll on last November election, swore that a bogus ballot-box was used at that poll. He had run his hand in and felt the false side, doing this because he had been warned at noon that bogus boxes were abroad. The witness swore that the legal box, marked "No. 10, Clarendon and Miller," was not the one used by Hawkey. The total number of votes cast was 73. Hawkey took the box away from the poll with him.

Cross-examined by Mr. Maybee, Mr. Tappings said he knew a man named Abel Lyons, who lived in his division.

John McDonald was the next witness. He was a scrutineer for Mr. Avery at poll No. 10, Clardendon and Miller, on November 3. He swore that the legal box was not used at the poll that day by Hawkey.

Mr. E. Guss Porter, M.P., was next called. Mr. Porter corroborated Phil Lott's evidence in regard to sending for the bogus boxes.

Phil Lott was recalled and identified the case in which the bogus boxes had been received.

HARPELL REPEATS STORY.

Robert Emmet Harpell, insurance agent, told the same story as at the preliminary investigation. How Shibley had asked him to go after Ruttan, how Shibley and Ruttan had discussed the evidence, and blessed Mr. Tappings for being so fresh as to put his hand inside the box. Then Shibley, Ruttan and Harpell went to the parlor and the witness saw two cases which contained nine bogus ballot-boxes. They moved the two cases to the dining-room and Shibley and Ruttan discussed what was to be done with the bogus boxes.

The witness was not talking loud enough to suit the Judge, who said he did not speak like the ordinary insurance agent.

Continuing, Harpell said Ruttan said he would put them "where the devil could not get them." They put the boxes into Ruttan's wagon and drove to Sydenham lake. On the road to the lake Ruttan said it seemed a pity to destroy the boxes, as they "might be of use to some other man."

The witness did not appear to have so good a memory as when he gave his evidence last November.

Harpell said Ruttan told him of the drive with Guess, and said the boxes rattled so that he had hard work to keep them. Ruttan had told him how the boxes worked, and also told how that he (Ruttan) was the supposed Mr. Kerfoot. Ruttan told him where the boxes were made. Very unwillingly, apparently, the witness told of taking the boxes out in a boat and throwing them overboard. He rowed and Ruttan drowned the boxes. There was, the witness said, a vacancy in one of the boxes he saw at Shibley's. Harpell said, in answer to a question by the Judge, that he could not remember how many boxes he and Ruttan had downed. On the way to the lake Ruttan had told him the boxes were "a good scheme." Witness acknowledged he did not think much of Hawkey, as he had lost some money on him. Hawkey, a few days after the bogus boxes were drowned, said to Harpell, "So you got rid of them," and then made the remark that they would not get his. Ruttan, Harpell, said, had introduced Phil Lott to him as "Mr. Hughes." This was in a hotel in Kingston.

Cross-examined by Mr. Maybee, Harpell said he did not know who Phil Lott really was till preliminary examination started. Mr. Maybee was rather trenchant in his cross-examination. In addition to being an insurance agent, Harpell said he was a card-player.

IN LIGHTER VEIN.

Mr. Maybee — Oh! an all-round sport.

Harpell — Yes, I am sorry to say.

Mr. Maybee—Nothing to be ashamed of, as long as you are a square sport. Perhaps you are sorry when you lose your money.

The Judge — That's generally the time those people get sorry.

In answer to questions Harpell was quite loquacious, and was drifting away from the subject.

"Hold on!" said Mr. Maybee, "you have got loosened up wonderfully. My learned friend could hardly get you started; I can't get you stopped."

In reply to a question Harpell said Shibley had told him, when he went after Ruttan, to say it did not matter if he asked what he was wanted for. He was simply to go to Shibley at once. He (Harpell) was not alone when he went after Ruttan. There was a sharp discussion between lawyer and witness. Mr. Maybee tried to get Harpell to say exactly what Shibley said when he, Ruttan and Harpell met, but the latter would not do so.

"Now," said the lawyer, "be Shibley for a moment."

"I wouldn't like to," said the witness.

"Well, just for a moment," said Mr. Maybee.

It came out that Harpell had once played cards with Hawkey.

"h! you play cards," said Mr. Maybee. "Do you play with strangers."

"Yes," said Harpell, "I would play with you if I met you."

"Excuse me," said Mr. Maybee, "I'd leave my money at home if I were going to play cards with you."

The cross-examination did not seem to be doing much beyond adding to the gaiety of the court. Harpell said Ruttan asked him to go with him and drown the boxes. He acknowledged

Led All the Guests.

In the days of King George III. of England the Persian ambassador to the court demanded, but was denied, precedence over all other foreign representatives. He refused to go to court, causing it to be reported abroad that he was ill. He met the prince regent at the house of the Lady Salisbury of the time. "I am very sorry to offend your royal highness by not going to court," he said. "Now, sir, my sovereign, he tell me I go first; your people say I must go last. Now, this very bad for me when I go back to Persia." So saying, he made a significant pass toward his head, expressing decapitation. The prince tried to appease him. "But, sir, you still angry with me. You have not invited me to your party tomorrow night." The prince explained that it was only a children's party, but the ambassador might come if he chose. He did choose, for he went and, being the only ambassador there, led all the guests, thus scoring heavily for Persia, which made him comfortable about the neck again.

SHE FOUND A DIFFERENCE.

A Buffalo Woman says: Dr. Leonhardt's Anti-Pill Differs From the Old Methods in Medicine as Day from Night.

Mrs. J. H. Reborn, of 169 Landon St., Buffalo, N.Y., says of Dr. Leonhardt's Anti-Pill—the Great System Treatment:

"Its action is so different to anything else I ever used—Anti-Pill is so mild and gentle that I never thought it would cure my chronic constipation, but it did.

"Soon after the birth of my first child, 14 years ago, constipation became troublesome. I used everything I heard of, but temporary relief was all I got. I must have used fifty different medicines in that time.

"I finally got very bad and at times I would have no relish for food, and what I did eat would distress me afterwards. I had headache, bloating, bearing down pains, backache, could not sleep well, easily tired and never felt rested.

"From the very first dose of Dr. Leonhardt's Anti-Pill I began to improve. Now I am well. It is wonderful."

Dr. Leonhardt's Anti-Pill is sold by all druggists, or The Wilson-Fyle Co., Limited, Niagara Falls, Ont. Sole agents for Canada. The price is 50 cents. 103

ST. PATRICK'S DAY.

Cardinal Moran, Proposes Home Rule Fund of $100,000 Annually.

London, March 17.—St. Patrick's Day was celebrated in Ireland and observed in England much as usual. The Irish flag was in evidence generally, while Irishmen and Englishmen in London fraternized. In Ireland, of course, celebrations were general.

Queen Alexandra gracefully recognized the day by presenting sprigs of shamrock to the entire Irish Guards stationed at Chelsea Barracks.

The Irish Industries Exhibition in London was opened yesterday afternoon by Prince Christian of Schleswig-Holstein, who was accompanied by the Duchess of Marlborough and other notable personages. The exhibition remains open two days.

John E. Redmond, the Irish Parliamentary leader, received a cablegram from Cardinal Moran, of Sydney, Australia, proposing a home rule fund of $100,000 annually, and guaranteeing Australia's share.

The weather was miserable in England, and generally fine in Ireland, where a few disturbances were reported, but none more serious than the usual "celebration" fight.

CHILD ABDUCTION.

Warrant Issued in Weston Case—Farmer Arraigned at Montreal.

Weston, March 18.—The latest development in connection with the disappearance of Mary Jane Gilchrist is a warrant issued by Magistrate Cruickshank for the arrest of Julia Kelly on a charge of abducting the child. The warrant has been issued at the instance of James Gilchrist. So far there is no clue as to the location of the woman or the child.

Charged With Kidnapping.

Montreal, March 18.—Joseph Rousseau, a farmer of St. Andre Avelin, was arraigned before Judge Choquet on a charge of kidnapping an 11-year-old girl. According to Rousseau's statement, the girl is his niece. Her mother is dead, and she has been living with her father, who is very ill at present. In order to afford her protection, Rousseau came to the city to take his niece home with him. The girl was quite willing to go. Rousseau was remanded until March 21 for enquete.

Princess Victoria Leaves for London.

St. Petersburg, March 18.—Princess Victoria, of Battenburg, left last night for London. Emperor Nicholas and the Empress accompanied her to the station at Tsarskoe Selo.

Lady Dundonald.

Lady Dundonald, who has left London for the country, says M. A. P., was Miss Winifred Hesketh, only child and heiress of Mr. Robert Hesketh of Gwyrch Castle, North Wales, and her marriage took place in 1878. The word "Imperial" has come into general use, and Lady Dundonald may be aptly described as an Imperial-looking woman. She is tall, with a fine figure, dark, abundant hair, and much brilliance of coloring. Her manners are good, but quiet and dignified. She spends many months of the year on her own property in Wales, and the rest in London at a handsome house in Portland Square. Lady Dundonald takes great interest in Welsh industries, and usually appears at their annual exhibition in London. By the way, her name, Winifred, is one of the names that are Welsh rather than English, and a such may be reckoned with Nesta, Olwen, Gladys, Lettice, Gwenfra, Gweneth and Gwendolen. Her eldest daughter is now married, and is Lady Grizel Hamilton, but Lady Dundonald will this year again take the field as a chaperon by introducing her second girl, the lovely Lady Jean Cochrane.

Mr. Upper's Narrow Escape.

St. Catharines, March 18.—Walter Upper, of Allanburg, who was the Conservative candidate against W. M. German in Welland in the Dominion elections, had a narrow escape from drowning in the old canal at Merritton yesterday afternoon. He was returning from St. Catharines, and, when near the cotton mills, a G. T. R. train came along and frightened his horses. Mr. Upper lost control and the team dashed down the bank of the waste weir of the old canal. On the ice there was open water 100 feet out. A short distance from the open water they broke through the ice and disappeared from view, pulling the sleigh after them. The box of the sleigh floated, and Mr. Upper found himself standing up to his knees in ice-cold water. Men on the banks made a raft of some logs and Mr. Upper, half frozen, crawled out on it. The team was worth $300.

Icefloes Prevent Sealing.

St. John's, Nfld., March 18.—The sealing fleet along the northern coast has not been reported since leaving Monday at daylight, but the steamers Viking and Alegrine, operating in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, are unable to reach the sealing grounds, owing to immense ice fields. No sailing vessels attempted to engage in the gulf seal fishery this year, owing to the unusual extent of the ice fields.

Ottawa, March 18.—Yesterday a Northwest police detachment of 30 men, with 60 packhorses, left Edmonton for the Peace River, to cut a trail to Dawson City, entirely on Canadian territory. The trail will be over a thousand miles long, and will be provided with shelter huts at the end of each day's march, 20 or 30 miles apart. Parliament voted $25,000 last session for the work, and it is expected to ask for a similar additional sum this season. It is hoped to complete the work this season.

Hits Turnkey With Brick.

Windsor, March 18.—Charles Jackson, a colored prisoner, confined in Sandwich Jail, made a desperate and successful break for liberty yesterday morning, but not until he had battered Turnkey Iler about the head with a brick and rendered him unconscious, thus obtaining the keys to the jail corridor. The keeper struggled bravely, but the odds were against him, and he was finally left bleeding and unconscious, lying on the stone floor of the corridor. Owing to the early hour, no other guards were on duty, and Jackson calmly made his way out into the street, and soon disappeared. So far no trace of the escaped prisoner has been found.

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

FEW PEOPLE KNOW HOW USEFUL IT IS IN PRESERVING HEALTH AND BEAUTY.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form, or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary, great benefit.

A Buffalo physician, in speaking of the benefits of charcoal says: "I advise Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefitted by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

MURDER IN MONTREAL

Father Kills His Son With a Heavy Iron Poker.

Montreal, March 20.—Murder was committed early Saturday morning at 43 Dorion street, when William Phelan, 55 years of age, struck his son, William Phelan, 17 years of age, with a heavy iron poker.

About 10.30 o'clock a woman by the name of Mrs Kate Phelan came over to No. 2 station, which is just around the corner, and said that a young man was lying in the house in a dying condition, covered with blood.

Two constables immediately went to the house and found young Phelan lying on the bed at the point of death. A heavy iron poker, covered with hair and blood, was on the floor.

The boy's forehead was crushed.

Mrs. Phelan said to the police that William Phelan, the father of the boy, came to her and said that he had killed his son while he lay in bed.

Young Phelan was taken to Notre Dame Hospital, and it was at once seen that he had but a few moments to live. Hardly had the priest reached his bedside to administer the last rites of the church when the young man died.

No reason for the crime has yet been ascertained, but Mrs. Phelan told the police that since the death of his wife, some months ago, the man Phelan had been acting strangely, although he had never been known to threaten violence to any one.

The man was immediately placed under arrest, and taken to police headquarters.

Didn't Kill His Wife.

Montreal, March 20.—Napoleon Laporte, charged with having killed his wife, was acquitted late Saturday evening, as it was proved that the woman had been drinking with another man and had fallen downstairs.

Grand Race To Harbin.

Chinese Receive Notice That Japs Will Enter April 10.

Japanese Torpedo Boat Lost During a Storm—Japanese Are Conducting a Flanking Movement North of Tie Pass, and They Took Kaiyuan on Saturday—Linevitch's First War Report Says Japs Occupy Fakoman.

St. Petersburg, March 20.—The best military opinion here on the situation is that the rival forces are engaged in a grand race to Harbin. Kamamura is hastening along the Kirin road, while Nogi, Oku and Kuroki are harassing Gen. Linevitch's army on the flanks and in the rear. A flying column has been sent to Tsitikar to cut the railroad in the rear of Harbin, the Japanese moving with wonderful rapidity. The Sungari bridge across the Sungari river near Harbin is the first objective point of the race. The bridge is nearly a mile long and is the greatest span on the Trans-Siberian Railway.

On To Harbin.

With the Japanese Army in the Field, via Fusan, March 18.—(Delayed.)—The Russian army continues its northern retreat, the Japanese following. The latter have occupied Fakoman, to the northwest of Tie Pass. Yesterday evening the Russian cavalry camped three miles south of Kaiyuen. Large Russian columns are retreating towards this place from the southwest. The natives report that they are not stopping there, where the hills make a defence possible. If the retreat is forced it probably will be continued to Harbin. The Russians are reported to be badly disorganized.

In Harbin April 10.

Harbin, March 20.—The Chinese here are in an excited state and say notifications has been received that the Japanese will enter Harbin April 10.

With the many wounded who are arriving at Harbin from the southward are crowds of Russian inhabitants of the region evacuated and employes of the railroad.

Jap Torpedo Boat Lost.

London, March 20.—The Daily Telegraph's Yokohama correspondent says that during a storm a Japanese torpedo boat destroyer was lost off the Indo-China coast.

LABOR QUESTION CRITICAL.

Chinese Asking Exorbitant Wages for Aiding the Russians.

Gunshu Pass, March 20.—The first army, which has been covering the retreat of the Russian forces from the south, is withdrawing slowly, checking comparatively light attacks by the Japanese. The Japanese are conducting a flanking operation on the right, and from the Russian column Japanese batteries are visible, keeping pace a short distance away.

The Red Cross detachments at all of the intermediate stations to Harbin are working night and day, operating, bandaging and feeding the wounded. The Chinese are leaving Gunshu Pass for Kirwin, and the labor question is therefore growing critical, though Chinese receive the unprecedentedly high wages of 40 to 50 cents a day.

20 Miles North of Tie Pass.

Tokio, March 19.—Headquarters of the Japanese armies in the field, reporting under to-day's date, says:

"Our detachment continuing its advance north pursued the enemy to Kaiyuan, some twenty miles north of Tie Pass. Kaiyuan was evacuated by the enemy on Saturday, after he had set fire to the railroad station."

Japs Occupy Fakoman.

St. Petersburg, March 19.—Commander-in-Chief Linevitch, in a telegram dated Saturday, says:

"On March 17 Japanese batteries bombarded our divisions in the valleys of Tavanpun and Yanpu. The enemy appeared near Taotaitse (on the railroad about 22 miles north of Tie), and their cavalry has occupied Fakoman. Our armies continue their concentration."

In Rear of Russians.

Tokio, March 20.—In a report to the war department Field Marshal Oyama says that the Japanese right army, under Gen. Kuroki, is proceeding rapidly along the Kirin road, above Peling.

Press Czar to Make Peace.

St. Petersburg, March 20.—While Emperor Nicholas, whose word is final, still declines to abandon the prosecution of the war, and the Government maintains its ability to continue the conflict, the Associated Press is in a position to state that powerful influences, including several of the Emperor's own ministers, are now strongly urging that the time has come to indicate to Japan Russia's desire for peace upon a reasonable basis.

KUROPATKIN AND LINEVITCH.

Send Formal Messages to the Czar From the Front.

St. Petersburg, March 20.—A telegram from Gen. Kuropatkin to Emperor Nicholas, dated March 17, says:

"In accordance with the orders of Your Majesty, received March 16, I handed over to Gen. Linevitch to-day the command of the land and sea forces operating against the Japanese."

Gen. Linevitch, in a telegram to the Emperor, under the same date, says: "In pursuance of the orders of Your Majesty, I assumed command to-day (March 17) of all our forces, military and naval, operating against the Japanese."

Kuropatkin Not in Disgrace.

St. Petersburg, March 20.—It is stated on high authority that at Gen. Linevitch's request, the Emperor has appointed Gen. Kuropatkin commander of the first army, and that he assumed command yesterday. This cannot be confirmed. An earlier report said he left Saturday for St. Petersburg.

Kuropatkin Wounded.

Gen. Kuroki's Headquarters in the Field, March 16, by way of Fusan.—Gen. Kuroki's army continues to lead the Japanese force, which have not been engaged for nine days in a hard pursuit, and they have covered a distance of more than ninety-five miles with frequent fighting. A few prisoners are secured daily. It is reported that during Gen. Kuropatkin's resistance at Tower Hill on the first day's battle, he was slightly wounded by fragments of an 11-inch shell which fell near him.

Regret Kuropatkin's Dismissal.

Paris, March 20.—The French Press yesterday morning devoted eulogistic articles to Gen. Kuropatkin, expressing regret at the Emperor's abrupt recall of the Commander-in-Chief. The Echo De Paris says that Grand Duke Nicholas Nicholaievitch has been ordered to start for Manchuria to investigate the situation there, and that his report will result in a decision as to a continuation of the war or peace.

Kuropatkin Commanded.

Tokio, March 20.—A despatch from the headquarters of the Japanese armies in the field, dated Friday, says:

"According to statements made by prisoners, the force of the enemy resisting us south of Tie Pass on Wednesday, March 15, consisted of three divisions. Gen. Kuropatkin personally commanded during the battle in the neighborhood of Tie Pass, Tuesday, March 14."

Inspection of Horses Ordered.

St. Petersburg, March 20.—In connection with the mobilization of a new army, an Imperial decree orders an inspection of horses in 22 districts of the military divisions of Odessa, Warsaw and Moscow.

British Steamer Stranded.

Tokio, March 20.—The British steamer Mars, while attempting the passage of Soya Straits, bound for Vladivostock, was caught in the ice and is stranded off Surui promontory. The crew abandoned the vessel and landed on the Island Hokkaido. The Mars sailed from Barry, Wales, on November 26.

ANARCHIST LAY-OUT.

Police of Moscow Find It and Arrest 300 Persons Connected With the Revolutionary Party.

St. Petersburg, March 20.—The secret police of Moscow have discovered an organizating section in conjunction with the revolutionary party in London, and three hundred persons already have been arrested. The police found in a store infernal machines, hand bombs, and a quantity of explosives and weapons, together with printing presses and revolutionary documents, included among the latter being letters to the central committee and correspondence relating to the assassination of Grand Duke Sergius.

Cremation in Canada.

Montreal, March 20.—Adolph Davis, formerly superintendent of the old North Shore Railway, and eminent engineer, died here, and his body was cremated Saturday, according to his will.

County Constable's Crime.

London, March 20.—John T. Westcott, a County constable of Huron and Middlesex, Saturday pleaded guilty to fraud and blackmail and was sentenced to nine months in the Central Prison.

Insurgents Take Capital.

Aden, Arabia, March 20.—It is reported that Sanan, the capital of the Province of Yomen, with its garrison of 5,000 men, has fallen into the hands of the Arab insurgents.

IN MANY BATTLES AND WOUNDED MANY TIMES.

JOHN JENKINS, CIVIL WAR VETERAN, DIES IN HIS SIXTY-THIRD YEAR — REMARKABLE RECORD AS A SOLDIER.

A Rochester exchange says:

John Jenkins, one of the best known Grand Army men in Rochester, died Monday noon at his home, No. 6 Myrtle Hill park, aged 63 years. He had been ill about three months, although he had suffered ever since the Civil war on account of wounds received in battle and infirmities caused by exposure.

John Jenkins had a remarkable record as a fighting soldier and received more wounds, perhaps, than any other Rochester survivor of the great struggle of '61-'65. He enlisted August 3, 1861, in Company C, Third New York Volunteer Cavalry, and served three years. He re-enlisted January 1, 1864, and for three years more, or until the close of the war. He was promoted to be sergeant September 1st of the same year. While on picket duty near Suffolk, Va., he received fourteen wounds, resulting in the loss of his left arm. He was transferred to the New York Mounted Rifles, July 21, 1865, and to the Fourth Cavalry, September 6, 1865, and was discharged December 5, 1865.

Mr. Jenkins served in the Third New York Cavalry in the Army of the Potomac to April, 1862; in the Department of Carolina to April, 1864; in the Department of the James to December, 1864, and in the Department of Virginia to the time of mustering out, November 29, 1865.

Mr. Jenkins' battle record is a long one. Among the principal engagements in which he participated were Ball's Bluff in 1861, Winchester in 1862, Houghton Mill, Burnt Church, Greenville Road, Mill Creek, defence of Washington December 6th and 7th, 1862, Pungo Creek, Goldsboro Road, Young's Cross Roads, siege of Washington March 30th to April 15, 1863. He was badly wounded at the Dismal Swamp. He was in the battle of Camden Court House, and in the assault on Petersburg June 15, 1864. He was also at Malvern Hill and at New Fair Oaks.

At one of the big battles in which he was engaged, he was left on the field as dead and afterward carried into the lines with the bodies of his dead comrades. He revived, however, and was placed in the hospital, shattered in body and losing the use of his remaining arm.

After being mustered out, Mr. Jenkins was wholly unable to support himself, on account of his wounds, and was given a pension on which he lived comfortably, making his home with his mother in Myrtle Hill park. Since her death, several years ago, he and his brother Charles had lived in the same place.

The deceased was a member of E. G. Marshall Post, 397, G.A.R., Department of New York. He leaves two brothers, Chas. O. Jenkins, of this city; Franklin S., Manager of Hotel Coronado, Col., and one sister, Mrs. Frank Y. Brenton, of Belleville, Canada.

The deceased was well known in this city, where he has had many happy visits and fishing excursions.

Exit Ruttan.

Surely there can be no contempt of court in quoting the words of the learned judge, and telling Mr. Ruttan that he was fortunate.

• • •

And for goodness' sake, Mr. Ruttan, to again use the words of the Judge, "do be more careful in future."

• • •

It is possible that some of the court proceedings were dry on Saturday, but a few of the reporters and the Jury were not. They got soaked in going out to their dinner.

• • •

"What do you think of the verdict?" was asked a prominent citizen yesterday morning.

"What verdict?" he said, and was told that Ruttan had been acquitted on Saturday night.

"Acquitted!" he said "Acquitted! Well, wouldn't that kill you?"

Spring begins to-morrow, according to the almanacs. Navigation will soon open—on Coleman street.

• • •

March is marching on beautifully. So far the lion has been conspicuous by his absence.

• • •

I would like to ask the jury in the Ruttan case one question: "If Mr. O'Flynn had stayed in the witness-box five minutes longer, would they have hanged the prisoner or not?"

The following, from the Kingston News and Times, was, of course, written before Mr. Rielly's lawyer had refused to let him testify:

"Now that Rielly is once more in the hands of the authorities, it is to be hoped that he will remain with them until the public is in possession of all he has to say in the ballot-box scandal case. Rielly has already given evidence of an intimate acquaintance with the scandalous procedure. He was employed by a Government candidate to take such steps as would result in the fraudulent boxes being ready to hand on the date of the election. It may be that others than the candidate were in the movement. If so it should be known. The attempt to deprive the people of their franchise is a crime of such a nature that it strikes at the foundation of all democratic government, and those implicated should be exposed and punished.

"We have no doubt that the authorities assembled in Belleville will do their duty. Behind them in the present investigation is a government which has no sympathy with conduct designed to prevent a free expression of the will of the people at the polls. All this should count for something in the result."

One thing seems very much apparent to the distinguished lawyers and visitors who have honored us with their presence at the conspiracy trials, and that is this: It is about time the Hastings County Council took some steps to provide up-to-date accommodations in their Court House and County Buildings. The furnishings and everything else connected with the Court House are archaic and out of date.

Many people cannot understand why they are excluded from the back stairway at the Court House. One party was highly indignant. He had been refused the use of the back stairs. "The Law Association doesn't wish the general public to use the back stairs," he said. "What the deuce have the Law Association to do with it? The public pays for the upkeep of the Court House, and are told by the Law Association that they can't walk on their own stairs. The Law Association!" And he went away, turning loose vivid language.

If I ever get on the Zemsky Sobor or the County Council I'm going to move that some kind of an elevated railroad be built at the Court House.

• • •

The Intelligencer has been informed, on excellent authority, that the new drill shed will be started this spring, and that the site will be that opposite the Hotel Quinte.

WHAT ONE MAN HAS DONE.

The Remarkable Achievement of a Remarkable Man — A Splendid Example of What Untiring Devotion Can Do.

For years Dr. J. S. Leonhardt, of Lincoln, Neb., studied the problem of how best to prevent and cure disease.

He was not satisfied with the methods and treatments in general use and after long study and much experiment he declared that:—

"The poisonous products of the fermentation and decomposition of undigested foods absorbed by the system are the first cause of almost every disease."

He knew that all the medicines prescribed for the stomach and bowels contained resinous properties which left behind them a dried up condition of the mucous membrane lining of the stomach and bowels—this after effect invariably resulting in Chronic Complaints.

Dr. Leonhardt therefore determined that to correct disorders of the stomach and bowels he must produce an effective medicine containing absolutely no resinous subtances such as are found in the ordinary pill.

He succeeded and the result he called Anti-Pill.

Dr. Leonhardt's Anti-Pill will cure permanently any case of Dyspepsia or other Stomach Trouble, Biliousness of Constipation.

PROGRESS OF THE CAMPAGIN.

The veil is still drawn over the fate of the army recently commanded by General Kuropatkin, and which General Linevitch is endeavoring to extricate from the mountains north of Tie Pass. Will the Japanese succeed in surrounding it, and so force a complete surrender? Such despatches as have got through to St. Petersburg give no inkling as to the condition of the Russian forces, but one hints at what may happen. It is believed that the Japanese are making a wide turning movement north, and that they will be ready to fall upon the Russians when the latter get out of the ring-like group of mountains which surround the Tie Pass gorge.

In the long retreat to Harbin, the Russians only have the advantage of the Mandarin road so afar as Kaiyuan, whence it bears eastward to Kirin, while the railroad continues north to Harbin. According to the General Staff, however, a good wagon road runs parallel to the railroad. But for an army of a quarter of a million men, encumbered with impediments, with an active enemy relentlessly pursuing and operating on its flank, and the constant threat of the enemy closing the line of retreat, it is admitted that the single railroad and wagon road afford poor prospects of General Linevitch being able to bring on the remnants of the army confided to his care without a tremendous sacrifice of life.

If the Japanese actually succeed in throwing a strong force across the line of retreat, it is recognized that the army might be forced to capitulate.

Japan's approach to Siberia is considered to be one of the momentous epochs of the war and as marking the first Japanese possession of Asiatic territory hitherto held by a European power. The effect of Japan's advance to Harbin will be to control the trans-Siberian railroad and the entire sweep of Eastern Siberia, including Vladivostok. It is said that this possession of Russian territory may prove an important factor in support of Japan's claim for a money indemnity.

The Tsarkoe-Selo group now profess to pin the faith in retrieving Russian fortunes on Admiral Rojestvensky's fleet, just as, before the battle of Mukden, they did upon Gen. Kuropatkin. They continue to renounce all idea of peace until this last resort has been tried.

Nobody outside of Russia, whose judgment is worth quoting, believes that the Baltic fleet has any destiny beyond destruction or capture if it ever meets Admiral Togo. Its sacrifice, therefore, would mean nothing except further humiliation for Russia and the imposition of heavier conditions of peace.

Fatally Injured on Saturday Evening.

SAD ACCIDENT WHICH BEFEL JAMES CROOKS, A G. T. R. EMPLOYEE, WHILE COUPLING CARS.

James Crooks, a young man employed in the Grand Trunk Railway yard here, on Saturday afternoon met with an accident which proved fatal a few hours after. At a few minutes after 5 o'clock the unfortunate victim was engaged in coupling cars, when, by some means, the upper portion of his body was caught between two draw-bars.

When released it was apparent that the unfortunate young man had sustained serious injuries. As quickly as possible the ambulance was summoned and he was conveyed to the hospital, where his injuries were examined. It was found that some ribs were broken and internal injuries of a most serious nature sustained Although suffering much he remained conscious, and conversed with his mother and other relatives. He gradually grew worse, and, shortly before the midnight hour, passed away, surrounded by sorrowing parents and relatives.

The deceased, who was in his 21st year, was a son of Mr. Isaiah Crooks, a G.T.R. engineer, who resides on Albert St. Besides the parents, one sister, Miss Minnie and one brother, Master Clifford, survive. He was an exceedingly popular young man, esteemed by all who knew him, and his untimely death has cast a gloom not only over the household, but the city generally. The victim was a member of the Ancient Order of Foresters, was identified with the Fifteenth Regiment, and was also a member of the G.T.R. Union. He attended John St. Presbyterian Church, and was actively interested in the Sunday school work there and also in the Y. M. C.A., of which he was a member. He had been employed at the station here for some time, and we understand that he would shortly have received promotion. The grief-stricken family will receive the sincere sympathy of a large circle of relatives and friends in their hour of affliction.

A glance through this booklet makes one long for the pleasures of summer and outdoor life, and copies may be secured gratuitously by applying to H. C. Thompson, C.P. and T.A., Belleville; or to J. D. BROKEN SLEEP — TIRED NEXT MORNING.

Sleep not only rests, but builds up the body. Cut down the hours of sleep, and you cut down health in the same proportion. Rebuilding then ceases, nerves go to smash, you grow tired, weak and wretched. To restore sleep you must get more bodily strength, more nutritious blood, healthier nerves. Ferrozone solves the whole problem, makes you sleep soundly, gives endurance, vim, ambition. No more morning weakness — instead, the fire of youth will run in your veins, supplying abundance of energy and vigor. Witchery expresses the instant effect of Ferrozone; try it.

A gift in the hand is worth two on the tree.

Indigestion?

I OFFER ALL STOMACH SUFFERERS A FULL DOLLAR'S WORTH OF MY REMEDY FREE TO TRY.

I can afford to offer a full dollar's worth free because mine is no ordinary remedy. Ordinary remedies treat symptoms. My remedy treats the causes that produce the symptoms. Symptom treatment must be kept up forever—as long as the cause is there. My treatment may be stopped as soon as it has removed the cause, for that is always the end of trouble.

Stomach trouble is not really a sickness, but a symptom. It is a symptom that a certain set of nerves is ailing. Not the voluntary nerves that enable you to walk and talk and act—but the automatic stomach nerves over which your mind has no control.

I have not room here to explain how these tender, tiny nerves control and operate the stomach. How worry breaks them down and causes indigestion. How misuse wears them out and causes dyspepsia. How neglect may bring on kidney, heart and other troubles through sympathy. I have not room to explain how these nerves may be reached and strengthened and vitalized and made well by a remedy I spent thirty years in perfecting—now known by druggists everywhere as Dr. Shoop's Restorative. I have not room to explain how this remedy by removing the cause, puts a certain end to indigestion, belching, heartburn, insomnia, nervousness, dyspepsia. All of these things are fully explained in the book I will send you when you write.

In more than a million homes my remedy is known. It has cured stomach troubles, not once, but repeatedly—over and over again. Yet you may not have heard of it—or hearing, may have delayed or doubted. So I make this offer to you, a stranger, that every possible excuse for doubt may be removed. Send me no money—make me no promise—take no risk. Simply write and ask. If you have not tried my remedy, I will send you an order on your druggist for a full dollar bottle—not a sample, but the regular standard bottle he keeps constantly on his shelves. The druggist will require no conditions. He will accept my offer as cheerfully as though your dollar laid before him. He will send the bill to me.

Will you accept this opportunity to learn at my expense absolutely, how to be rid forever of all forms of stomach troubles—to be rid not only of the trouble, but of the very cause which produced it? Write today.

For a free order for a full dollar bottle you must address Dr. Shoop, Box 69 Racine, Wis. State which book you want.	Book 1 on Dyspepsia. Book 2 on the Heart. Book 3 on the Kidneys. Book 4 for Women. Book 5 for Men. Book 6 on Rheumatism.

Mild cases are often cured by a single bottle. For sale at forty thousand drug stores.

Wedding Bells.

A pretty wedding took place on March 8th at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Edward R. Wilson, in Tyendinaga, when their eldest daughter, Miss Mary J., became the bride of Mr. W. B. Colden, of Huntingdon. The bride was gowned in pearl grey crepe de chene, with veil looped with lilies of the valley, and was assisted by Miss Maggie Cockins. The best man was Mr. Wesley Gray, of Myre Hall. After the ceremony, by Rev. J. deP. Wright, of Roslin, a dinner was served. Mrs. Colden received many handsome gifts, among them a gold watch and chain from the groom. They will reside in Huntingdon.

A DANGEROUS HABIT.

Gladstone's Physician Gives Warning Against a Growing American Custom.

The growing habit amongst Americans of taking a mint tablet or some other so called digestive after eating a hearty meal, is something that Sir Andrew Clarke, Mr. Gladstone's physician advises strongly against, saying, "It is absolutely dangerous to take into the stomach remedies which are popularly supposed to aid in the digestion of food."

There is nothing known to the science of medicine that can perform the work of the human stomach. Drugs do not and cannot digest the food. They simply decompose it. What can be more revolting or disgusting than the thought of taking something into the stomach that is going to turn the good food you have eaten into a mass of corruption.

The only way to overcome indigestion and its evil effects is to remove all irritation, congestion and inflammation from the stomach, liver and intestines, and Mi-o-na is the only agent known that will do this.

When a Mi-o-na tablet is taken before each meal every trace of irritation and inflammation is removed from the stomach and digestive organs will extract from the food all that goes to make good, rich blood, firm muscle, steady nerves and a sound healthy body. If you suffer with headaches, indigestion, flatulency, spots before the eyes, vertigo, or dizziness, palpitation of the heart, sleeplessness, or any stomach trouble, get a fifty-cent box of Mi-o-na from Mr. J. S. McKeown, one of our most reliable druggists, whose faith in the remedy is shown by his offer to return the money if Mi-o-na does not give complete satisfaction.

THE PASSENGERS KICKED.

STEAMER MONTREAL WAS SAILING WITH A SHORTAGE OF PROVISIONS.

Horta, Azores, March 18. — The French Transatlantic steamer Montreal, bound for New York from Havre, has returned here, owing to the refusal of the passengers to continue on the voyage, the vessel being short of provisions. Serious trouble occurred between the passengers and officers.

COMPROMISE IS OBJECTED TO MINISTER NOT SATISFIED WITH AMENDED CLAUSE.

Ottawa, March 19. — Once again it is stated that there is a hitch over the educational clauses in the Autonomy Bill. The Northwest representatives had whittled their draft down to a pretty fine point which would enable them to vote for it as an amendment to the famous clause 16. Practically its acceptance was agreed upon by the Cabinet yesterday, but the compromise is said to-night to be unacceptable to one of the parties to the bargain. The clause as amended would provide for a recognition of Separate schools as they exist in the Northwest to-day, including the payment of grants of public money under the prevailing territorial regulations. It is difficult to see where this differs from clause 16, but the Western Liberal delegation professes to be satisfied with it. A definite announcement is expected on Tuesday.

The rumor is again current that Walter Scott, M.P. for West Assiniboia, will get a Cabinet portfolio. It is said Sir Wilfrid had made up his mind to divide the present joint departments, combining Indians and Immigration on the one hand and Dominion Lands, Mining, Geological Survey, and Irrigation under the other. Mr. Templeman would get the first-named portfolio, and Mr. Scott the other.

The second reading of the bill will probably take place next week. It remains to be seen whether the Government will recede from its position on the school clauses in the Autonomy Bill or not, but so many corners have been turned by the Cabinet on other questions that their deliberations in this matter are regarded even yet with suspicion by many.

Some 22 Liberal members have notified Sir Wilfrid that they would vote against the bill as it stands.

VIOLET LEAVES A CURE.

CANCER PATIENT CLAIMS IT WAS EFFECTIVE.

New York, March 19. — The Sun publishes the following cable from London: William Gordon, a physician in a Devon-Exeter hospital, reports a supposed cure for cancer to The Lancet, and it has aroused considerable public interest. The patient was a man of 53, who had been told by five doctors that he had cancer of the tongue. He refused to undergo an operation, and commenced on November 10 to treat himself as follows:

He poured a pint of boiling water over a handful of violet leaves and left them to soak for 24 hours. He divided the liquid into two equal parts and drank one at once, and in the next 24 hours used the other. Hot fomentations were applied continuously to the outside of the neck on the left side for two hours each night. Sometimes he used the leaves as poultices and sometimes kept the fomentation on all night.

The doctor examined him on January 23 and found that an extraordinary change had taken place. He examined him again on February 20. Then there was almost no pain, and except for a hard scar little remained of the deep, ragged, undurated ulcer.

The point chiefly criticized is the fact that, although five doctors pronounced the case one of cancer, no microscopical examination was made, and therefore the diagnosis is discredited.

A Chicago Alderman Owes His Election to Chamberlain's Cough Remedy.

"I can heartily and conscientiously recommend Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for affections of the throat and lungs," says Hon. John Shenick, 220 So. Peoria St., Chicago. "Two years ago, during a political campaign, I caught cold after being overheated, which irritated my throat and I was finally compelled to stop, as I could not speak aloud. In my extremity a friend advised me to use Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. I took two doses that afternoon and could not believe my senses when I found the next morning the inflammation had largely subsided. I took several doses that day, kept right on talking through the campaign, and I thank this medicine that I won my seat in the Council. This remedy is for sale by all druggists.

Diet and Appendicitis.

For the benefit of those who fear appendicitis and are willing to do anything which will keep them immune from disease, Sir Frederick Treves has prepared a list of eatables which cannot be taken with safety. Foremost on the list is preserved ginger, that deadliest of sweetmeats, but pineapple, either fresh or preserved, is equally dangerous. Oranges, figs and raspberries should never be indulged in. To still further limit our diet, there are a number of things which may not be eaten by those who fear typhoid fever. The oyster has led to suspicion of all other shellfish, not only lobsters and crabs, but even shrimps and prawns. Smelt and whitebait are now regarded with awe rather than admiration on a menu.

SELL YOUR COLD FOR $1?

You surely won't stop at a dollar bill to cure that horrid, sniffeling cold? Go to any druggist and get "Catarrhozone" and your cold will be a thing of the past. There is almost witchery in the swift way Catarrhozone kills colds. But when you consider the penetrating, healing and antiseptic qualities of Catarrhozone perhaps it's not so wonderful. Certainly there is no remedy half so prompt for colds and catarrh as Catarrhozone. Refuse a substitute and insist on having only "Catarrhozone."

DEATHS

CROOKS.—In Belleville, on Saturday, March 18, 1905, James J. Crooks, son of Mr. and Mrs. I. Crooks, in the 22nd year of his age.

The funeral will take place from his father's residence, 281 Albert St., on Tuesday afternoon, March 21st, at 2.30 o'clock. Service at the house at 2 p.m.

Bigger,
Better,
Broader.

Those three words will in part form the meaning of our decorative painting — paperhanging and wall paper departments for the year 1905.

1904 was the largest trade in our history for any one year notwithstanding the several small stocks shown in opposition.

Ample evidence this that the purchasing public favor the large assortment from which to select.

This year already we have placed in stock nearly sixty thousand rolls of the newest and finest of wall papers possible to find and with twenty years of hunting we know where to find the game—.

For your convenience and our profit we have a staff of workmen engaged for 1905 numbering twenty. Expert workmen in their several branches—of Paperhanging — painting, decorating, graining, etc.

At the present time we have a number of our workmen executing decorative work in Toronto — we go anywhere for business — no city too large, no village too small

AN OLD SONG.

(Chicago Chronicle.)

She lighted the fire with kerosene,
Good-by, my lover, good-by;
And since that day she has never been seen,
Good-by, my lover, good-by;
For she hurried away to the bright, blue sky,
And never once lingered to say good-by,
Good-by, my lover, good-by

He monkeyed around the back of a mule,
Good-by, my lover, good-by;
And he was a truant, away from school,
Good-by, my lover, good-by;
And the mule pushed out with its little hoof,
And he pushed poor Johnny right through the roof,
Good-by, my lover, good-by

He started to clean out an empty gun,
Good-by, my lover, good-by;
And looked down the barrel and just for fun,
Good-by, my lover, good-by;
And the gun went off with a terrible roar,
And Johnny can't clean any guns any more,
Good-by, my lover, good-by

SUPERIOR MERIT.

Remarkable Curative Properties of a Remedy for Indigestion and Stomach Weakness.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, a preparation for the cure of dyspepsia and the various forms of indigestion and stomach trouble, owes its great success as a cure for these troubles to the fact that it is prepared for disease and weakness of the stomach and digestive organs only, and is not recommended or advised for any other disease.

It is not a cure-all, but for any stomach trouble it is undoubtedly the safest, most sensible remedy that can be advised with the prospect of a permanent cure. It is prepared in tablet form, pleasant to taste, composed of vegetable and fruit essences, pure pepsin and Golden Seal, every one of which act effectively in digesting the food eaten, thereby resting and invigorating the weak stomach; rest is nature's cure for any disease, but you cannot rest the stomach unless you put into it something that will do its work or assist in the digestion of food.

That is exactly what Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets do, one grain of the digestive principle contained in them will digest 3,000 grains of meat, eggs or similar wholesome foods, they will digest the food whether the stomach is in working order or not, thereby nourishing the body and resting the stomach at the same time, and REST and NOURISHMENT is nature's cure for any weakness.

In persons run down in flesh and appetite these tablets build up the strength and increase flesh, because they digest flesh-forming food which the weak stomach cannot do, they increase the flow of gastric juice and prevent fermentation, acidity and sour watery risings.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets can be found at all drug stores at 50 cents per package.

WILL DELAY WORK.

B. C. Government Angers Morse and G.T.P. Construction Will Suffer.

Vancouver, March 20.—Vice-President and General Manager Morse, of the Grand Trunk Pacific, left here Saturday for Montreal.

He says that owing to the refusal of the British Columbia Government to accede to the company's demands, the construction of the line in this province will not be started until the company sees fit. Mr. Morse pointed out that the Dominion agreement did not require construction to be started on this end of the line, the date being optional with the company.

He declined to state emphatically what the company's demands would be, beyond that it had requested a land grant.

Cabman Takes Poison

Brockville, March 20.—In the General Hospital Saturday night Samuel Wilson died from the effects of drinking Paris green. For the past few weeks he had been acting strangely over an imaginary illness. Saturday about noon he mixed a teaspoonful and a half of Paris green in a cup and drank it. Several hours later he showed evidence of the poison. He acknowledged his act. Nothing could be done for him. Wilson was 60 years of age, and a cabman. He married Mrs. Jas. McCallum, who with two step-daughters, survive.

$20,000 Fire at Orillia.

Orillia, March 20.—At 9 o'clock yesterday morning St. James' Episcopal Church, the finest church here, was destroyed by fire, the walls alone remaining. The loss will total $20,000, which is partly covered by insurance. The pipes of the organ were saved, but the instrument sustained damage to the extent of $1,000.

Military Changes.

Ottawa, March 20.—Captain F. D. Lafferty, Royal Canadian Artillery, is gazetted staff adjutant Royal Military College, vice Major Panet, appointed assistant adjutant-general at headquarters. Lieut.-Col. C. C. Sewell, of the permanent corps, Quebec, has been retired on a pension, having reached the age limit.

Edinburgh Church Seized.

London, March 20.—The Free Church attacked the Scottish capital on Saturday and seized the High Church at Edinburgh. The United Free congregation, which numbers 1,000, made no resistance.

The Wheat Left.

Chicago, March 20.—Reserves of wheat on the farm March 1, as given by the department of agriculture, were 111,000,000, bushels

What is that which is lengthened by being cut at both ends? Answer—A ditch.

There can be a difference of opinion on most subjects, but there is only one opinion as to the reliability of Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator. It is safe, sure and effectual.

What coat is finished without buttons and put on wet? Answer—A coat of paint.

Are you a sufferer with corns? If you are, get a bottle of Holloway's Corn Cure. It has never been known to fail.

If you were to ride a donkey what fruit would you resemble? Answer—A pair.

Sudden transition from a hot to a cold temperature, exposure to rain, sitting in a draught, unseasonable substitution of light for heavy clothing, are fruitful causes of colds and the resultant cough so perilous to persons of weak lungs. Among the many medicines for bronchial disorders so arising, there is none better than Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. Try it and become convinced. Price 25 cents.

Why is bread like the sun? Answer—Because it rises from the yeast.

They Are Carefully Prepared.—Pills which dissipate themselves in the stomach cannot be expected to have much effect upon the intestines, and to overcome costiveness the medicine administered must influence the action of these canals. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are so made, under the supervision of experts, that the substance in them intended to operate on the intestines is retarded in action until they pass through the stomach to the bowels.

Name something with two heads and one body. Answer—A barrel.

A Small Pill, but Powerful.—They that judge of the powers of a pill by its size, would consider Parmelee's Vegetable Pills to be lacking. It is a little wonder among pills. What it lacks in size it makes up in potency. The remedies which it carries are put up in these small doses, because they are so powerful that only small doses are required. The full strength of the extracts is secured in this form and do their work thoroughly.

What black thing enlightens the world? Answer—Ink.

A Requisite for the Rancher.—On the cattle ranges of the West, where men and stock are far from doctors and apothecaries, Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil is kept on hand by the intelligent as a ready made medicine, not only for many human ills, but as a horse and cattle medicine of surpassing merit. A horse and cattle rancher will find matters greatly simplified by using this Oil.

An Irishman gave his wife away by talking in his sleep. That is nothing. Plenty of wives give their husbands away by talking while awake.

It is worse than madness to neglect a cough, or cold which is easily subdued if taken in time but becomes, when left to itself, the forerunner of consumption and premature death. Inflammation, when it attacks the delicate tissue of the lungs and bronchial tubes, travels with perilous rapidity; then do not delay, get a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, the medicine that grasps this formidable foe of the human body, and drives it from the system. This medicine promotes a free and easy expectoration, subdues the cough, heals the diseased parts, and exerts a most wonderful influence in curing consumption, and other diseases of the throat and lungs. If parents wish to save the lives of their children, and themselves from much anxiety, trouble and expense, let them procure a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, and whenever a child has taken cold, has a cough or hoarseness, give the Syrup according to directions.

BY CHARLES GARVICE

Author of "The Verdict of the Heart," "A Heritage of Hate," "Nell of Shorne Mills," "Paid For," "A Modern Juliet," Etc.

"Do you think so? Oh, I am changed; very much so. An you will come? The old address."

"Thanks," he said. "Yes; certainly I will come."

"Thank you; it is good of you!" she murmured. "When? To-morrow?"

"Not to-morrow," he said, mechanically. "I am engaged. I am going to Lesborough. When I come back."

She drooped over her saddle and held out her long, thin hand, so perfectly gloved that the kid seemed an outer skin. Vane took it—how often had his lips kissed the white hand that glove covered!—pressed it with the proper amount of pressure.

"When you come back—directly you come back," she said, and turned her horse.

Judith Orme rode toward Queen Anne's Gate, with her beautiful eyes fixed on her horse's ears, and, though she bowed and smiled in response to the many greetings she received, she was scarcely conscious of them.

She pulled up at one of the small houses in St. Margaret's Place, which are as fashionable as they are small and inconvenient, and, having alighted with the aid of her discreet and well-mounted groom, entered the house and went up to the drawing-room.

The tea-table was set by the window overlooking the park, and Judith, after ringing the bell for the urn, sank into an easy-chair and let her beautiful face fall into the warm, white hands from which she had stripped her gloves, with a restless, feverish haste.

As the maid was placing the urn on the table a step, light but unsteady, was heard on the stairs, and presently there entered a seemingly middle-aged, if not quite young, man. He was small and slightly built, with features almost as delicately moulded as a woman's. His hair—it was a really admirable wig, a perfect work of art—sat, with a fine imitation of nature, on a face painted and enamelled so artfully that it might have belonged to a young man of five-and-twenty. The figure, slight and debonair, was clothed with a sartorial skill and cunning to which Saville Row alone could aspire; and it was only the eyes, a little bleared and prominent, which aroused the suspicion of the keen observer—a very keen observer—and let out the secret of Sir Chandos Orme's age.

Judith's hands fell from her eyes as her father entered the room, with his jaunty, would-be juvenile air, and the expression of her lovely face grew hard and matter-of-fact.

"You're home early, father," she said, curtly.

"Yes; yes, I am," he said. He had lunched at his club, lunched unwisely and too well, and the natural flush on his face strove, with praiseworthy but futile energy, to pierce the coat of enamel and paint. "But I came home because I have some news for you. Vane Mannering is here—here in London!"

He sank into a chair and smiled at her with a significance which was somewhat drowned by the effects of the bottle and a half of champagne he had taken with his lunch.

"He's back," he continued. "Old Fanworthy saw him—trust old Fanworthy for spotting a man!—and, as you know, Mannering is now the Earl of Lesborough."

"I know," said Judith, quietly. "And but for you I should be engaged to Vane Mannering, should be his wife."

"No, no, my dear Judith!" broke in Sir Chandos. "It was your own doing."

"My own doing!" said Judith, bitterly. "It was you, you, who stepped in between us, who persuaded me to throw Vane over and accept Lord Marlingford. You know it, father."

Sir Chandos waved his white hands—they were still famous, though they had been waving for considerably more than half a century.

"My dear Judith, do me justice! Vane Mannering was, at that time, ever so far removed from the peerage."

"And so you sacrificed me," she said, bitterly. "Persuaded, compelled me to throw him over and accept Lord Marlingford—"

"Who most—most inconsiderately died," put in Sir Chandos. "But when you say I compelled, I suggest, I merely suggest that you were easily persuaded—compelled; and rightly."

"And now—now Vane has come back to England?" said Judith. "And is—"

Sir Chandos shuffled in his chair and toyed with the cup of tea which he did not want.

"The Earl of Lesborough," he said. "You will, of course, my dear Judith—"

She rose, almost upsetting the fragile table with its dainty Worcester china.

"You expect me, you want me to—to—Ah, it is too shameful, too base!"

Sir Chandos eyed her rather nervously.

"My dear Judith, my dear child!" he murmured, between his artistically dyed moustache. "Circumstances alter cases."

She turned her face from him, and it may be hoped that the recording angel will give her credit for the tears that shone in the sapphire eyes.

"You knew that—that I cared for him; yes, loved him. I love him now. Yes, I love him now."

Her voice faltered and broke suddenly.

Sir Chandos eyed her with a faint and murky surprise.

"Really? Is that so? 'Pon my word, my dear Judith. Well, well! Tut, tut! But this windfall is lucky for us!"

She dried her eyes and regarded him with a bitter, defiant expression.

"What do you mean?" she demanded. "Why is it lucky?"

Sir Chandos at last put down the cup that cheers, but which he abhorred, and blinked his bleared eyes at her.

"Oh, I only meant to say that if you still care for him, if you want to be the Countess of Lesborough; well—well, we are all right. My dear Judith"—he leant forward and pointed a forefinger at her—"you know as well as I do that no man can resist you; and that if you mean going for Vane Mannering—I beg his pardon, I mean Lesborough!—there is no escape for him."

She bit her lip and stared thoughtfully, moodily, at the carpet, and the flush of shame, humiliation, came and went in her face.

"You haven't seen him since he came back. He is much changed. He—he was quite cool, cold to-day. Not angry—worse, indifferent."

Sir Chandos laughed softly, the kind of chuckle which is born of a knowledge of the world and an incapacity for shame.

"I have every confidence in you, my dear Judith," he said. "Every confidence. I—I think I will just drop in at the club on the chance of a rubber. Every confidence!"

CHAPTER XIII.

When he left the Park Vane—remembering the state of his attire—went to Shadbolt's, the Lesboroughs' tailor, in a quiet street off Bond Street.

The worthy tradesman received him with outspoken joy, but was shocked by the sight of the seedy serge suit, and still more shocked when he learnt that it was Vane's best. For the first time in his life Mr. Shadbolt procured a ready-made suit—which Vane indifferently donned there and then—and measured his noble client for a variety of others: shooting suits, frock suits, dress suits, riding coats, and so on.

It was a trifling incident, but it had its effect on Vane. Mr. Shadbolt's obsequiousness and the presence of the roll of notes in Vane's pocket were indicative of the change that had come over his fortunes. It was nearly dinner time when he returned to the Letchfords'; and they received him with open arms and an obvious air of relief.

"Thought you'd disappeared again, did indeed, old man!" said Letchford, while Lady Letchford smiled in sympathy with her husband.

"And you saw Tressider?"

"Yes; and I am going down to Lesborough to-morrow," said Vane. "I am going down with a cousin of mine—Julian Shore."

Letchford shook his head. "Never heard of him."

"Nor I, till this morning," said Vane. "Seems a very decent fellow; very good-looking chap. He would have been the heir, if I hadn't unluckily for him, turned up. I've taken rather a fancy to him—though he's rather peculiar."

"As how?" asked Letchford.

Vane shrugged his shoulders.

"Oh—I don't know. Goes in for chemistry and—and looks half a Spaniard; mother belongs that way."

"I'm so glad you are going to the Court, Lord Lesborough," said Lady Letchford. "You will feel so—so sure, you will realize the change; and there will be so much to do to occupy your mind."

"Yes, old fellow, you'll have to wake up and fill the bill, you know," cut in Letchford, cheerfully.

Vane suppressed a sigh.

"Yes, I suppose so," he said, rather wearily. "Will you lend me a dress-suit, Letchford? I'd like to sit down to dinner with Lady Letchford looking rather more like an ordinary human being than I did last night."

The husband and wife exchanged glances—they were still anxious ones—behind Vane's back. What was the nature of the cloud that rested upon the spirit of the new earl.

The next morning Vance called in a hansom for his cousin, and Julian himself came down to the door as if he had been waiting. The deaf and dumb woman stood at the door and looked at Vane fixedly. Julian wore a dark tweed suit and looked extremely well, almost too graceful, in it.

"Ready?" asked Vane without alighting. "Come on, then."

They got into a smoking-carriage of the express and chatted in a friendly way or read their papers. A well-appointed carriage was waiting for them at Lesborough Station, and a footman came forward and, touching his hat, addressed Julian.

"The carriage is outside, my lord. Mr. Holland sent it on the chance of your coming by this train."

Julian colored slightly. "This is Lord Lesborough," he said, indicating Vane.

"Oh, all right. Thanks," said Vane, quickly. "Get in, Julian; thoughtful of Mr. Holland; though for my part I'd rather have walked: it's no great distance."

Julian leant back, but looked out of the window with veiled keenness and eagerness. The road from the station to the Court goes through some beautiful scenery, and the road is trim and neat, as befits the road to so great a place. The people they passed in the road stopped at sight of the carriage and touched their hats or curtseyed, and women and children ran out to the gates in front of the cottages and stared with a mixture of awe and curiosity after the Court landau and the servants with their powdered heads and expensive mourning liveries.

Presently the carriage turned in at the south lodge gates, and into the avenue of magnificent trees which wound in graceful curves to the front entrance.

As the Court came in sight an exclamation escaped Julian; and Vane, who had been gazing vacantly at nothing, awoke and looked up.

"Fine place, isn't it?" he said in a matter-of-fact way as he let his gaze wander along the wide-stretching front of time-stained stone half covered by ivy.

"It is magnificent," said Julian. "I had no idea—"

"I ought to inflict the history of it on you; I've heard it often enough," said Vane. "It's one of the oldest houses in England. It used to be a show place, but my uncle—our uncle, pardon!—shut it up and kept visitors at bay. He was not one of the best tempered of men—but we mustn't speak ill of the dead, poor old chap!"

"Oh, I can understand," said Julian under his breath. "If this were mine I should not like to have Tom, Dick and Harry, to say nothing of their belongings, tramping about it. The place is a poem! You'll throw it open again, I suppose?"

"I suppose so," assented Vane, indifferently. "Why not? It's too big for one man—or a dozen for that matter; and there are all sorts of collections in it. One of the Lesboroughs, our great grandfather, I fancy, was a collector. I believe the pictures are particularly fine, they run all over the hall and the galleries and the rooms generally; and there's a famous library, and a collection of armor and gems, and that kind of thing. Oh, yes, I suppose it ought to be open to the public as it used to be. Why not?"

"What magnificent trees!" remarked Julian; "and this is the terrace—I picture it crowded with ladies and gallants in silks and satins—"

"Like a fancy dress ball," said Vane, listlessly. "Yes, a shooting-suit and a briar pipe, to say nothing of swallow-tails, and tailor-made gowns don't seem very appropriate, do they? Good lord, we're evidently going to have a reception," he broke off with dismay, as he caught a glimpse of a row of servants standing in the hall.

A short, wiry little man came hurrying down the steps, his bowler hat in his hand, his face red with excitement.

"That's Holland," said Vane. "Seems a bit fussy."

Mr. Holland put the footman aside and opened the carriage door.

"Good morning, my lord! Welcome—er—welcome to the Court, welcome home! I got Mr. Tressider's telegram yesterday, and—er—have done the best I could on such short notice—"

Vane shook the steward's hand and introduced Julian.

"Mr. Shore, my cousin, Mr. Holland," he said. "He's been good enough to come down with me."

The steward was rather taken aback—he had expected the earl would be alone—but he shook hands with Julian and extended the welcome to him.

"Glad to see you, Mr. Shore; of course I know who you are, though I have not had the pleasure—"

He escorted the two up the broad stone steps flanked by the heraldric monsters which figured on the Mannering arms, and cast a swift and critical glance at the row of servants who drew themselves up and, as Vane and Julian passed between murmured:

"Welcome home, my lord; welcome home."

Vane, who detested fuss, nodded and grunted an inarticulate response, but Julian, his eyes brilliant with the appreciation of the scenic effect, smiled on either side of him in a fashion that went straight home to the hearts of the female servants, who, in their neat dresses of black merino with white collars and cuffs, looked like the servants in one of the modern musical farces whereof we all wot so well.

Prance, the stately butler—"Mr." Prance, as he was called in the servants' hall—came forward with a bow that would have done credit to a bishop.

"Luncheon is ready, my lorh, and shall be served—"

"Ah, how d'y do, Prance, said Vane, holding out his hand. "I'm glad to see you here."

"And I'm glad to be here to receive your lordship," responded Prance with a mixture of defence and dignity which was almost aweinspring.

"And is that Mrs. Field?" said Vane, as the house-keeper moved from the line. "Glad to see you, too, Mrs. Field." ("His lordship's a true Mannering," Mrs Field remarked to an appreciative audience in the servants' hall after "the reception." "He shook hands with me and Mr. Prance; not merely bowed, you noticed, but shook hands. And any one could see that he was a nobleman by the way he did it; not haughty and cold-like, but as if we were really friends. His lordship, being a lord, knows what's due to his servants.") "Lunch ready? Right. We'll just wash our hands."

"Your lordship's man?" asked Prance, looking towards the carriage.

"Eh, oh a man. No, haven't got one. Forget all about it."

"Just so, my lord; your lordship's busy, much engaged. I thought perhaps you wouldn't bring one; so I made so bold as to ask Fenton, his late lordship's valet, to stay till—"

Fenton came forward.

"Thanks, Prance; very thoughtful," said Vane.

He thrust his arm through that of Julian, who had been looking round the fine old hall in silence, and led him up the stairs. Fenton followed and opened the door of the late earl's room.

"Here? Oh, all right," said Vane. "Where are you going to put Mr. Julian? The best room is ready, I hope? Here, I'll come and see."

The best guest room was ready; it was not far from Vane's, and Vane gave Julian a friendly little push into it.

"Don't be long; you must be famishing; I am. Fenton, you look after Mr. Julian. I can manage for myself."

Fenton, with the expressionless face of the perfectly trained servant, went with Julian, who protested faintly, and Vane walked across the room in which so many Lesboroughs had slept—and died, and stared out of the window. He looked towards the south and upon a view which was perfect of its kind. The admirably kept gardens lay at the foot of the terrace with its marble vases and statuary, beyond were lawns with magnificent specimen trees, and still beyond was the home park. Over this he could get a glimpse of the uplands dotted with the farms and homesteads, a faint line of blue on the horizon stood for the sea.

It was a lovely view; but, alas, alas! Vane saw it not. His eyes were looking at the exquisite form and coloring of a Fairy Isle, beside which the view from the Court paled to insignificance.

If only Nina had—had married him of her own free will, if she had loved him instead of detesting, fearing him so much that she had preferred to risk her life rather than live alone with him—ah, well, with what different eyes he would have looked at these possessions of his, how happy he would have been sharing them with her!

A footman, bringing in Vane's portmanteau, aroused him, and with a sigh he turned from the window, had his wash, and went down.

Julian was waiting for him in the hall; and Vane, throwing off his gloom, led him to the dining room, a stately apartment large enough to be called a banqueting hall.

Vane motioned Julian to the bottom of the table and Mr Holland to the side, and Prance and a couple of footman served the lunch. Mr. Holland was still all a-quiver with pleasant excitement.

"I hope your lordship—and Mr. Julian—are intending a long stay?" he said. "I noticed that you did not bring much luggage."

Vane shrugged his shoulders. "Oh, thank you, Mr. Holland!" he said. "I don't think we know; a few days, perhaps—"

Mr. Holland's face fell.

"Oh, I hope longer than that, Lord Lesborough!" he said, earnestly. "Everybody is expecting—hoping that you are going to settle down at the Court; in fact, I happen to know that some—er—preparations, something in the way of welcoming your lordship—"

Vane turned off his dismay with a laugh.

"Ought to settle down, eh, Mr. Holland?" he said. "Well, we'll see."

"You have been travelling so much, been abroad so long," suggested Mr. Holland, as if eager to make excuses for him, "you find it rather hard to settle down. Of course we've all heard of the wreck—"

"Yes, yes; bad business being wrecked. Prance, is this the wonderful claret? It's like yours, not a bit better, anyway, Julian."

"It's the same," said Julian, nodding across his glass.

"Lord Fanworthy desired me to let him know when you arrived, Lord Lesborough," said Mr. Holland.

Vane nodded. "Lord Fanworthy, of the Grange," he explained to Julian. "Our nearest neighbor. He used to be kind to me; I liked him. We'll go over and see him, eh? In fact, there'll be a lot of visiting both ways, won't there, Mr. Holland?"

Mr. Holland nodded cheerfully.

"Yes, yes; certainly, my lord. Everybody is delighted to hear that you are—er—home; the Lisles—"

"Place called the Moat," said Vane to Julian.

"And the Denningtons—"

"Forget the name of their house," remarked Vane.

"Limmington," supplied Mr. Holland.

"Ah, yes, Limmington. And there are the Chases, and the Protheroes. Plenty of society for you, Julian."

Mr. Holland looked slightly puzzled. It was as if his lordship and his cousin had things in common; but he rambled on with local names and local gossip and Vane listened—or looked and nodded as if he did—and Julian smiled his soft, pleasant smile; he was certainly listening.

The lunch was over at last, and Mr. Holland, looking beseechingly at Vane, said:

"If your lordship would kindly give me half an hour, say an hour, in the library—"

"Not if I know it," retorted Vane with a laugh and a shake of the head. "No, no! I remember those half hours in the library you and my uncle used to go in for. Not today, Mr. Holland. Have mercy on us. I want to show Mr. Julian over the place. It's his first visit, you know. Come on, Julian! Got one of those cigars of yours to spare? Ought to have brought them down—"

"Cigars, my lord?" said Prance, promptly, appearing at his elbow with a box; but Vane declined them, pleasantly enough.

"Thanks; rather have one of Mr. Julian's, Prance; I've tried 'em. Though these are all right, no doubt. Come, Julian."

Prance held a light for their cigars, and the two young men went

We Will Buy

A 50c. Bottle of Liquozone and Give it to You to Try.

We want you to know about Liquozone, and the product itself can tell you more than we. So we ask you to let us buy you a bottle—a full-size bottle—to try. Let it prove that it does what medicine cannot do. See what a tonic it is. Learn that it does kill germs. Then you will use it always, as we do, and as millions of others do.

This offer itself should convince you that Liquozone does as we claim. We would certainly not buy a bottle and give it to you if there was any doubt of results. You want those results; you want to be well and to keep well. And you can't do that—nobody can—without Liquozone.

We Paid $100,000

For the American rights to Liquozone. We did this after testing the product for two years, through physicians and hospitals, after proving, in thousands of different cases, that Liquozone destroys the cause of any germ disease.

Liquozone has, for more than 20 years, been the constant subject of scientific and chemical research. It is not made by compounding drugs, nor with alcohol. Its virtues are derived solely from gas—largely oxygen gas—by a process requiring immense apparatus and 14 days' time. The result is a Liquid that does what oxygen does. It is a nerve food and blood food—the most helpful thing in the world to you. Its effects are exhilarating, vitalizing, purifying. Yet it is a germicide so certain that we publish on every bottle an offer of $1,000 for a disease germ that it cannot kill. The reason is that germs are vegetables; and Liquozone—like an excess of oxygen—is deadly to vegetal matter.

There lies the great value of Liquozone. It is the only way known to kill germs in the body without killing the tissue, too. Any drug that kills germs is a poison, and it cannot be taken internally. Every physician knows that medicine is almost helpless in any germ disease.

Germ Diseases.

These are the known germ diseases. All that medicine can do for these troubles is to help Nature overcome the germs, and such results are indirect and uncertain. Liquozone attacks the germs, wherever they are. And when the germs which cause a disease are destroyed, the disease must end, and forever. That is inevitable.

WHAT THE WORLD ESTEEMS, YET ONLY FEW FIGHT FOR.

LEGACY TO ONE'S CHILDREN

Imperishable Capital for the Right Conduct of the Business in Life—A Good Name Is Not a Pauper, But Gathereth the Rewards of an Earnest and Practical Industry—How it Is Attained.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1905, by Frederick Diver, of Toronto, at the Dep't of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., March 19.—What the whole world esteems, yet what only the few strive for; what a man reverences and values as priceless, yet often flings away, and what every one wishes to bequeathe to his children is the subject of to-day's sermon, the text chosen being Proverbs xxii, 1, "A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches."

What is capital? "Money, property or stock employed in trade, manufacture, etc., the sum invested or lent as distinguished from the income or interest," is the definition given by the lexicographer. It is wealth producing wealth, not wealth being absorbed or being eaten up by expenses.

But capital, according to the lexicographer's definition, is not represented in gold ingots or coin only. I climb with the miner a hillside in Colorado or Nevada. He points to some rock and says, "There are millions of dollars' worth of gold buried here." "Why do you not get it out?" "Because," he answers, "I have no capital. I must have machinery to break the rocks; I must have miners to burrow into yonder depths; I must have money to cart away my ore to the smelting furnace. Money must be had before you can produce money."

I go into a store and see at work the busy manager of a great mercantile firm. I say to him: "Why are you working for others? Why do you not work for yourself? If you are smart enough to manage a business for other men, certainly you are smart enough to manage a business for yourself." "Aye, aye," answers the manager; "that is true. But I have not the money to start a business like this. I must have hundreds of thousands of dollars to sink before I can make a cent. I must buy my goods from the wholesale dealer before I can sell them to my customers. I must rent a store and hire clerks and spend enormous sums for advertising. All these outlays demand a large amount of capital."

Capital represents the seed and the land, to use an illustration of the farm. Income represents the harvests. The farmer must own or hire his farm and plant his seed before he can get his harvests, or his income. Now, as the farms and the miner's machinery and the merchant's stock are nearly always valued from the standpoint of money, it is a common custom to give these sentences as truisms: "It takes money to make money." "Everything animate as well as inanimate will bow before the sceptre of gold." "Midas' touch has in his hand the grip of iron." But to-day the author of my text emphatically says: "The best producing capital a man ever had in life is a good name.

A good name, in the first place, is not a pauper. Her mansion is not the poorhouse. Her wardrobe is not filled with rags. Her family plot is not a potter's field. As a rule, she has a comfortable house to live in. Her sitting room has a glowing fireplace. Her library shelves are filled with books. "She is not afraid of the snow for her household, for her household are clothed with scarlet." "She is like the merchant ships—she bringeth her food from afar." "Her husband is known in the gates when he sitteth among the elders of the land." For what her hand findeth to do she doeth with all her might. She gathereth the rewards of an earnest and practical industry. She inevitably giveth to the holder of her family name all the necessities for a happy competency and a healthful physical and mental existence.

You can see this fact demonstrated in almost every department of life. "Honesty is the best policy," "whether it is found within church walls or down in the busy commercial section of a great city. My text does not say, "Be good, and you will be financially poor." Oh, no! If it did, that statement would not be true. It would not be true in professional life, in mercantile life or in domestic life.

Why does your family physician have such a large practice? You trust him not only as a good doctor, but as an honest man. You know when he is called he will not put you to bed for an attack of grip and call it pneumonia and charge you $100 to cure you of a disease you never had. You know he will not run up useless bills against you, as some dishonest dentists do, who, if they cannot find any cavities in your teeth, will bore holes into them just to send you a bill to make you support them and their families. You know that yonder merchant has a large business, not because he offers better goods than his rivals, but because you can believe his statements in reference to those goods. Indeed, I go further than my original assertion in reference to my text. A good name is more often found in a comfortable home than it is in a hovel.

"Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these things will be added unto you." That means clothing, food, home, education. As a rule, all these blessings accompany the industry of a good name. In order to win a good name, sacrifices you will have to make. In order to win the battle of Waterloo, Wellington had to make awful sacrifices. A short time after his famous conquest the English commander wrote to a dear friend as follows: "What do you think of the total defeat of Bonaparte by the British army? Never was there in the annals of the world so desperate or so hard fought an action or such a defeat. It was really the battle of the giants. My heart is broken by the terrible loss I have sustained, of my old friends and companions and my poor soldiers." In the battle of Waterloo, in which you have to struggle for a good name, you will have to make many sacrifices, as did Wellington. But, as a rule, you will not have to suffer poverty, hunger, homelessness and cold. A good name is won by industry, frugality, purity, honesty and doing with all your heart and mind what your hand finds to do. These characteristics of man, earnestly and faithfully followed through life, will inevitably land a man in a better place than the poorhouse or potter's field. It does not follow because you are financially poor that you are holy; it does not follow that because you live in a palace that you are a rascal. Beau Brummel died a pauper; Peter Cooper lived in a rich man's mansion.

But a good name does more than pay your butcher's and baker's and grocer's and clothier's bills. It does more than give you a title deed to the house in which you live. It offers to you the most priceless gift of Jesus Christ, the love of your family and your friends and the love and respect of the community in which you live. There is an old proverb which says: "A man cannot live on love alone. When poverty knocks at the door love flies out of the window." Poor proverb that! The richest home on earth where love is not is poorer than the poorest man's hovel where love dwells. The love of a community is yours if you will earn it with the deeds and loves of a good man.

If you were a great man, a truly great man, I could not say this. One of the heavy prices a truly great man, as a rule, has to pay for his greatness is to suffer misrepresentation and slander and hate. Most of the contemporaries of John Milton never could appreciate the true worth of the blind sage, who, in the black exile of national contempt had to go to his study for comfort until his blinded eyes saw more of the glories of heaven than the two eyes of any inspired writer have even seen since Apostolic times. Many a soiled statue in Westminster Abbey could be washed as white as the driven snow if it were only possible to collect all the tears which once fell from the eyes of those whose bodies are now sleeping under yonder cold marble. Those tears were shed in the days of neglect and ostracism and poverty. Only the other day I ran across an editorial written by one of the most famous of northern writers, who afterwards became one of the greatest eulogists of our martyred President, Abraham Lincoln. This editorial was written in the heat of the civil war. "Any man who would go down to Washington and shoot the stupid fool in the White House would be conferring an inestimable favor on the American people, were it not for the fact there was a bigger blockhead in the Vice-Presidential chair." Ah, yes, the bitterest of execrations were hurled at Lincoln when he was alive, as the most fulsome of eulogies are given to him now he is dead.

Though the world often has been unjust and bitter to the great men, I have always felt that this persecution and this bitterness were not due, as a rule, to the innate meanness of the human race, but rather to its inability at certain times to appreciate the heroes and heroines who were sacrificing their lives for the good of their fellow men. But, my friend, you need not be afraid that the world will be unable to appreciate you good works, if you are doing any good works. You are not a great warrior, a great statesman, a great reformer. You are only an ordinary man, living an ordinary life in an ordinary place. Therefore, if you are kind and loving and gentle and forgiving and helpful to your fellow men they will be kind and loving and forgiving and gentle and helpful to you. Why? Because each day of your life you come into personal touch with your little world, and the friends and the people of your community see you just as you are.

Taking another step forward in my subject, I declare that a good name is the most glorious of all inheritances which a man can leave to his children. It means more, infinitely more, than gold. It means more than fame, more than social position, more than landed estate. It means more than anything else on earth that you can give. Most of us want to leave our children the best we can. We must not forget to give them this treasure, which is of more value "than great riches."

How can parents financially poor leave to their children the greatest of inheritances? Let me explain more in detail. The adjective "good" comes from the substantive "God." To be "good" in the highest sense means to be "goodlike" or "like Christ." Therefore, when a father bequeaths to his son a "good name" he gives to him, in the highest sense, a Christian example well lived. He seems to step to his boy's side and put his hand in his boy's hand and say: "My son, I want you to come with me and kneel in prayer. I want you to come with me and learn to read the promises of God in His holy book. My son, when sinners entice thee, I want to tell you where I have found strength in the past to resist temptations. And when sorrows come, as come they will, I want you to learn where you can find God as a refuge and strength." Side by side with their children the Christian parents walk. Side by side they go with them through life. Long after the parents have pillowed their heads in the dust, the memories of their good names or their Christian examples live on to guide their offspring. Are you not going to leave to your children the inheritance of a good name or a Christian example, such an inheritance as that which your fathers and mothers left to you?

If any young men and women need to be held to the cross of Christ by the Christian example of a parent's life, trusting in God and being with God, those children of yours need it. They have exactly the same kind of temperament that you have. They are highstrung. They are impulsive. They can be easily swept off their feet by success and discouraged by defeat. What are they going to do in "the swellings of the Jordan?" My brother, even with all the advantages of the Christian surroundings of your boyhood still you have a hard struggle. What, then, are your children going to do when temptations assail them? They have never seen their father kneeling in prayer or walking with Christ. They have never thought that you had a divine succorer. "A good name" as an inheritance? Why, it is simply priceless in value. Is not, for your children, a good name rather to be chosen than great riches?

But, if our good names are essential to our children after we are dead, how much more essential are they for us when we step out from this life into the next! The heaviest money bag that was ever secreted in the dark vaults of the rich man who despised the poor Lazarus grovelling on his palace steps cannot be carried by him or his friend one single inch beyond his grave. Do you not think it an absurd thing for a rich man to struggle and to keep on struggling for something he cannot keep over a few years at best? This money may and in all probability will, do his children a damage after he is gone. It is an old saying that "Shrouds have no pockets," yet many men seem to live as though their shrouds would be different from all other shrouds or that they would live on forever and never have a shroud.

Is this bearing the name of the Lord God Almighty to you a meaningless figure? Will you not at least rejoice in it as much as you would for bearing the name of a human friend in your hand? You remember some years ago your business was going absolutely to pieces. You did not know which way to turn. The bills were coming in and had to be paid, or you would be flung into the bankruptcy court. All night long you kept walking the floor. You kept saying to yourself: "Oh, God, what shall I do? What shall I do?" The morning broke, but that morning was as black to you as midnight. Suddenly there came a ring at your doorbell. You thought it was one of your creditors. The hammer of that bell struck your brain as though it was a butcher's bludgeon. The parlor door opened. At first you were too dazed to look up. But when you looked, you saw, not a creditor, but a dear old friend—perhaps a father, a brother or a Jonathan. "Harry," said he, "I hear you are in financial trouble. You know I have lots of property. Well, here is a blank cheque to which I have signed my name. You can draw on me for all you need. God bless you, my boy. Good-bye. You will come out all right." What did you do? Did you thank him? Oh, no. You were too deeply moved for that. You just cried like a little child. Then you brushed your tears away and went forth to meet your creditors. Oh, your head was up; your step was firm; your lips wore a happy smile. In your hand you bore the name of your friend who had financially saved you.

When God gives us a good name He gives to us a pledge that He will see us through all the struggles of life. He says: "The sheep upon a thousand hills are mine. The gold buried in the deepest mines is all mine. The winds obey my voice. All that I have is thine. I will, if necessary, give it thee in this struggle of life." Oh, my friends, cannot you to-day feel that God is back of you when He gives to you the offer of a "good name?" Will you bear the name of Christ as your Saviour's name? Will you bear it upon your forehead? Will you allow your name to be engraved in the palms of his hands? When you choose between a good name and riches you do not choose between Christ and poverty, you choose between Christ, with all the wealth of a universe, and gold as an oriole which might spread her yellow wings and be gone in a night.

When Cyrus offered to Artabazus a cup of gold and gave to Crysantas a kiss, Artabazus said, "The cup thou gavest to me was not so good gold as the kiss thou gavest to Crysantas." Why? Whey Cyrus gave his kiss he gave to his favorite his heart. He gave to him the symbol that hereafter he and all that he had were Crysantas'. May the dear Christ place upon every one of our lips a holy kiss! And then when he becomes a part of us and we a part of him, we shall bear his name, and all that he has shall be ours, and all that we have shall be his. With that one kiss we shall enter into the royal family of which God is the Father and Christ the Elder Brother. His name shall be upon every forehead. "A good name." Oh, let us change the text! "The Christ name is rather to be chosen than great riches."

A Family Reunited.

The work of the Provincial Immigration Office at the Union Station is not without its touches of romance, as the following story shows. Last week an elderly man and his wife arrived here from Norway in search of two sons who had settled in New Ontario a year ago. They did not know the exact whereabouts of the young men, and Mr. T. Southworth, Director of Colonization, was asked to give what assistance he could in locating them. Pending the result, temporary employment was obtained for the man in this city. Yesterday the immigrants arriving in Toronto included two young Norwegian girls, who could not speak a word of English, and who had through tickets from Norway to Lisgar, Ont., which, as the sequel proved, should have been made out to New Liskeard. The services of Mr. A. L. Hertzberg, Consul for Norway and Sweden, were requisitioned and it was then found that the girls were daughters of the man and woman mentioned, and were looking for their brothers. The parents and their daughters were soon brought together, and their rejoicing at the reunion was most sincere. Meanwhile, the Colonization Department had, through its records of New Ontario settlers, traced the sons, who are farming near New Liskeard, and have written to them. A reply was received later, asking that the parents and daughters be sent on, and expressing pleasure at the manner in which the officials had looked after them.—Toronto Globe.

"Don Quixote" Alive Yet.

From Sir Wilfrid Laurier's reference in a speech the other day, it is apparent that "Don Quixote" is a living book to-day. "Don Quixote" was given to the world in 1605, and a couple of years later the phrase "fighting a windmill" was introduced in plays on the English stage. Since that time many parodies and adaptations have appeared in English literature, notably Hudibras and Sam Weller, the cockney Sancho Panza. "Don Quixote," if it does not stand alone, stands unequivocally by the side of the best satire ever produced.

Ruttan Acquitted-- Rielly's Former Evidence

Submitted to the Jury, Subject to Mr. Johnston's Objection—Addresses of Counsel and Judge's Charge in Ruttan's Case—Mr. O'Flynn's Evidence—He Still Has Doubts.

The first of the conspiracy trials came to an end on Saturday night, Edward G. Ruttan, the Harrowsmith henchman of W. J. Shibley, the missing Frontenac candidate, was declared not guilty by the jury. Justice MacMahon, in discharging Ruttan, told him he was fortunate, and advised him to be more careful in future.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON SESSION.

Continuing his evidence, Ruttan denied that he had told Harpell the bogus boxes were made in Watertown. He had not, either, mentioned anything to Harpell about a conversation with Guess, and had not told Harpell that he was "Kerfoot." Ruttan said there were ten boxes, as he supposed, in the boat. They each threw out five boxes This, Ruttan swore, was his entire connection with the bogus ballot-box matter. He showed detective Parkinson where the boxes were sunk in the lake. Ruttan denied that Phil Lott gave the address to Rielly to which the West Hastings boxes were to be sent.

Cross-examined by Mr. Hellmuth, Ruttan said he had no reason to believe that either Shibley or Lott would try to injure him. Phil Lott and Harpell, he thought, would. Mr. Cochrane, of the Albion Hotel, was neither a friend nor an enemy. The Prosecuting Counsel grew intensely dramatic. He pointed out that, at the first investigation, Ruttan had swore that he took the letter to Rielly. Was that true, or false?

FORMER EVIDENCE UNTRUE.

Ruttan said his first evidence in regard to the letter was untrue.

The nerves of everybody present grew tense with excitement. Mr. Hellmuth was tying the witness up in a knot. Other points of difference between Ruttan's first evidence and that of to-day, were pointed out. The witness looked the picture of a man ill at ease. There was a solemn stillness in the court room. Again Ruttan said he would swear that he had never talked about elections to Phil Lott while on the 18 miles drive; nor of ballot boxes.

Mr. Maybee tried to interfere in the fierce bombardment which Ruttan was getting, but the Judge decided it was all perfectly regular and admissible. The Crown Prosecutor pointed out that Rielly had sworn that Ruttan knew all about the ballot-boxes. In his former evidence Ruttan was not so positive as he was now.

The fierce fire of questions went on. Everybody felt sorry as they looked at Ruttan's father, who had to sit and witness the discomfiture of his son. The witness said that at the first investigation he was in a highly nervous state, and was not himself. The Crown Prosecutor said that Mr. Cochrane, the hotel-keeper, had sworn that Ruttan told him that two boxes would come to Kerfoot, that he (Cochrane) was to sign for them, and that he (Ruttan) would get them. Ruttan said he would not swear that Mr. Cochrane's statement was untrue. Again he reiterated his statement that Rielly had not drawn plans of the boxes for him and Phil Lott, as they both had sworn to. On the Saturday before election he found out that Shibley had fraudulent boxes in his possession, but never mentioned it to anybody. He knew the scheme was wrong, but kept it a secret.

NO RETURN TICKET.

Ruttan got tied up in the matter of return fare from Harrowsmith to Kingston and back. It turned out, according to the Crown Prosecutor, that no 60 cent return tickets were sold from Harrowsmith to Kingston, one of which Ruttan swore he had purchased; return tickets were only sold on two days, Thursdays and Saturdays, whereas Ruttan had gone from Harrowsmith to Kingston on Friday. Ruttan was evidently glad when his cross-examination was over.

Re-examined by the Judge, Ruttan said he was engaged by Shibley to drive Phil Lott to Kingston. Shibley did not tell what part of Kingston he was to go to, or the name of the party he was to drive. Again Ruttan said he was wrong when he swore at the preliminary investigation that he had taken a letter from Shibley to Rielly.

Mr. Leighton Guess was recalled, and said that the boxes did not rattle on the way out to Shibley's, but when the boxes were unloaded the contents rattled, and he (Guess) said "This sounds like a tin shop.".

Bert Cook, Shibley's clerk, was the next witness. He remembered the day when Shibley came in and told Ruttan to get a rig to drive a man to Kingston. He did not learn the man's name.

Mr. Simeon Ashley was next. He remembered being at Stirling to receive his instructions as deputy returning officer. He denied entirely the evidence given by Phil Lott in relation to him. Phil, he said, had asked him to drive out to his house and get one of the boxes.

Cross-examined Mr. Ashley said he had heard of bogus ballot-boxes before. He did not know, when Phil spoke to him about the boxes, that Phil had "blown on" the matter to Mr. Porter. He did not think the matter of sufficient importance to speak about to the Returning Officer.

MR. O'FLYNN STILL DOUBTS.

Mr. O'Flynn was next. He remembered Phil Lott coming to his office the day after election. If Phil Lott said he did not say in his office that he had asked three men to use the bogus boxes, he (Phil) was mistaken.

Cross-examined Mr. O'Flynn acknowledged that he now knew that Phil Lott had given the plot away to Mr. Porter before he was alleged to have spoken to the three deputy returning officers. Under oath, Mr. O'Flynn said he still had his doubts as to whether the bogus ballot-boxes were brought in to steal the election. He believed Phil Lott was at the bottom of it. It was, he believed, B. O. Lott's and Phil Lott's scheming, with Phil Lott urging it on.

In reply to questions by Mr. Hellmuth, Mr. O'Flynn made some characteristic statements which caused the audience to smile. The story of the doings of last election day were told in an amusing way.

MR. MAYBEE TO THE JURY.

The evidence was declared closed, and Mr. Maybee addressed the Jury. The matter, he said, was one of great importance, both to the country and his client and family. He reviewed the main circumstances of the case, and submitted that there was no evidence to prove that Ruttan had been guilty of conspiracy with any of the parties mentioned in the Indictment. A man did not become a conspirator if he did not, when he heard of anything wrong, rush off and inform the authorities. Mr. Maybee admitted the conspiracy was a most disgraceful affair, there was a conspiracy, but he denied that his client was connected with it. The counsel for the defence spoke very eloquently for an hour and five minutes, reviewing the evidence from his point of view. He asked why did not the prosecution put Rielly in the box, after His Lordship had ruled that he could be compelled to testify? There was a reason why the Crown did not put Rielly in the box. The Crown Counsel endeavors to place in Ruttan's mouth some statement alleged to have been made by Rielly. The Crown Prosecutor in opening the case stated that Ruttan was Kerfoot. Has it been established that Ruttan was Kerfoot or that he had any knowledge from Rielly or Lott that a box addressed to such a name was to be sent to him? Harpell and Ruttan both gave evidence in reference to the sinking of the ballot boxes. If one did wrong both did wrong. It is altogether likely that Shibley and Harpell had discussed the getting rid of the ballot-boxes before Ruttan was sent for. The learned prosecutor might tell them that there are discrepancies in the evidence given by Ruttan at the preliminary examination and that of to-day. Ruttan states that he was intoxicated at that time. The story he told in the main in the witness box to-day was virtually the same as he told then. Memory is faulty and details may be forgotten. The point is, was there a conversation in that buggy that day and was a plot revealed to an entire stranger? It was unreasonable and improbable that such was the case. He had endeavored to the best of his ability to place the facts of the case before them in so far as his client was concerned. If he was found guilty he goes to the penitentiary and is punished. For whose crime? Even if he had some little knowledge of this transaction is it fair that the hired man should go to the penitentiary instead of the boss? If the principals were here he could see that 12 men would punish them. Was it fair to punish those who were on the fringe whilst those inside the net were allowed to go unpunished? If the men who concocted this plot were tried, justice would not be done if they were not convicted. He did not think the Jury would believe that his client was a conspirator. Had he been a principal it would have been easy to prove it. Upon the evidence he submitted that the Jury should find the accused not guilty.

Court adjourned at 5.50 until 7 o'clock.

The Evening Session.

Court opened at 7 o'clock.

The Crown Prosecutor addressed the jury. Dealing with the point raised by Mr. Maybee, that the Crown was wrong in not producing Rielly to give evidence, Mr. Hellmuth told the facts of the case, showing that the onus of Rielly's not giving evidence lay with Rielly's counsel, and not with the prosecution. In regard to the remarks about principals, Mr. Hellmuth said there were no principals, all persons who furthered the conspiracy in any way were equally guilty in the eyes of the law, if they wilfully took such part. In each and every conspiracy there must be some chief persons. What they had to consider was, was Ruttan in any way wilfully connected with the conspiracy? The drowning of the boxes had nothing to do with the case. The question was, was Ruttan in any way connected with the plot to steal votes and rob a candidate who was appealing to the electorate. The thought of no one else should enter into their minds. Edward G. Ruttan was being tried, and of him alone they must think. He then reviewed the evidence. The Crown Prosecutor defended Phil Lott, and said they had no right to attempt to fathom his motives—they must judge him by his actions. Any man had enough to do to stand accountable for his actions. Phil Lott could have no interest in incriminating Edward G Ruttan. Did it stand to reason that he should endeavor to do so? Rielly had also incriminated Ruttan. He was a friend of Ruttan's. Did it stand to reason that he, a friend, should swear to falsehoods about Ruttan? Cochrane, the hotel-keeper, who could have no interest either way, swore that Ruttan told him two boxes would come to his hotel addressed to Kerfoot, and that he (Ruttan) would call for them. The story of the return ticket was pitiable, the Crown Prosecutor said. Ruttan told of buying a return ticket on a day when none were sold. The Crown Prosecutor wove a strong chain of evidence. They had simply to consider, as reasonable men, if there had been sufficient evidence to reasonably connect Ruttan with the case. If they were satisfied that Ruttan, as Kerfoot, got the boxes and carried them to Shibley, that was sufficient, and they must find him guilty. Mr. Hellmuth grew very impressive in his peroration. If the jury, he said, could see their way to take the bare word of Ruttan in preference to the testimony of such men as Cochrane and Guess, backed up by that of Rielly, they might find the accused not guilty, but if they did he feared there was small hope of obtaining convictions in any of the other conspiracy cases.

THE JUDGE'S CHARGE.

Mr. Justice MacMahon said the jury had had the admissions of counsel for the defence that a conspiracy existed in Frontenac and West Hastings. The conspiracy was of great magnitude, and the conspirators evidently intended to accomplish the object they had, namely, to steal the elections in those constituencies. Shibley appears to have been the one who started it, in connection with Rielly. Rielly, according to Carscallen, of Watertown, was the designer of the boxes. The letters from Rielly to B. O. Lott showed the West Hastings connection. Something had been said about Phil Lott's disloyalty to his brother. With that he or they had nothing to do. It was natural for B. O. Lott to place confidence in his brother: though it turned out to have been misplaced confidence. As it was natural for Lott to trust his brother, was it not natural for Shibley to trust the men who were working for him and whom he had known for many years? It was perfectly natural. They must weigh the evidence carefully. The note from Byron O. Lott to Shibley was a strong link. Ruttan's denial of taking the letter almost unaccountable. It was hard to see how he could have made such statement at the former enquiry if it were not true. It was their duty to weigh the evidence carefully, according to their oaths. They were not called to believe the words of all witnesses who went in the box, for it was a daily occurrence that statements were made by witnesses which were entirely foundationless. They must take into consideration the accompanying circumstances. Politics had nothing to do with this case. The prosecution was for the protection of society; for the sanctity of the ballot; for the common weal. They must deal with the question with no thought of its political aspect. Ruttan said Shibley showed him the boxes; was it possible to conceive that a man would have done that unless he had most unlimited confidence in that man? Ruttan denied Harpell's statements—they had seen Harpell in the box and could draw their own conclusions. What interest had Harpell in the matter? He was not a local man, but was a stranger in the district. As to punishment, the law provided that--they had nothing to do with it. If a man committed a crime he knew the law provided punishment for him, if he were detected. They must judge by the evidence. If they were satisfied that Ruttan was at Rielly's on that night spoken of, and was at Cochrane's hotel in connection with the boxes, then they must find that he was connected with the conspiracy. Phil Lott, who was in the conspiracy, was present there in the interests of his brother, and Ruttan was there in the interests of Shibley. It had been said that the leading conspirators should be on their trial. It was a pity they were not. It was a gigantic fraud, and the pity was the chief actors in it were allowed to escape. In conclusion the Judge said it didn't matter how small part a man played in a conspiracy; if he were proven to have been connected with it at all he must be found guilty.

THE JURY CONSIDERS.

The jury retired at five minutes to 9, the Judge retired to his room, and for two hours and ten minutes people waited for the verdict. Everybody discussed the matter, and agreed that, whatever the outcome was, the defence had put up a great fight. Every once in a while the sound of loud talking would come from the jury room. The gentlemen of the jury were evidently leading the strenuous life. At last, at 11.05 o'clock, a thundering knock on the inside of the jury room door announced that something was going to happen. The Sheriff interviewed the jurors and then went into the judge's room. The jurors filed into court again, and, in answer to the usual questions, announced that they found the accused "Not Guilty." The Judge ordered Ruttan to stand up. He said:

"Edward G. Ruttan, the jury has taken a lenient view of your case. You are fortunate in being acquitted. You have had a narrow escape. I would advise you to be more careful hereafter. As a good citizen, you should have brought this matter to the attention of the authorities when it first came to your knowledge. You may go."

And the trial of Rex vs. Ruttan was over.

Monday Morning Session.

Court opened at 10.15.

Rielly came into court and took his place in the prisoners' dock. He looked very well. The procuring of a jury was at once proceeded with. There were challenges and "stand asides" galore. The following jury was at last selected:

J. H. Freeman, Thurlow.
Thos. Foley, Belleville (on Ruttan Jury.)
Robert Two, Monteagle.
Elias Armitage, Deseronto.
Merritt Finkle, Hungerford.
Alexander Graham, Sidney.
Geo. Huffman, Sidney (on Ruttan Jury.)
John Eggleton, Thurlow.
James Hunter, Madoc.
A. H. Finkle, Hungerford.
J. J. W. Stringer, Mayo.
Robert Francis, Rawdon.

The Crown challenged 16, and the defence 11.

The indictment was read, being the same as that against Ruttan.

The Crown Prosecutor, in his address to the Jury, said that no one had played a more prominent part in the ballot-box conspiracy than Rielly. He went to Watertown to make arrangements for the manufacture of the boxes, and also drew plans of the boxes. The prosecution did not claim that the conspiracy was successful, but they did claim to have evidence to prove its existence. There were no other new points in the Crown Prosecutor's address.

Miss Lillian McRae was the first witness. She was the official stenographer at the investigation before Magistrate Wood, and identified Rielly as a man who gave evidence in that court.

The prosecution evidently intended to have the stenographer swear to Rielly's evidence at the investigation, and then submit the said evidence.

Mr. E. F. B Johnston objected to Rielly's former evidence being submitted The witness, he said, was under arrest when his former evidence was given, and it could not now be used against him. He quoted authorities.

FORMER EVIDENCE SUBMITTED.

The Judge said he would allow Miss McRae's evidence, subject to a later decision on Mr. Johnston's objections.

Mr. Johnston asked that witnesses be produced who would prove Rielly's arrest on a former occasion. This was agreed to, and Miss McRae's evidence went on.

She swore that the type-written copy of the evidence given by Rielly at the preliminary investigation was a true and correct one.

Cross-examined by Mr. Johnston, Miss McRae said she had taken the evidence of Phil Lott and Thomas E. Whalen. Neither W. J. Shibley or B. O. Lott were present at the investigation. Rielly, at the preliminary investigation, was without counsel. She was a capable stenographer, but would not swear positively that the evidence as typewritten was absolutely correct. She had not transcribed the notes herself; the typewriting was done by a Miss McCarthy. "So," said Mr. Johnston, "it was second-hand evidence."

The Judge asked if Miss McRae had taken every care in reading her notes to Miss McCarthy.

She said yes.

Miss Mary McCarthy corroborated the evidence of Miss McRae. She knew that great care was taken, but could not, or would not like to swear that the typewritten evidence was absolutely correct.

The Judge ordered that Miss McRae's original notes be compared with the typewritten copy of Rielly's evidence.

The Crown Prosecutor then read Rielly's evidence at the first investigation, subject, on Mr. Johnston's request, that testimony be afterwards admitted showing that he was under arrest when the testimony was given. Vivid memories of the time when the original evidence was given came to the minds of many in the court room. It was very different now—no excitement at all. The jury, however, seemed to follow the Crown Prosecutor very closely. Some people are wondering if Ruttan would have been acquitted had the prosecution read Rielly's evidence at his trial.

It was noticeable to-day that none of the lawyers felt called upon to wink and smile at the jury.

The Court adjourned at 1 o'clock till 2 p.m.

Afternoon Session.

When the court opened again at 2 p.m. the Crown Prosecutor continued the evidence of Rielly at the preliminary investigation. The Jury and everybody else paid deep attention when that part of Rielly's evidence was reached which told of the interview in his room between him, Phil Lott and Ruttan. Rielly's refusal to leave Canada when offered money to do so by W. J. Shibley and B. O. Lott made some people think a lot when they thought of his change of heart last week.

WATERS

The money counters in the United States treasury were startled one day says Theodore Waters in the November Everybody's, by the appearance of a remarkable looking fat man who entered the department and told a strange tale. He said he was an Ohio farmer and did not believe in banks, and so had buried his money in the ground for safe keeping. He had dug it up and was horrified to find that it was slowly turning to dust, as notes will when long buried.

Panic stricken, he gathered the disintegrated money into an old pillowcase, bound it around his waist beneath his clothes and started for Washington. He traveled part of the way on horseback, part of the way on an Ohio river steamboat and part of the way by train. During the journey he never once took off the pillowcase. He even slept with it on. The officials of the treasury department found it difficult to make him part with it.

He did not want to go with a clerk to a hotel for fear the clerk might rob him, but as it was manifestly impossible for him to disrobe in the office he had finally to submit. They got the money at last, and the condition of it was so bad that the treasury expert had to be called to decipher it. So great was her skill that the farmer lost only a few hundred dollars out of $19,000.

The Pound of Flesh Story.

Eleven different versions of the pound of flesh story exist in the early literature of Europe, none of which is founded on a historical basis, save one related by the biographer of Pope Sixtus V. The original tale runs as follows: Simon Cenada, a Jew, enters into a wager with Sechi, a Christian, staking a pound of his flesh against a large sum of money of the Christian. The Jew loses the wager, and Sechi insists on his forfeit. The case is referred to the governor of the city, who in turn places it before the pope, who condemns both to lifelong imprisonment, from which they are finally released on the payment of a heavy fine. An Italian, Giovanni Florentino, in the sixteenth century was the first to change the roles of the Jew and Christian, and in this altered form the Bard of Avon found the story. The poet himself could scarcely have known any Jews personally, since they were expelled from England 300 years before his time and were not readmitted until after his death. From stage presentations, from descriptions in books or from popular reports, which were always derogatory to the Jewish character, the poet derived his knowledge of the Jew.—Menorah.

ENGLISH VILLAGE ACTORS.

Home-Made Drama Wins Praise From Sir Henry Irving.

In the past the Kentish village of Hildenborough has been chiefly known for its manufacture of cricket balls. In the future its fame must rest upon its manufacture of actors.

Three gardeners, two blacksmiths, two apprentices, a cripple, a groom, a cycle-fitter, a powder-maker, and a maker of cricket balls played a drama recently in the Hildenborough Drill Hall. The scenery was home-made, the properties were home-made, and "The Luck of the Brians" was home-made too.

It was a drama written specially by Messrs. John Johnson and Dagney Major, two local gentlemen, for when rural workmen become actors they must have parts written for them, just as actor-managers do. They must all have workingmen parts to play and no petticoats to wear.

The overture was composed by the village organist, who also conducted the orchestra. The schoolmaster and the postmaster acted as business managers, a local gentleman painted the scenery, a cricket ball maker acted as prompter, the two plumbers of Hildenborough acted as stage carpenters, and the church choir acted as an unseen chorus in the first act. Hildenborough, with its population of 1,409 souls, is, indeed, a self-contained empire.

As for the 1,300 odd people of Hildenborough who are not actors or managers or program-sellers, they have resolved themselves into an army of critics, who discuss whether it is the groom or the powder-maker whose looks most resemble those of Sir Henry Irving.

"The Luck of the Brians" is a story of the Californian gold rush in 1850. Its moral is "God helps those who help themselves," which is assuredly the motto which Hildenborough has adopted as its own.

Sir Henry Irving sent the following telegram from Southampton:

"My heartiest congratulations; all success to play and warmest greetings to players. The movement is a splendid one, and will, I trust, be widely followed. It would make for much pleasure and happiness, and widen the world for many minds with the seeds of wholesome fancy and yield abundant harvest."

The Only Thing Left.

A grandfather well known in the English House of Commons was chatting amicably with his little granddaughter, who was snugly ensconsed on his knee.

"What makes your hair so white, Grandpa?" the little miss queried.

"I am very old, my dear. I was in the ark," replied His Lordship, with a painful disregard of the truth.

"Oh, are you Noah?"

"No."

"Are you Shem, then?"

"No, I am not Shem."

"Are you Ham?"

"No."

"Then," said the little one, who was fast nearing the limit of her Biblical knowledge, "you must be Japheth."

A negative reply was given to this query also, for the old gentleman inwardly wondered what the outcome would be.

"But, Grandpa, if you are not Noah or Shem or Ham or Japheth you must be a beast."—Short Stories.

Musical Steam Trawler.

When the Grimsby steam trawler Syrian put into Filey Bay, England, recently, for shelter from a gale, she played "Auld Lang Syne" by means of an organ pipe arrangement on her syren. The tune, most admirably played, made scores of people run to the foreshore and cliffs to see whence the music came.

After a short pause, the syren broke forth into "A Life on the Ocean Wave." Meanwhile the vessel pitched about in the rough waves, thundering seas dashing over the reef. "The Bay of Biscay" was next rendered, and then "The Death of Nelson."

Later in the afternoon the steamer obliged with "The Blue Bells of Scotland and "Rule Britannia," and at half-past three, before she put to sea again, the wind having moderated, the novel concert was closed with the National Anthem. As the vessel was steaming out to sea the strains of "God Be With You Till We Meet Again" were carried to the shore by the wind.

FOREMAN FATALLY STABBED.

Warsaw Workmen Carrying Out Their Threats of Revenge.

Warsaw, March 20.—Now that most of the strikes are ended, the workmen are beginning to carry out the threat of revenge on such of their fellows as refused to quit work with them. On Saturday a foreman who had refused to join the strikers was fatally stabbed, and yesterday a workman who had refused to walk out was shot and severely wounded. The authorities fear that these incidents are only the beginning of a series of such outrages. The working classes are greatly excited in anticipation of orders for mobilization. The men are determined to offer violent opposition. Scarcely a day passes without the appearance of seditious literature.

School Strike Acute.

The school strike at Warsaw is reaching an acute stage. The authorities issued a final order that boys not returning to school before Wednesday will be expelled, regardless of their number. The Polish educational committee, which recently went to St. Petersburg, is angered at the Government's non-conciliatory attitude, and met here yesterday and resolved to support the boys in striking.

Peasant Disorders Grow.

St. Petersburg, March 20.—The peasant disorders are growing rapidly in the black soil belt and other districts of Southern Russia. Result of the Court Martial Held on Russian Officers.

St. Petersburg, March 20.—The verdict of the court martial which tried the officers and men of the several batteries of artillery from one of which a shell was fired during the blessing of the waters of the Neva on Jan. 19, scattering missiles in the vicinity of the Imperial pavilion, was announced Saturday. Capt. Davidoff and Sub-Lieut. Kurzeff, of the 17th Battery, First Regiment Horse Artillery of the Guard, were found guilty of neglect of duty and sentenced to be dismissed from the army and to imprisonment in a fortress, Davidoff to a year and a half and Kurzeff to a year and five months. Sub-Lieut. Roth, Jr., was sentenced to imprisonment for a year and four months. Lieut. Roth, Sr., to detention in quarters for three months, and two gunners to detention with disciplinary battalions for two years. Lieut.-Col. Polvzeff and Gunner Patrikeff were acquitted. The court found there was no connection on the part of any of those on trial with a plot to assassinate the Emperor.

Father Lawler Dead.

Father Edmund Burke Lawler, one of the pioneer Roman Catholic missionaries in Ontario, and one of the best known and best loved clergymen in the province, died yesterday in his 80th year. Father Lawlor was born of good old Irish family in Boston in 1818. Although American born, Father Lawler was British at heart. His lifelong wish that he be buried under the British flag will be honored. DOMINION DAY IN THE WEST.

Invitations Extended to Sir Wilfrid and Earl Grey.

Ottawa, March 20.—Walter Scott, M. P., on behalf of Mayor Laird, of Regina, has presented a preliminary invitation to Sir Wilfrid Laurier, suggesting the presence of His Excellency and the Prime Minister at Regina on July 1 next, as the civic authorities have in contemplation a fitting celebration of next Dominion Day, which will be the birthday of the new provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan.

In order to make the celebration worthy of such an historic occasion, it is proposed the Lieut.-Governors of the two new provinces should be sworn in on that day at Regina in the presence of the Vice-Royalty.

The Prime Minister is not yet able to make definite acceptance of the invitation, but Mr. Scott and Mayor Laird trust to obtain the consent of both His Excellency and Sir Wilfrid to attend the ceremonies.

Engine Drops Into River.

Buffalo, March 20—An engine and one car, part of a train of fifteen cars of dressed beef, plunged into the Niagara river about 7.30 o'clock Friday night close to the Canadian end of the International bridge. The train was on the Michigan Central tracks and was a Michigan Central train. Engineer Delaney stuck to his post to the last, thinking to check the speed of his engine, but when he saw he could not he yelled to his fireman to jump, and then jumped himself. The engine and one car jumped the snubbing block at the foot of the decline and plunged into the river.

SHOT COMRADE DEAD

Sad End to Three Hamilton Boys' Saturday Outing.

James Potter Held on Charge of Manslaughter for Killing Raphael Bezanson—Boys Found Sport on Bay Poor and Started in to Play War—Authorities Believe Potter's Claim of Pure Accident.

Hamilton, March 20.—Raphael Bezanson, 25 North Macnab street, was shot dead by James Potter, 13 Crooks street, Saturday afternoon. Bezanson was 19 years of age, and Potter 15 years.

They, with another lad named Arthur Langton, 84 North Carolina street, rented small rifles from a shooting gallery on North James street Saturday afternoon and went to the bay hunting. Sport was not very good and on the way home near the cemetery chapel they began to play war. Potter aimed up in the air and pulled the trigger of his rifle twice without results.

Bullet Entered Boy's Forehead.

He thought it could not be loaded and pointed at Bezanson and pulled the trigger for the third time. This time it did go off and a bullet entered the centre of Bezanson's forehead He fell to the ground unconscious.

Dr. Anderson and the ambulance were called, and the wounded boy was hustled off. At the corner of Catharine and Barton streets on the way to the City Hospital he died.

Coroner McNichol was notified and opened an inquest at 9.30 Saturday night. Potter was placed under arrest after he had been questioned by the police. He was taken to the jail, where he is being held on a charge of manslaughter.

The authorities believe that it was, as Potter claims, a pure accident, but they will hold him until after the inquest.

FALLS FROM FAST FREIGHT.

Edward Bedlow Loses an Arm and Then His Life.

Brockville, March 20.—In a mangled condition, the body of Edward Bedlow, a Brockville boy, aged about 20 years, was brought here yesterday afternoon on the 2.15 express from Prescott.

In company with a number of other boys he left here at noon for Morrisburg stealing a ride on a fast freight train. His body was picked up just outside Prescott alongside the track.

The supposition is that in attempting to jump off his clothing became entangled and he was drawn under the wheels which passed over his right arm, severing it at the socket.

The body showed marks of having been dragged. Bedlow lived three-quarters of an hour after being removed to the hospital. The Coroner opened an inquest, which was adjourned until Tuesday night.

Killed at St. Thomas.

St. Thomas, March 20—Fred Salisbury, about 24 years of age, belonging to Waterford, Ont., was found dead in the east end of the Michigan Central yards early yesterday morning. Where is Gen. Linevitch?

Report Suggests Probably Further North Than Supposed.

London Puzzles Over the Question Where the Newly-Arrived Troops Came From—Retreat from Tie Pass Wends Weary Way—Gen. Kuropatkin Offered to Stay Under His Own Subordinate.

London, March 21.—Gen. Linevitch's report to the Emperor, that he had inspected newly-arrived troops, causes considerable speculation in London, indicating that the commander-in-chief of the Russian army in Manchuria either has gone much farther north than had been supposed or that Russian reinforcements are still being sent south from Harbin. The latter hypothesis is considered hardly likely in view of the fact that the Russians are trying to effect the speediest possible retirement to Harbin.

Kuro Offered to Stay.

Gunshu Pass, March 21.—The last two days have been utterly without incident, except for the removal of the censor to Kudzu Pass. The Russian rearguard is retreating slowly and engaging in occasional skirmishes. It has now reached a position twenty-seven miles north of Tie Pass. The Japanese are slowly advancing, without pressing the Russians.

The Russians are destroying bridges, the railways, roadbeds and highways and carrying off stores and demolishing buildings and everything not portable. Reports of a wide turning movement by the Japanese are no longer being received.

The troops parted in sadness with Gen. Kuropatkin, whose labors in shaping the army are recognized, and who was ever attentive to the wants of the soldiers. Regardless of the fact that he had been commander-in-chief, Gen. Kuropatkin offered to remain here as a subordinate to Gen. Linevitch, and as commander of a corps.

On the Weary Way.

St. Petersburg, March 21.—The latest despatches from Manchuria indicate that the retreat of the Russian army is being conducted uneventfully. The last few days were unmarked by fighting of a serious nature. The Russians, however, are neglecting no precautions to impede pursuit, and hamper the construction of permanent Japanese lines of supply.

Russ Admits 120,000 Lost.

St. Petersburg, March 21.—Complete details of the losses at the battle of Mukden are not yet available at the war office, but the reports thus far received indicate that 120,000 men were killed, wounded or made prisoners and that about eighty field guns were captured. Almost every siege gun, it is affirmed, was removed.

No Further Fights.

St. Petersburg, March 21.—A despatch from Gen. Linevitch, dated March 19, 9 p. m., says:

"The commander of the second army reports that he has had no further fighting. No reports have been received from the first or third armies. I have inspected the troops which have arrived from Russia. They are in excellent spirits and good health."

Kuropatkin Goes Home.

St. Petersburg, March 21.—The story that Gen. Kuropatkin remained at the front in command of Gen. Linevitch's old first army is untrue. He is proceeding to Citau, where he may stop a short time to recuperate before returning to St. Petersburg. His nerves are said to be badly shattered. It is again being positively affirmed that Kuropatkin requested the Emperor to relieve him.

Fighting Heard Of.

St. Petersburg, March 21.—A despatch from Gunshu Pass, dated yesterday, says that since yesterday morning artillery fire has been going on about seven miles south of Tie Pass.

Strike on Railway.

Chita, Eastern Siberia, March 21.—Though the railroad men's strike on the section of the Siberian line east of Lake Baikal has ceased the telegraph operators have now stopped work, demanding an increase of wages. Policemen and other state employes are being engaged to replace the strikers.

LAD SHOOTS GOVERNOR.

When Captured Said Police Knew His Name, His Motive and the Governor's Record.

Viborg, European Russia, March 21.—Gov. Miasorodoff was shot and seriously wounded yesterday by a lad. The assassin, who is about 15 years old, obtained an entrance to the governor's office and fire three times at him, one bullet inflicting a serious wound and the others slightly wounding the governor's legs. The governor's clerks and secretary were unable to stop the would-be assassin, who reached the street where, however, he was arrested without a struggle. The governor's condition is critical.

The youth who shot the governor has been identified as Matti Hjalmar Reinikke, who admits that he is a revolutionist. Gov. Miasorodoff has been most energetic in the Russification of Finland.

Reinikke, who had lost one of his arms recently in a railway accident, when asked if his name was Reinikke, replied, "The police of Helsingfors know me, my motive and the governor's record."

Jews Kill Police Chief.

Boriso, European Russia, March 21.—Three squadrons of dragoons have started for Berezina, where armed Jews are reported to have killed the chief of police and a number of his assistants.

Vesuvius Emits Fire.

Naples, March 21.—There were frequent explosions of Vesuvius Saturday night, accompanied by ejections of incandescent matter visible from Naples. They were produced by the sinking of the bottom of the crater formed by the last eruption.

HER MOTHER CALLED HER.

Ethel Bell, Formerly of Hamilton, Takes Carbolic Acid.

Windsor, March 21.—Lonely and brooding over the death of her mother, which occurred at the family home in Hamilton nearly two years ago, Ethel Bell, aged 15 years, a pretty brunette, attempted suicide at the home of her sister, Mrs. Merchant, 419 McClellan avenue, Detroit, Sunday night by swallowing carbolic acid.

Prompt medical attention may save her life, although her mouth and stomach are burned.

"I dreamed I saw my mother," said the girl, "and then I was so lonely and unhappy I wanted to go to her. She stood with her arms outstretched calling me just as she used to do, and I tried to put my arms around her neck and then I knew it was only a horrid dream and swallowed the poison."

Last night the nurses at St. Mary's Hospital says Miss Bell is very low, and her death may come at any moment. In her delirium, the girl calls pathetically for her mother, and assures her that she will soon be with her.

KILLED BY HIS FATHER.

Coroner's Jury's Verdict on the Death of William Phelan.

Montreal, March 21.—"We the members of the jury, after having heard the evidence, declare that William Phelan died in Montreal on Saturday morning, March 18th, from a fracture of the skull, caused by blows administered by the father of the deceased."

The above is the verdict which was given by the jury at the inquest held yesterday morning over the body of William Phelan, 17 years of age, who died shortly before noon on Saturday, of injuries inflicted by his father, while lying asleep in bed at his home, 62 Dorion street.

Coroner McMaston, before the commencement of the inquest, instructed the jury to render a verdict according to the facts disclosed by the evidence. It might appear certain that the elder Phelan was insane at the time of the tragedy.

Peace With Mad Mullah.

Rome, March 21.—In concluding peace with Great Britain, through the mediation of Italy, the Mad Mullah has obtained permission definitely to occupy Illig, a village on Italian territory 160 miles from Obbia, which was the base oaf operations in the last campaign led by Gen. Manning. Coast rights are granted the Mullah, qualified by ap rohibition of trade in arms and slaves.

Blake Makes Speech.

London, March 21.—(C. A. P.)—Edward Blake made his first considerable speech of the session in proposing to reduce the civil service estimates by several hundred pounds, on the ground that the report of the land commissioners, relating to the administration of the Irish Land Act, had not been made public. The Government, however, obtained a majority of 74.

UNDESIRABLE EMIGRANTS.

On every side is heard the news that this year will see a marvellous increase in the number of immigrants to this country. The matter is one which demands attention. There is a growing desire in Canada for a closer discrimination regarding the class of immigrants coming to our shores. The authorities of the United States have recently drawn the lines strictly as between the fit and the unfit, one of the immediate results of which is that this country is being overrun with the offscourings of Europe which cannot gain admittance to the once boasted "land of the free." The extent of these inroads is marked by outbreaks of crime in different parts of the country in which the new comers find ready employment. Stabbing affrays have occurred at Winnipeg, Port Arthur, St. Catharines and Niagara Falls, among Greeks, Itaalians and Gallicians, who murder one another with lightness of heart. These aliens have to be taught a stern lesson as to their duties and responsibilities as citizens of Canada. The price of their welcome to this country is simply that they shall be not only industrious, but law-abiding. They must learn that life here is not to be held so cheaply as in the countries where they hail from, and that they cannot too quickly assimilate their conduct to the standards that prevail among our Anglo-Saxon people. We want no such problem here as Great Britain has had flung upon her in the name of her famous "hospitality," and which the United States finds itself compelled to wrestle with on a stupendous scale. In England, writes Walter Frewen Lord, in a recent article on this subject, "the alien immigrant is a nuisance in every walk of life. In the academic world, he shoulders his way, brays down the more courteous, homebred literate, and proclaims aloud his right to be kept at the expense of our own sons. From dim academic circles up to the strenuous and glaring life of the streets he is all-pervading, always the same, invariably a nuisance. To those whose food tomorrow depends upon their labor today he is more than a nuisance; he is a danger, a cause of hunger an degradation." Tha pity is in England no solution is promised in way of legislative acts. The Liberals cling to the idea of an open hospitality to every nation and tongue, to the massacre of the home population, and the Tory party hesitates to move for the exclusion of the "nuisance." We in Canada are not hampered by traditional prejudices regarding the sacredness of asylum for the offscourings of the earth. We want more inhabitants to do the work that it to be done, but with the flood of aliens now driving headlong toward our doors we can be more particular than ever before as to the class suitable for admission. The degenerate are not wanted on any terms. The diseased should be turned back with the same severity as that exercised in the United States for the public welfare. Those who abuse their privilege of citizenship by shooting, stabbing and murdering in the lawless fashion of their native lands should be shown no mercy, but made a complete example of to their fellows.

Rielly, the alleged bogus ballot box conspirator, has returned. Apparently his bail was good. According to the Belleville Intelligencer a curious incident occurred before Rielly's disappearance. When a true bill was found against him the Crown Attorney says he notified the Sheriff to have Rielly locked up, but the Sheriff neglected to do so as it turns out. On the afternoon before Rielly left so suddenly the Crown Attorney was approached with a view to having the bail, which was in the shape of a cash deposit, returned to the bondsmen on the ground that a true bill had been found and Rielly was in the hands of the court. Luckily the Crown Prosecutor declined to cash up. Otherwise the chances are Rielly would be still away.

SURPLUS.—After making provision for all liabilities the surplus on our own standard is $772,072.87, being an increase of $170,920.20 over 1903, and this after distributing amongst Policyholders $83,183.40. On the Government standard of reserves, namely, 4½ per cent. for business to January 1st, 1900, and 3½ per cent. thereafter, our Surplus is $1,049,400.71. The earnings for the year were $254,103.60.

CITY COUNCIL IN REGULAR SESSION.

NET FISHING PETITION MAY BE RESCINDED — COUNCIL WILL HOLD SPECIAL MEETING IN REGARD TO THE MATTER — DOG BY-LAW CAUSED MUCH WASTE OF WIND, AND WAS AGAIN LAID OVER — ADJOURNMENT NOT REACHED TILL THE WITCHING HOUR.

A regular meeting of the City Council was held last evening, and the session was of greater length than breadth. The Dog By-law, introduced by Ald. Knox, was responsible for much time being taken up, as there were 23 clauses in the By-law and some of the clauses caused considerable discussion. The by-law was finally laid over for further consideration.

The only absentee was Ald. Paterson who is ill.

The following communications were read:

From Wm. Curtis, asking that the walk on the south side of Mill street, near his residence, be repaired.—Referred to Public Works Committee.

From Mr. Wm. Mallock, asking that his salary and also that of Mr. R. McCrudden, jr., as engineers at the pump-house, be increased.—Referred to Water Works Committee.

REPORTS.

Reports from the various committees, as already published, were read.

On motion the Council went into Committee of the Whole, on reports, Ald. Vermilyea in the chair.

The various items of expenditures were passed without discussion.

The Fire Committee recommended that eight call-bells be installed in the homes of firemen who were without call-bells.

The recommendation was unanimously adopted.

The Market Committee recommended that tenders be asked for the Market tolls for the year commencing on April of this year, and extending until April of next year, and that the advertisement be published in both city papers.—Carried.

A recommendation was presented from the Executive Committee that in the matter of Phillips vs. the City, the City take the right of a new trial here instead of appealing to the Supreme Court, and the City Treasurer be authorized to pay the necessary expenses.

The recommendation prevailed.

AS TO NET FISHING.

At this stage of the proceedings a deputation consisting of Mr. J. K. McCargar and Mr. Wm. Black were invited to address the Council.

Mr. McCargar said he came to the Council on behalf of the fishermen of the city. The Council had passed a resolution in favor of prohibiting net fishing for the next five years, and this the fishermen considered would be a hardship if the Government carried it out.

He said it would be a bad thing to stop net fishing altogether, or for five years, as the coarse fish would destroy the spawn of the game fish. He was opposed to fishing with nets in the spring. He had never seen many bass in a hoop net, as they are liable to get out. What the fishermen want is the privilege of net fishing in the fall, especially for whitefish, and there were thousands of them in the bay here. The fishermen have made a reasonable offer, namely, to give up summer net fishing and have net fishing for whitefish and herring in the fall.

Ald. Knox — "Why cannot we catch bass in the bay to-day as we used to a few years ago?"

Mr. McCargar — "The bay is so full of shad that the bass feed upon them and will not take an ordinary bait from a hook." He would ask the Council to rescind the motion which they had passed at a previous meeting.

Mr. Black said that he did not understand why bass were scarce, as he did not buy them, neither was he aware that any were being caught in great quantities. He would be in favor of prohibiting summer fishing with nets, and allow nets to be used in the fall.

Ald. Sinclair said that it does seem that the Council were a little hasty in passing the motions, after hearing the gentlemen who had spoken tonight. The fishermen may have a grievance. He (the speaker) would be in favor of hearing this matter presented by both sides. He moved that the matter be reopened, and the Clerk be authorized to write Mr. Morrison, M.P.P., to withhold the resolution which had been passed by the Council and forwarded to him.

Ald. Panter agreed with Ald. Sinclair and would be in favor of having the matter reconsidered and both sides presented.

After some informal discussion it was decided that the Council would meet on Monday evening next to discuss this matter.

The following accounts were passed:—

J. D. Clarke	$ 50
T. Thomson	50
J. C. Lake	1.50
C. B. Foster	6.00
J. W. London	4.54

ACCIDENT INSURANCE.

Two tenders were opened in reference to city insurance against liability in cases of accidents. The Ontario Accident Company's tender was for $1,100 and the Ocean Accident Company's for $1,200.

Ald. Marsh suggested that this matter be referred to the Insurance Committee with power to act.

Ald. Panter said he would be willing to pay $1,000, but if it would cost $1,200 he would favor the city carrying the risk.

Ald. Sinclair thought that this matter should be settled at once and settled to-night, in so far as to the desirability of accepting an insurance policy. He moved that the Council instruct the Insurance Committee to effect an insurance with a company if it can be secured for $1,000.

The motion prevailed.

ENQUIRIES.

Ald. Sinclair asked if there was a City by-law in reference to the killing of robins.

The Clerk — "No. There is no such by-law."

Ald. Panter — "Has any news been received as to the change of the drill shed site?"

The Mayor — "No, not that I am aware of."

INTRODUCTION OF BY-LAWS.

Ald. Panter introduced three by-laws, one to appoint an assessor, and the other in relation to tax rolls, and Ald. Knox introduced the Dog by-law.

The by-law to appoint an assessor was read a first time and the blank was filled in with the name of Mr. W. F. Reeves, at a salary of $750 per annum.

The Dog by-law was next taken up and considered for about two hours. It was finally decided to lay it over for another two weeks to consider certain clauses in reference to the pay of the Inspector and the charges to be made upon impounded canines.

Some of the provisions of the by-law as adopted are as follows:

That all dogs must wear a collar or fastener about the neck, with a tag thereon.

That the tax shall be $1 and $2.

That the tax shall be payable on the 1st day of April of each year.

That no dog shall be allowed to run at large without its owner on Front street from the upper bridge to Dundas street, and to include both sides of Pinnacle street.

That dogs running at large in the district specified shall be impounded by the Inspector or Police officers.

That the Inspector is to provide a pound, and that if a dog is impounded, before it is disposed of or killed, the owner must be notified, if it can be found out who owns the canine.

That all dogs attacking or worrying any person or persons shall be delivered up to the Inspector and destroyed within 24 hours.

At this stage of the proceedings a motion prevailed to lay the matter over for further consideration, and the Committee rose and reported.

Moved by Ald. Sinclair, seconded by Ald. Panter, That the Clerk be instructed to write Mr. Morrison, M.P.P., asking him to withhold the resolution passed by this Council re net fishing in the Bay of Quinte, and that the members of the Forest and Stream Club be communicated with, intimating that this Council desires to reconsider the said resolution.—Carried.

Moved by Ald. Sinclair, seconded by Ald. Vermilyea, That the Mayor and Ald. Panter, Gordon and Marsh, be a committee to consider the auditors' report, as presented to the Council, and report at next meeting. — Carried.

Council adjourned at midnight.

The road to failure is the one that is full of ruts.

Weak Kidneys.

To any kidney sufferer who has not tried my remedy, I offer a full dollar's worth free. Not a mere sample—but a regular dollar bottle—standard size and staple.

There is nothing to pay, either now or later. I ask no deposit—no promise. You take no risk. The dollar bottle is free—because mine is no ordinary remedy, and I feel so sure of its results that I can afford to make this offer.

In the first place, my remedy does not treat the kidneys themselves. Such treatment is wrong. For the kidneys are not to blame for their weaknesses or irregularities. They have no power—no self-control. They are operated and actuated by a tiny shred of a nerve which alone is responsible for their condition. If the kidney nerve is strong and healthy the kidneys are strong and healthy. If the kidney nerve goes wrong you know it by the inevitable result—kidney trouble.

This tender nerve is only one of a great system of nerves; this system controls not only the kidneys, but the heart and the liver and the stomach. For simplicity's sake I have called this great nerve system the "Inside Nerves." They are not the nerves of feeling—not the nerves that enable you to walk, to talk, to act, to think. They are the master nerves and every vital organ is their slave. The common name for these nerves is the "sympathetic nerves"—because each set is in such close sympathy with the others, that weakness anywhere results in weakness everywhere.

This is why I treat not the kidney that is weak, but the ailing nerve that MAKES it weak. This is the secret of my success. This is why I can afford to do this unusual thing—to give away FREE the first dollar bottle, that ANY STRANGER may know how my remedy succeeds.

The offer is open to every one, everywhere, who has not tried my remedy. Those who have tried it do not need the evidence. So you must write ME for the free dollar bottle order. I will then send you an order on your druggist for a full dollar bottle, standard size and staple. He will pass it down to you from his stock as freely as though your dollar lay before him and will send the bill to me. Write for the order to-day.

For a free order for a full dollar bottle you must address Dr. Shoop, Box 69 Racine, Wis. State which book you want.

GILEAD.

The Ladies' Aid Society of Gilead Church gave Mrs. Wm. Huffman, an aged resident of the fifth concession of Thurlow, a very pleasant surprise in honor of the anniversary of her ninetieth birthday by holding their usual monthly meeting at her home on Monday, March 13. Though she has reached her four score and ten years, she is exceedingly active. The proceedings of the afternoon took the form of a business meeting of the society, and was opened by the singing of the good old hymn, "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," after which Mrs. Huffman led in prayer, which was followed by the reading of the minutes and the discussion of a passage of Scripture. After an enjoyable luncheon was served by the members of the society, the meeting was closed by singing "We'll All Gather Home in the Morning."

Champion Liniment for Rheumatism.

Chas. Drake, a mail carrier at Chapinville, Conn., says: "Chamberlain's Pain Balm is the champion of all liniments. The past year I was troubled a great deal with rheumatism in my shoulder. After trying several cures the storekeeper here recommended this remedy and it completely cured me." There is no use of anyone suffering from that painful ailment when this liniment can be obtained for a small sum. One application gives prompt relief and its continued use for a short time will produce a permanent cure. For sale by all druggists.

WALLBRIDGE.

The many friends of Mr. Frank Miller, formerly of this place, deeply sympathize with him in the loss of his estimable young wife, who died suddenly of la grippe, at their home in Montreal, last week. Miss Miller, who with her sister, Mrs. Gowsell, went to Montreal to attend the funeral of the late Mrs. Miller, has returned home.

Mrs. S. E. Lane very pleasantly entertained her Sunday school class, with their schoolmates on Friday evening.

We regret the departure from this vicinity of Mr. and Mrs. H.B.Chisholm, who have moved to their future home, near Foxboro.

BROKEN SLEEP — TIRED NEXT MORNING.

Sleep not only rests, but builds up the body. Cut down the hours of sleep, and you cut down health in the same proportion. Rebuilding then ceases, nerves go to smash, you grow tired, weak and wretched. To restore sleep you must get more bodily strength, more nutritious blood, healthier nerves. Ferrozone solves the whole problem, makes you sleep soundly, gives endurance, vim, ambition. No more morning weakness—instead, the fire of youth will run in your veins, supplying abundance of energy and vigor. Witchery expresses the instant effect of Ferrozone; try it.

The fool never puts off until to-morrow what he shouldn't do all all.

Defence for Rielly.

it was for them to say whether they would cut the thread that held the sword. Had Shibley been a man he would have stayed and faced his punishment, and not have tried to make a victim of the young man who trusted him. The eminent lawyer made a great oration, a more fervent appeal and adroit marshalling of arguments could hardly be imagined. It evidently made a deep impression on the jury and every one else in the court room. The obtaining of a statement from Rielly while he was in hospital was pronounced a cruel act by Mr. Johnston. What weight would they give to a statement got under such circumstances? The evidence of Dr. Williamson showed that Rielly was suffering from nervous exhaustion. We all know that when a man loses his nerve he is no longer a man. Mr. Johnston said it was evident the Crown was afraid to put Detective Chamberlain in the witness box, and have him tell what had been said by him to Rielly when the latter was arrested in the hospital at Kingston. Why did the Crown not put Detective Chamberlain in the box and let him tell what he said to Rielly? Because they were afraid to. The statement was in Col. Sherwood's handwriting? Why? Why did Rielly not write the statement himself? He could write. The reason was that Rielly was too ill to write. Rielly was told by Col. Sherwood that the statement was for Mr. Shepley, counsel for the Dominion Government. Then the statement was used against Rielly. Was that British justice? At the preliminary investigation Rielly had not been represented by counsel. That was not fair play. Why had Carscallen not appeared against Rielly? The Crown brought a boy here, who never saw the boxes shipped; why did they not bring Carscallen?

"Let us look at another thing," said Mr. Johnston. The Jury looked as though they would like to look at their dinners. It was 20 minutes to 2, and Mr. Johnston was still "going strong." He was only just coming back from Watertown with Rielly; figuratively, of course. Coming back to Phil Lott, the lawyer called him the betrayer of his brother; a "Judas" was one of the pet names called Phil. "He," Mr. Johnston said, "stuck the dagger in the back of his brother. Would they, on the evidence of such a character, convict a man in this county?" In conclusion the eloquent lawyer made a touching appeal to the Jury to acquit his client and send him home to be the solace of his poor old widowed mother, to comfort her in her old age and in her dying hours; then would she pray for them to the day of her death.

The prisoner was visibly affected. Mr. Johnston had spoken for two hours and twenty minutes.

Court adjourned at 2.05 for an hour.

STRAIGHT TIP TO LAURIER.

Toronto, March 21. — A protest against the Separate school clause of the Northwest Autonomy Bill was entered at Massey Hall last night. The meeting was representative of the citizens if not thoroughly representative of the feeling in Toronto against the objectionable clauses in this measure. The committee had purposely kept from the platform all Orangemen and persons who might be suspected of speaking from a partisan point of view, and, as a result, the gathering was strictly in keeping with the wishes of the committee, and the question was discussed in terms free from anything that might be termed bitter or offensive.

ROCKEFELLER AND MORGAN AFTER G. T. P. RAILWAY.

New York, March 20. — (Special). It is stated here on the best authority that the Rockefeller-Morgan combination has secured a very considerable interest in the Grand Trunk system of Canada. This state of affairs was brought about, so it is said, by these American magnates in order to as good as possess themselves of an even greater control of the Grand Trunk Pacific.

A Timely Remembrance.

Miss Ida Earle, for some time an employee of McIntosh Bros., in this city, has been moved to Napanee, where she will have charge of the firm's branch store. The employees of the local store, with whom Miss Earle was very popular, yesterday presented her with a handsome clock, as a mark of esteem and regret at parting with her. Miss Earle was much gratified at the unexpected expression of good will, and voiced her thanks in fitting terms. She left for Napanee yesterday.

SELL YOUR COLD FOR $1?

You surely won't stop at a dollar bill to cure that horrid, sniffeling cold? Go to any druggist and get "Catarrhozone" and your cold will be a thing of the past. There is almost witchery in the swift way Catarrhozone kills colds. But when you consider the penetrating, healing and antiseptic qualities of Catarrhozone perhaps it's not so wonderful. Certainly there is no remedy half so prompt for colds and catarrh as Catarrhozone. Refuse a substitute and insist on having only "Catarrhozone."

DEATHS

SELI. — In Belleville, on March 21, 1905, John H. Seli, aged 28 years. The funeral will take place at 2.30 a.m., on Thursday to the G.T.R. station. Services will be held at the family residence, Pinnacle street, on Wednesday evening at 9 o'clock.

Millinery Opening At Ritchie's

The culminating point of many weeks of thought and effort and thousands of miles of travel by land and sea, was reached to-day in the display of the spring and summer materials in the various departments of this large store. Mr. Ritchie personally visited Paris, Berlin, London, New York, and other large centres of fashion. The other buyers have been in close touch with the various sources of supply on this continent, and as a consequence the store is filled from roof to basement with new goods from all parts of the world.

The splendour of summer certainly hovered over the millinery department, with its profusion of flowers and filmy materials, which to-day attracted and delighted so many of Belleville's fair sex. Miss Green, who has charge of this department comes to Belleville with the reputation of being one of the brightest milliners in Canada, and we think that reputation was well sustained to-day in the tasteful display of ladies', misses' and children's headwear.

There were all varieties of feminine headgear, from the ready-to-wear to the high priced importations from Paris, London and New York. Mushroom shaped hats of the "Charlotte Corday" order seem very popular, and a pretty New York shape is named "Fifth Avenue," which turns up high at the back, and has a very flat top and is banked underneath with flowers. Polo Turbans, Toques, Napoleons and Poke shapes are attracting much attention. Many of the hats are smaller than formerly, but there will still be worn a goodly number of large shapes of the picture order. Colored hats are to be supreme. The hat may match the suit or contrast with it, and to conform to this idea, the black hat and the white hat must be trimmed with colored ribbons and flowers.

It will be a flower season, roses being especially used in abundance, and while they come in all the delicate pastel shadings not natural in color, they are so beautiful that they excite admiration. Violets, forget-me-nots, lily of the valley and other small flowers are all freely used, and there are quantities of foliage. There is a profusion of ribbons, the most favored being the wide, brilliant taffetas and duchess in thin qualities and light colors. Almost every hat has a touch of ribbon of some kind. Malines, chiffons, laces and fancy straws all enter into the making up of hats, and some pretty ornaments are seen, mostly fine cut steel and jet. Some of the new ostrich feathers and aigrettes are in ombra effects, and indeed this shaded coloring is quite a feature of the season in the various materials. There is great latitude in colors. Greens in the myrtle and lizard tones, violet from light to dark violine or plum, blues in hydrangia and darker tints, browns and red shades from the dull terra cotta to the brighter tints are all fashionable.

There were very pretty styles in children's hats, including the new Poke bonnet, a very large assortment of ready-to-wears, which are really daintier than usual this season, and a collection of black hats suitable for mourning. This firm make a specialty of carrying a large stock of trimmings of all kinds to sell over the counter to those desiring to do their own trimming.

Silks for shirt waist suits, blouses and whole dresses will be fashionable this season. We noticed some very pretty tartan taffetas in waist lengths which are quite the correct thing. The firm has bought largely in silks, and expects to be able to supply the brisk demand. There are stacks of new dress goods, laces, ribbons, linens, hosiery, trimmings, and a particularly choice collection of washing materials.

The large south store devoted exclusively to men's and boys' clothing and furnishings, is stocked with all the new patterns from the best makers at home and abroad. We are informed that there is a steadily growing demand for a better class of ready-to-wear clothing, and this house is showing a greater variety than ever of high class garments.

In the Mantle section there is a very large assortment of Blouses, Shirt Waist Suits, Wrappers, Knitted Underwear, Whitewear, Corsets, Cloth Costumes, etc. The firm were much disappointed that most of their Imported Jackets had not arrived in time for the opening. They, however, will arrive in a few days, when they will show the latest styles for ladies, misses and little children.

The store will be open to-night from 8 to 9.30 and an orchestra will play some pleasing selections. The store, with all its beautiful goods, is well worth a visit.

MRS. EUSTACE.

The millinery parlors of Mrs. Eustace on Front street, were to-day besieged with ladies. All the latest designs are shown. Mrs. Eustace also made an excellent display in whitewear which was admired by all who saw.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

A CROWDED HOUSE WELCOMES THEIR INITIAL PERFORMANCE.

"Standing Room Only"—this sign is one that the average theatrical manager likes to refer to—in the Lenten season it is an unknown quantity, however, last night the Carman opera house was well filled with an enthusiastic audience that assembled to greet H. W. Young's Big Bijou Comedy Company's first appearance in the clever rural comedy drama "Vermont State Folks," introducing Mr. Young as Uncle Si Hedges a character a good deal on the order of common sense. Brackett, Miss Adams Ruth afterwards Lucille gave a fine rendition of a trying character—her gowns were a revelation of the dressmakers' art.

A number of new and interesting specialties were introduced between the acts and a clever and interesting performance was the result. The company present a new piece each night during the week.

PROGRESS OF THE CAMPAGIN.

The advisers of the Czar at the war council held yesterday decided to continue the war and proceed with the mobilization of the troops. This, however, does not prevent the belief that Russia really wants peace, and the opinion is expressed by The London Times' correspondent at St. Petersburg that the decision to go on with the war is really preparatory to opening negotiations for a cessation of hostilities.

Russia has in the meantime tided over her financial difficulties by issuing an internal loan for 200,000,000 roubles. She has on hand at present, it is estimated, enough money for six weeks only, but with the new loan, estimating her war expenditure at $1,000,000 a day, she will have financial supplies sufficient for six months.

The only news that has come from the front is that the Russians are still retreating northward, with the Japanese in close pursuit. The latter have reached Kaiyuan, a point twenty miles north of Tie Pass, occupying that place, and repulsing a counter attack made by the Russians. General Linevitch has received no news at all from the second and third armies, and it is not known what has become of them.

The future movements of General Linevitch depend a good deal upon the number of men he can extricate from the rout and bring into Harbin. In any case he should have a respectable army there. Of the 300,000 reservists mobilized last fall, 140,000, and the fourth army corps, numbering 40,000, are now beginning to arrive in the Far East. If, therefore, Linevitch's army totals 200,000 when he reaches Harbin, if that is to be the new base, he will have an army of about 400,000 men without summoning additional reserves.

THE MUTUAL LIFE OF CANADA.

The thirty-fifth annual report of this sterling institution, presented at the recent meeting of shareholders, is most gratifying in every respect. It shows that the volume of business now exceeds all records, aggregating 3,452 policies for $5,048,168, all of which except some $30,000, was written within the Dominion. The total assurance now in force is $40,476,970.58, under 27,742 policies, the net addition for the year being $2,889,419. The total income was $1,725,308.90—a gain over preceding year of $164,-238.87. The death claims were exceptionally light, showing a decrease of $51,404. The assets total $8,-220,530.45—a gain of $937,372.05. The funds are invested principally in mortgage loans on farms and city properties, bonds and municipal debentures. The surplus, after making provision for all liabilities is $778,072.87 — an increase of $170,920,-20. It will thus be seen that this old Canadian insurance company is in a sound healthy condition. This well-known Canadian Institution is represented in Belleville by S. Burrows, general agent.

THE TWINS.

We're twins, an' my name's Lucy Brown,
An' her name's Lulu. I'm called Lou,
An' ever'body in 'is town
'Ey call my sister 'at name too.
An' folks 'ey come to see us here,
An we ist have the mostes' fun,
'Cause ever'body say: "Oh, dear!
W'y, 'is one is the nuther one!"

My papa sometimes look at me
An' say, "Well, Lulu, how you grow!"
An' nen I laugh, an' nen, w'y, he Say goodness sakes, he'll never know
Which one is which. An' nen I say
No one can tell us twins apart
'Cause we're together anyway.
An' nen he holler, "Bless you heart!"

My mamma never gets us mixed;
She always knows my twin fum me.
An' papa say she's got us fixed—
Our clo'es or hair so's she can see.
But mamma hugs us bofe up tight
An' kisses us an' pats our curls
An' says a muvver's always wite
An' always knows her preshus girls.

But nuther folks 'ey ist can't tell,
An' oncet when Lulu clumb a tree
An' couldn't hold, w'y, when she fell
The doctor thought 'at she was me.
Nen we all laugh, an' he ist say
It's all in how the notions strike,
'At bofe o' us looks ist one way,
But 'at I look the most alike!

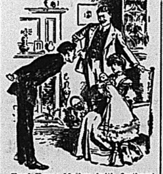
The Great Question.



Fond Young Mother (with firstborn)—Now, which of us do you think he is like?

Friend (judiciously)—Well, of course, intelligence has not really dawned in his countenance yet, but he's wonderfully like both of you!—Punch.

Easy When You Know How.

"It's remarkable," said the doctor, "how much excitement a bean or some equally small object can cause when it is lodged in a baby's nose. This morning a frantic mother rushed into my office and implored me to extract a bead which her baby had put into its nose. Improvising a suitably bent probe from a hairpin I borrowed from the hysterical woman, I succeeded in removing the bead in less time than it would take to count six. And the first thing the woman said was:

"'Why, I could have done that myself!'"—New York Press.

THE WILD BOAR.

Full of Courage and Cunning and Never Loses His Head.

The wild boar never loses his head—or his heart. Such courage I have never beheld in any four footed creature. He has all the cunning commonly accredited to his Satanic majesty and in his rage is a demon that will charge anything of any size. I have seen a small boar work his way through a pack of dogs and his smaller brother, the peccary, in Brazil, send a man up a tree and keep him there.

The boar looks ungainly, but the Indian species is as fleet as a horse for about three-quarters of a mile. He begins with flight, shifts to cunning and finally stands to the fight with magnificent courage, facing any odds. As, riding upon him, you are about to plant your spear, he will dart—"jink," as they call it in India—to one side, repeating the performance several times, until he finds he cannot shake you, when, turning suddenly, with ears cocked and eyes glittering, he will charge furiously. If not squarely met with a well aimed and firmly held spear, he will upset horse and rider. Hurling himself again and again against the surrounding spears, he will keep up his charge until killed, when he dies without a groan.—Outing.

JUMP FEVER.

A Sort of Mania That Sometimes Affects Engine Drivers.

In a party of locomotive engineers who were talking about old time fellow craftsmen reference was made to one old timer who had come to his death through "jump fever." "What's 'jump fever?'" inquired an outsider who was interested in the conversation. "'Jump fever,'" explained an engineer, "is a sort of hallucination that affects some engineers and leads them to leap from the cab to escape a supposed impending collision. It's mostly freight engineers that are affected. On long runs out west a freight engineer may be thirty-six hours at the throttle without much chance for rest owing to mishaps. He gets sleepy and dozes in the cab. All of a sudden he wakes up, but his faculties are scattered, and what with lightness of the head and the motion of the cab he gets an idea that a collision is about to happen. In a semiconscious state he dives out of his window, and the chances are he's a goner when he lands. The engineer we referred to had done the trick twice, but he was killed the third time out on the Santa Fe road."

VELOCITY OF ELECTRICITY.

Spark and Mirror Method by Which It Was Determined.

To determine the velocity of electricity a "spark board" was fitted with six insulated knobs in a straight line. The distance from 1 to 2 was the tenth of an inch, between 2 and 3 was a quarter of a mile of insulated wire, from 3 to 4 was again the tenth of an inch, between 4 and 5 was another quarter of a mile of wire, and between 5 and 6 was once more the tenth of an inch.

When the jar was discharged there were three sparks, one from 1 to 2, one from 3 to 4 and one from 5 to 6. It was found by viewing these in a rapidly revolving mirror that the image of the spark between 3 and 4, which could only be formed after the wire coils had been traversed, lagged a little behind the other two.

This displacement of the image was then measured, and as the velocity of the mirror was known the velocity of the electrical discharge was determined as 288,000 miles a second.

A Case of Too Much Children.

In a volume of reminiscences a very funny story is told of the late Bishop Bloomfield, who, having a family by his first wife, married a second time. This Mrs. Bloomfield was a widow, with a brood of her own, and in due course a third family arrived on the scene. One day the bishop was disturbed by his wife running into his study in a great state of excitement. "What is it, dear?" he testily inquired. "Oh, bishop!" was her agonized reply. "Quick, quick! There's not a moment to lose! Your children are siding with my children and are murdering our children!"

Love.

It is hard to preserve equanimity and greatness on that debatable ground between love and esteem. There is nothing so stable and unfluctuating as love. The waves beat steadfast on its shore forever, and its tide has no ebb. It is a resource in all extremities and a refuge from itself. And yet love will not be leaned on.—H. D. Thoreau in Atlantic.

The Last Resort.

Sandy entered a smoking compartment and asked each of his immediate neighbors for a match. All happened to be without them, however, and a look of disappointment came over the Scotchman's face as he remarked resignedly, "Aweel, I'll e'en hae to use one o' my ain."

Good Advice.

Said a man who had been detected cheating at cards: "They threaten to kick me downstairs. What am I to do?" The friend appealed to offered this timely counsel, "Play on the ground floor."

His Fatal Mistake.

"Adam was his own boss, wasn't he?"

"Yes, an' ef he hadn't gone ter sleep at de wrong time he'd been so yet!"

No man or boy is ever the slightest good in this world unless he has ambition.—Lord Stanley.

Prosperity and Progress

The volume of business transacted by the Mutual Life of Canada during 1904 exceeds that of any previous year. Over Five Million Dollars of new business was written, making the total Assurances now in force nearly Forty and a Half Millions of Dollars. All but Thirty Thousand Dollars of the new business was written within the Dominion. The Mutual Life of Canada is essentially a Canadian Company, and believes that good Canadian business is preferable to foreign business, which is secured at excessive cost and is often of poor quality. Good home business, and lots of it, means more profits to Canadian policy holders.

TUDHOPE'S FACTORY SCORCHED.

One Man Seriously Burned While Removing Carriages.

Orillia, March 21.—At 12.35 p. m. yesterday fire broke out in Tudhope & Co's carriage showrooms and implement emporium and did several thousand dollars worth of damage before extinguished. The loss is covered by insurance.

Albert Rahmer, while assisting in removing carriages, was enveloped in flames in a position unable to help himself, and before extricated was seriously burned.

Flour Mill Gutted.

Beaverton, March 21.—About 9 o'clock Sunday night a fire broke out in the large brick flour mill owned by Alexander Dobson, caused by an overheated journal of the electric light plant. The mill is completely gutted, leaving only the walls standing. About 20,000 bushels of wheat and flour were destroyed. The loss is estimated at about $40,000. The total insurance is about $14,000, insured in several companies

ONLY PARTLY TRUE.

POPULAR IDEAS REGARDING CATARRH.

It is the common belief that what is popularly known as catarrh is simply a chronic cold in the head. This is true as far as it goes, but as a matter of fact catarrh is by no means confined to the nasal passages, but extends wherever the mucous membrane extends, which means nearly every part of the body.

The mucous membrane is the inside skin of the body and is nearly as extensive as the outside skin, and any inflammation of this membrane causing an extra secretion of fluid is really catarrh.

Catarrh is, therefore, an old enemy disguised by many confusing names, for instance: Rhinitis is nasal catarrh; laryngitis and pharyngitis, throat catarrh; gastritis, stomach catarrh; cystitis and nephritis, catarrh of the bladder and kidneys.

Therefore, although the location of the trouble gives it various names, in reality the sum total is catarrh and nothing else.

Do not make the mistake of thinking you have no catarrh because the head and nose appear to be clear. If there is a cough, tickling in the throat and hoarseness you have throat catarrh, if there is no appetite, but nausea, gagging and disgust for food especially in the morning, you have catarrh of the stomach.

The surest treatment for every form of catarrh is an external remedy, which acts especially on the blood and mucous membranes; such a remedy is the new preparation sold everywhere by druggists under the name of Stuart's Catarrh Tablets, a medicine in pleasant tablet form and containing all the best and latest specifics for catarrh.

Stuart's Catarrh Tablets contain in highly concentrated form, bloodroot, red gum of the Eucalyptus tree, and many others equally valuable curative elements, and no one who suffers from any form of catarrh and has seen the inefficiency of douches, sprays and powders will ever go back to them after once trying so pleasant a preparation as Stuart's Catarrh Tablets, and one which gives so much relief in so short a time.

All druggists sell Stuart's Catarrh Tablets at 50 cts. for full sized package and the regular, daily use of them will effectually cure this troublesome and dangerous disease.

TORONTO JUNCTION LIVE STOCK.

Receipts of live stock at the Union Stock Yards were 42 carloads, composed of 793 cattle, 9 hogs, 9 sheep and 13 calves.

The demand for ocean freight has been good, and all the space from West St. John to Liverpool London and Glasgow was well engaged for April at 37s 6d, with the Glasgow space for May and June from this port let at 40s, and the same Liverpool at the same figure. There were about 600 head cattle, 50 milch cows, 100 calves and 30 sheep and lambs offered at the East End Abattoir. The butchers were present in large numbers, but trade was slow, as higher prices were being asked all round. Prime beeves sold at 4¼c to 5c per lb.; good cattle, 3⅝c to 4⅝c, and the common stock 2½c to 3½c per lb. There were several very fine milch cows offered, but there seemed to be little demand for them. Prices ranged from $25 to $60 each. Calves sold at from $2 to $6 each. Baron Von Hammerstein Dead.

Berlin, March 21.—Baron von Hammerstein, the Prussian Minister of the Interior, is dead.

An Irishman gave his wife away by talking in his sleep. That is nothing. Plenty of wives give their husbands away by talking while awake.

It is worse than madness to neglect a cough, or cold which is easily subdued if taken in time but becomes, when left to itself, the forerunner of consumption and premature death. Inflammation, when it attacks the delicate tissue of the lungs and bronchial tubes, travels with perilous rapidity; then do not delay, get a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, the medicine that grasps this formidable foe of the human body, and drives it from the system. This medicine promotes a free and easy expectoration, subdues the cough, heals the diseased parts, and exerts a most wonderful influence in curing consumption, and other diseases of the throat and lungs. If parents wish to save the lives of their children, and themselves from much anxiety, trouble and expense, let them procure a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, and whenever a child has taken cold, has a cough or hoarseness, give the Syrup according to directions.

Why is bread like the sun? Answer—Because it rises from the yeast.

There can be a difference of opinion on most subjects, but there is only one opinion as to the reliability of Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator. It is safe, sure and effectual.

If you were to ride a donkey what fruit would you resemble? Answer—A pair.

Are you a sufferer with corns? If you are, get a bottle of Holloway's Corn Cure. It has never been known to fail.

What black thing enlightens the world? Answer—Ink.

Sudden transition from a hot to a cold temperature, exposure to rain, sitting in a draught, unseasonable substitution of light for heavy clothing, are fruitful causes of colds and the resultant cough so perilous to persons of weak lungs. Among the many medicines for bronchial disorders so arising, there is none better than Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. Try it and become convinced. Price 25 cents.

Name something with two heads and one body. Answer—A barrel.

They Are Carefully Prepared.—Pills which dissipate themselves in the stomach cannot be expected to have much effect upon the intestines, and to overcome costiveness the medicine administered must influence the action of these canals. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are so made, under the supervision of experts, that the substance in them intended to operate on the intestines is retarded in action until they pass through the stomach to the bowels.

What coat is finished without buttons and put on wet? Answer—A coat of paint.

A Small Pill, but Powerful.—They that judge of the powers of a pill by its size, would consider Parmelee's Vegetable Pills to be lacking. It is a little wonder among pills. What it lacks in size it makes up in potency. The remedies which it carries are put up in these small doses, because they are so powerful that only small doses are required. The full strength of the extracts is secured in this form and do their work thoroughly.

What is that which is lengthened by being cut at both ends? Answer—A ditch.

A Requisite for the Rancher.—On the cattle ranges of the West, where men and stock are far from doctors and apothecaries, Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil is kept on hand by the intelligent as a ready made medicine, not only for many human ills, but as a horse and cattle medicine of surpassing merit. A horse and cattle rancher will find matters greatly simplified by using this Oil.

out, with Vane's arm linked in his cousin's.

Mr. Holland filled his glass and sighed, and as if emboldened by the sigh, Prance remarked, gravely:

"It's good to have his lordship at the Court, Mr. Holland. His lordship's looking well, sir?"

Mr. Holland frowned and fidgeted in his nervous way with his claret glass.

"Well? Did you think so? Well, yes, perhaps; but—but he's much changed, Prance. Can't say exactly how, but he looks—looks as if he'd got something on his mind. Fancy I saw a speck or two of gray at his temples—my fancy, perhaps."

"No, Mr. Holland, sir, I noticed it myself," said Prance, solemnly. "But from all accounts his lordship's been through a great deal since we had the honor of seeing him last; and that may account for the change in him. He certainly is different—more grave and absent-minded than I remember him. No doubt it's that wreck, Mr. Holland."

"Yes, yes; I dessay," assented Holland, slightly encouraged. "In one thing he isn't changed; he's just as restless and disinclined for business. I do hope that he'll pay some attention to the estate. It's a tremendous responsibility for me, and if I can't get him to give me—" Then suddenly remembering that he was perhaps a trifle too confidential with the butler, he said, with an abrupt change of tone: "Cigar, if you please, Prance. Thanks. I shall go into the library when I've finished it, and shall be there if his lordship should want me."

Vane and Julian paused in the hall and Julian looked round at the figures in armour, the trophies, the tattered flags depending from the valuted roof, the cabinets full of curios, the pictures, most of them family portraits, on the oak panelled walls.

"Fine hall, eh?" said Vane.

Julian nodded.

"A bit—stagey, theatrical, isn't it? But, I suppose it's because they put this thing on the stage so well. Portrait of our uncle. Poor chap! He led a devilish solitary life, I'm afraid I wish he'd married—"

Julian glanced sideways at him, at first incredulously and with suspicion, then with genuine surprise.

"There's a fellow who's awfully like you, Julian," Vane went on. "Wonderful how features perpetuate themselves. That gentleman in the armor and a helmet which appears to be two sizes too large for him was our great fighting ancestor, Sir Rupert—the peerage didn't come until after his time; we got it, I fancy, for political services crossed from one side of the House to the other; ratted, in other words. Or was it because the monarch of that period took a fancy to a then Lady Mannering? I forget; but you'll find it in the County History in the library. We'll go there presently. Come into the drawing-room. Prance and Mrs. Field like to call it 'the state apartments.' We used to entertain royalty, you know."

Julian's face flushed, in fact he was a glow all over, as he surveyed the magnificent suite of rooms which terminated in a conservatory large enough to be called a palm-house.

"It is superb," he said, and he stole a glance at Vane's calm and rather indifferent countenance. "You ought to be a proud man, Vane!"

"Eh?" said Vane. "Oh, ah, yes! yes; it's a fine place; but—but—it's rather inconveniently large, isn't it? Fancy sitting here after dinner! In solitary grandeur, with one hundred or two hundred—how many are there?—wax candles blinking at you! We only burn candles here; no gas allowed. Shall we put on the electric light, Julian? Lord, I think our poor uncle would turn in his grave! Come on! Music-room. Uncle hated music. But it's all there, piano—there's an organ in the gallery upstairs—harp, guitar, sackbut and psaltery. Oh, by George, this will be in your way, won't it? You can pipe and sing to your heart's content—and mine. What a voice that is of yours! Yes; this shall be your special department."

Julian glanced at him curiously, but said nothing.

"Here we are in the library. There's the chair the poor old man used to sit in when he lectured me. 'Duties and responsibilities of property.' 'Parliament the proper place for a Mannering, not wandering like a tramp over the face of the civilized and uncivilized world.' 'Extravagance the curse of the age.' 'Country gradually but surely hastening to ruin and decay,' etc., etc. Poor old fellow, as if we're the kind of men to stop it. Fine lot of books. They're in your line, too, Julian. By the way"—he stopped and looked at Julian with a grim smile—"'pears to me that most of it up to the present is more in your line than mine. Ah, but this suits me a little better."

They had entered the gun-room and, for the first time, Vane looked about him with appreciation and satisfaction.

"They've kept it up very well. By George, there's the gun I used to shoot with when I was a boy!" He handled it lovingly. "And there's my foils and boxing-gloves. Can you box, Julian?" He held out a pair but Julian shook his head and smiled a negative. "Fence?"

"A little," admitted Julian.

"Catch hold!" said Vane, tossing him a foil and a mask.

Julian hesitated a moment, then slipped on the mask.

"Ready? Right!" said Vane, putting himself into the first position. They fenced for a few minutes in a perfunctory way, then Vane, warming, began to press. Julian paused, parried skilfully, and presently slipped under Vane's guard and touched him.

Vane flushed, but laughed—laughed more lightly than Julian had hitherto heard him.

"Bravo! that was smart! Yes; you fence 'a little' as you play and sing 'a little!' My dear fellow, you handle 'em like—like a Frenchman. Let's have another turn."

"Oh—shall we?" said Julian.

They fell to again, but this time, though Julian could have touched Vane more than once, it was Vane's button that dabbed against Julian's waistcoat.

"Mine, that bout," said Vane. "But two out of three, eh?"

But Julian shrugged his shoulders and took off his mask. "Too hot," he said, carelessly. "My dear Vane, you would pink me seven times out of nine."

"That's your modesty," said Vane. "Get rid of it; it will be your ruin, as it has been mine."

The exercise, the trial of skill, had warmed his heart for a moment—because for that moment he had been able to forget.

"Come on, or are you bored?"

"No, no!" said Vane.

"Let me see," said Vane, looking round; they were in a small passage. "There's a way out here—"

"That?" said Vane, pondering. "Oh, to the old part of the place, to old castle. Is it open? Hi!" to a passing footman, "Bring me the key, will you, please?"

While the man went for the key, Vane and Julian lit their cigars.

"Phew, rather musty, isn't it?" said Vane, as the door opened stiffly.

They passed into a narrow passage and under an arched way into a room with closed shutters.

Vane went to them, stumbling over a chair, and drew them open.

"Years since I was here," he said. "This is one of the old rooms. Notice the thickness of the walls. Dampness, isn't it? Smells like a vault. Don't suppose it's been opened for—oh, goodness knows how long! Nice old furniture, isn't it? Pity to leave it here to spoil. Look at that picture over the fire-place; it's spotted with mould."

Julian looked round with an interested air.

"It's a grand old room," he said. He went to the window. It looked out upon a small paved court-yard, deserted, neglected and weed-grown, with walls so high that they shut out all view from the windows. A door, green with moss and lichen, was the only outlet from the court.

"Quaint, isn't it?" said Vane. "This is called the Wizard's Room. Portrait of the wizard over fireplace, I should say. Looks forbidding enough for a wizard, at any rate," he added, and Julian, with his back to the window, looked up at the mould-spotted face scowling down at them.

"I like it," he said. "The room, I mean. It's so quaint and old-fashioned and remote. Ah!" his face lit up as if an idea had suddenly struck him.

"What is it?" inquired Vane.

Julian turned away.

"Oh, I was only thinking that it would make a good laboratory," he said, carelessly.

"By George! So it would!" assented Vane with a laugh. "Right away from the rest of the house—I suppose that even the awful smells I noticed at your place wouldn't get through that passage and that thick old door? We could put another door, a baize affair, warranted stink-proof, couldn't we? See here, Julian; why not have this room for your—what do you call it?—laboratory?"

Julian's face flushed and his lids drooped.

"My dear Vane, you speak as if—as if I were the owner, as if I had the right to dispose of, to choose, any room in Lesborough Court—"

Vane regarded him with a grave smile.

"So you are, so you can," he said. "You will be the owner—"

Julian's face grew pale and he smiled a polite contradiction.

"As I told you, I shall never marry. You are the heir, the next earl. See here, Julian; let us understand each other. I want you to make the Court your home—that is, if you care to do so, and while you wish to do so. You don't imagine that I intend living here alone? No, thanks! I know what loneliness, solitude, mean—" He broke off suddenly. "I want you to understand that the Court will be yours, and that you have as much right to live here as well as I have. Make the room your laboratory, by all means."

"But—"

"But me no buts," interrupted Vane. "I mean it. I've got a trick of saying what I mean. I—well, I'm not the sort of man to settle down anywhere. I'm a restless, Wandering Jew kind of fellow, and I shall probably be off on the tramp again presently. Now, you—well, I fancy you are quite a different sort of man; you are a 'Home Bird,' as the song says. Fond of music and science and all that sort of thing. Good! this is evidently the place for you."

"But—" began Julian again; but Vane made a slight gesture.

"Oh, don't think that I want to interfere with your independence, or to be a bore and a drag on you. Not a bit of it. You can keep up that old place of yours by the Thames, if you like. I should; it's a queer, quaint old diggings; but make the Court your home. Now, don't argue. I'm a poor hand at arguing, and invariably lose my temper. You can send for that old servant of yours—what's her name, by the way?"

"Deborah," said Julian. His brows were knit, and he stood with drooped lids and tightened lips; he seemed to be reflecting so intensely as scarcely to be breathing.

"Deborah; name seems to fit her. Well, send for her, if you like. In fact—there! do just as you like, and we shall get on very well together. Let's get out of this, shall we? If you decide to turn the room into a laboratory, it will want thoroughly doing up—"

"Oh, no," said Julian, glancing round almost lovingly. "Just clearing out and cleaning. The fireplace would need some little alteration. An intelligent mason—"

Vane laughed.

"First, find your mason," he said, "then sound him for intelligence; result—" he shrugged his shoulders. "We can get through that door into the stable courtyard. Why, where is the door leading from this room?" he broke off to remark.

Julian looked round. "There does not appear to be a door. Perhaps it has been bricked up or panelled over."

"Ah, p'r'aps so," said Vane, indifferently, and he led the way out by the door at which they had entered.

"My department again," he said with a laugh as they entered the stables. "But perhaps you ride as well as you fence, Julian?"

Julian shook his head. "I'm not much of a horseman," he said.

"Modesty again!" retorted Vane. "Well, you must pick your mount. There used to be a fairish lot of animals— Ah, Dodson," as the coachman came hurrying across the yard from his cottage to receive his new master, "how are you? We are just looking round, but in a hurried kind of way only. Got anything worth looking at?"

Mr. Dodson hastened to display his animals.

"Hem, the carriage horses are all right; and that's a decent mare, Dodson; so's the chestnut; and the cob in the end stall looks a nice little lad. The hunters—well, well—hem!"

"Just so, my lord," said Mr. Dodson, with respectful eagerness. "There's nothing here fit to carry your lordship. The late earl gave up hunting long ago, as your lordship knows—"

"Well, keep your eyes open, and I'll do the same, and we may pick up two or three likely ones. Meanwhile—chestnut, quiet?"

"Quite, my lord. I bred him myself, and broke him."

"Good; then he'll do for Mr. Julian here—my cousin, Mr. Julian Shore, Dodson."

Mr. Dodson touched his cap to Julian, who remonstrated with Vane. "Oh, but—my dear Vane! You will surely keep the chestnut for yourself—"

"Oh, the mare will do for me!" said Vane, carelessly. "She's a good sort, though not so handsome, as the chestnut—"

"Nor so quiet, my lord; a little bit of temper," put in Dodson.

"So I see," said Vane. "I noticed her eyes and ears when I went up to her just now. But I like a bit of temper. Anyhow, I'll give her a trial. We'll just glance at the coach-house—"

"Ah, we want a new carriage or two, my lord," said Mr. Dodson.

"Just so, just so. Ah, well, plenty of time," said Vane as he cast a comprehensive eye round. "Glad to see you looking so well, Dodson."

"Thank you, my lord, and the same to your lordship, if I may make so bold," said the gratified Dodson, with a touch of his cap.

"We'll go under the arch and round to the front," said Vane, as they walked away. "Nice fellow—Dodson; remember him putting me on my first pony. Hello, who's this—Fanworthy, by George!"

They had passed under the tall archway and entered upon the drive along which an open landau was coming toward the house. An elderly man with the air of a sportsman and an aristocrat was the sole occupant, and as he caught sight of the two young men he leaned forward and waved his hand.

"Ah, Vane!" he exclaimed. "What luck to just catch you! I heard the news of your arrival, and drove over on the chance of seeing you."

"The luck's mine, Lord Fanworthy," said Vane. "It's very kind of you, very! Let me introduce my cousin—Mr. Julian Shore."

Lord Fanworthy raised his hat with old-world courtesy.

"Come into the house," said Vane; but Lord Fanworthy shook his head.

"No, no. Can't! Against positive orders. Her ladyship emphatically bade me not leave the carriage. 'If he is there, just tell him that he is to come back with you; that I say so.' Her very words, Vane, I assure you."

"In that case, there's only one thing to do: obey," said Vane.

"That's right, my boy!" said Lord Fanworthy, approvingly. "Pray get in, Mr. Shore; my wife will be delighted to see you. It's not far. What a beautiful day for your return, Vane! By Jove, you must have a rare budget to tell us! Not a word till you get home! You're looking—yes, well. Been knocked about a bit, eh? Thought so." Then he turned to Julian. "I remember your father, of course, Mr. Shore. He may have spoken of me?"

Julian colored slightly. "I am sorry to say that he did not, Lord Fanworthy. My father never spoke of—old times."

"Ah, yes, yes, quite so!" assented Lord Fanworthy, quickly. "Great nuisance, family feuds! You have a look of the Mannerings, Mr. Shore. I think I should have known you as one of them, even if I had met you elsewhere."

The three men chatted as the horses span along the well-kept road, and after a short drive they reached the Grange. Lord Fanworthy led them into the drawing-room, calling "Em'ly!" as he went. Lady Fanworthy was seated in a low chair by the window, knitting. She had been a reigning beauty; she was beautiful still with her silvery hair, wonderful complexion and the grey eyes which were almost as brilliant—and far keener—than those of most girls. She held out her snow-white and exquisitely shaped hand to Vane and nodded and smiled, her eyes flashing over him as if they were taking in every feature of his face; then they passed from him to Julian, enquiringly, and as keenly.

"It's good to see you, Vane," she said; and there was almost a maternal note in the low, clear voice; for Vane, as a lad, had been a favorite of hers, and, with the tact for which she was famous, she had often slipped in between his uncle and him and prevented a quarrel. "And it was good of you to come so quickly. And this is—" Vane introduced Julian, and she bowed and smiled graciously. "And so you have come into your own, Vane? And it feels strange—at first?"

"It does, Lady Fanworthy," said Vane, as he took the seat beside her to which she had motioned him.

"And you are going to settle down, to be a model landlord and a pattern peer?"

"No," said Vane. "Part's already filled," and he looked towards Lord Fanworthy, who had gone to the next room to show Julian the view.

"Godfrey will be glad to have you at the Court," said her ladyship. "He was always fond of you. And I— So that's Julian Shore." Her voice scarcely dropped, but it was so soft as to be inaudible to the others. "A handsome young man; darker than the Mannerings usually are."

"Yes; he's quite an Adonis," said Vane. "And an extremely good fellow. I hope you'll like him. We are great friends already, though we only met a day or two ago."

"I will see," she said, with a swift, searching glance at Julian. "But I want to talk about you. Where have you been? No! are you well, happy, Vane?"

His eyes fell before her brilliant ones which seemed to reach his sadly tried heart.

"Fit as a fiddle, my dear lady; almost as fit as Lord Fanworthy there. And I am so glad to see you looking so well. Not a day older."

She raised her level eyebrows. "Why should I be? My dear Vane, at my age, women grow younger, nowadays. Where have you been not to know that! And you are well and—happy?"

Vane's eyes dropped, then he raised them, but with an effort, for this old lady was a difficult one to deceive.

"As happy as I deserve," he said, smilingly.

"And you have been travelling a great deal, and, if rumor speaks the truth, have had some adventures."

Vane nodded, his lips tightening. "Yes," he said, "all sorts of adventures. You still stick to your knitting, I see, Lady Fanworthy."

It was enough for her; and she asked no more questions.

"Here's the tea," she said, as the butler brought it in. "But, of course, you'll stay to dinner. Godfrey shall send for your things—"

But Vane declined. "I've ordered dinner at the Court," he said, "and Prance would break his heart if He didn't turn on tnis the first night."

She nodded approvingly. "Quite right, Vane."

"But, see," he said; "it will be rather lonely for us two bachelors. Now, if you want to be as kind as you always used to be, you bring Lord Fanworthy to dine with us."

She did not hesitate a moment.

"Yes," she said, smoothly.

The other two men came to the tea-table and her ladyship conversed with Julian. She asked no questions, but almost unconsciously he found himself telling her that he was unmarried, that he lived alone, that he had no profession and was content with a small income; indeed, nearly all the details which another person would only have extracted by a series of categorical questions; and he did not make the discovery until the two young men were going home in the landau.

"A wonderful woman!" Vane remarked. "You admired her, of course? She used to be a great beauty; and she is as clever as she is beautiful."

"Yes; she's clever," said Julian, absently, as he reflected on the way in which her ladyship had "pumped" him.

"Yes; she used to play an important part in the political world," Vane went on. "Kept what used to be called a 'salon'; entertained the people of her husband's party; Fanworthy was in the Cabinet. They say that she kept the party in power for six months longer than it ought to have been. Don't understand politics myself. She was very good to me when I was a lad—they both were—and I like her, naturally. I don't know any one to whom I'd sooner go, if I were in trouble or in a mess. I think you'll like her, Julian."

"I am sure I shall," said Julian, with an admirably feigned tone of conviction.

"Oh, Prance," said Vane, as the butler came to meet them, "Lord and Lady Fanworthy dine here to-night. And light up the music-room, will you. Right!"

It was more than a pleasant dinner, for Lady Fanworthy made it a charmiog one. In spite of himself Julian was drawn within the circle of the spell of her brilliant eyes, and the clear, low voice in which she said the wittiest things with the air of an innocent girl.

"We won't let you go all alone to that Madame Tussaud of a drawing-room, Lady Fanworthy," Vane said when the dessert was over. "We'll go into the music-room. Julian here is a Tip-top performer. Send the coffee in there, please, will you, Prance? You won't mind our cigar-

Cracker Perfection

The finest wheat in the world grows here in Canada. The best flour is milled in the Dominion. The whole Mooney factory is brand new from top to bottom, and has every modern time-and-labor-saving improvement. The head of the bakery, and every man under him, is a master in the art of cracker-making.

This is why

Mooney's Perfection Cream Sodas

are the most inviting, most toothsome crackers in Canada.

Grocers everywhere have them.

You know the action of fruit.

Apples, on the kidneys—oranges, for stomach and appetite—prunes and figs for the bowels. But—fresh fruit won't CURE these organs when diseased: they can only HELP to keep them well.

Fruit-a-tives

or Fruit Liver Tablets

can—and DO—cure. They are fruit juices—but changed chemically and medicinally, by our secret process. So remarkable is this convertion, that "Fruit-a-tives" cure all Stomach, Liver, Kidney and Skin Diseases, where the fresh fruit would have no effect on the trouble.

REASON No 21
WHY YOU SHOULD USE

Red Rose Tea

Because it is perfectly clean.

Wouldn't you like to know that the tea you drink has not been touched by human hand since it was plucked on the plantation?

This is what you get in Red Rose Tea. The old method of rolling and packing tea by hand has been entireiy done away with on the tea estates where Red Rose Tea is produced. There, as well as in the blending and packing rooms, machinery—scrupulously clean machinery—is used exclusively.

Red Rose Tea is never touched by hand after being plucked.

This fact alone will help you enjoy drinking it.

The Blue Label is recommended.

QUACK COW TREATMENTS.

Cattle owners are warned to go slowly in having anything to do with the so-called bovo-vaccine treatment. A New York drug firm advertises the treatment as a prevention of tuberculosis, but Dr. Peters of the Massachusetts State Cattle Bureau and Dr. Pierson, State veterinarian of Pennsylvania, agree that the proposed plan is of very doubtful practical value and at best needs further testing before it could possibly be recommended for general use. The treatment seems to be deserving of some attention from the experiment stations, and possibly something might be developed which would prove of real merit.

The vaccine, which is supposed to be like that employed by the German scientist, Von Behring, is nothing more or less than dried baccili, of precisely the sort that are most frequently found in human tuberculosis. These organisms are injected into the blood and carried to all parts of the system. They might even be found in the milk when the treatment is applied to cows. Hence the need of caution with experiments of this kind. The theory is that the system is accustomed to these weakened germs and soon becomes able to resist these unweakened germs, which cause the disease of tuberculosis. Some experiments have shown results pointing in this direction, but according to Dr. Peters nothing practical has been accomplished and it would be unwise for cattle growers to undertake any such work on their herds.—The American Cultivator.

Meat and Cut Bone for Poultry.

One cannot reasonably expect many eggs in winter and early spring unless the hens are provided with a balanced ration, and this should contain a much larger proportion of green cut bone and lean meat scraps than is generally supposed.

During the summer when fowls have free range they balance the ration themselves to suit their needs, and the bugs and worms which they eat would probably be found to furnish about half of their food. The matter thus sums itself up in this way: In summer, when the hens eat all the animal food they want, eggs are plenty; in winter, when such food is not available, the egg supply fails, unless the necessary elements are given in the form of cut bone and meat scraps.

This meat and bone ration, besides furnishing material for making eggs, gets the fowls in good physical condition, improving the health and acting as a tonic.

A chemical analysis of green cut bone and meat shows why their use brings an abundance of eggs, as they contain the elements which are found in a complete egg. Lean meat and gristle form the white of the egg and about one-sixth of the yolk, the marrow and clear fat supply the remainder of the yolk, while the lime phosphates contained in the bone help to form the shell, and also supply the small amount of phosphate found in both white and yolk.

Hens which are fed plenty of such food never eat their eggs, which shows that it is the elements which are lacking in their food supply which causes them to become addicted to egg eating.

It is often hard to break a hen of the habit after it is once formed, but a liberal feed of this material two or three times a week will soon fill her system so full of the required elements that she will have no desire for it in egg form.

Experiments have been made by poultry raisers which shows the difference in the growth of chickens, as well as in egg production, when an entire grain ration is used for one flock, and another one is supplied with grain and animal food combined. In one case, those fed on the latter ration reached a certain weight five weeks earlier than those fed on grain alone, and the pullets began to lay a month earlier than grain-fed ones. According to this, the grain is far out of proportion to the trouble and expense which this balanced ration causes.

Cut bone yields twenty-one per cent. of protein, which is a muscle maker, meat meal furnished forty per cent. and clear beef scraps fifty per cent. This makes them yield respectively 3.3, 6.4 and 8 ounces of muscle maker from each pound fed. As each dozen eggs is supposed to contain about three ounces of protein, it will be readily seen why those foods are necessary to egg production.

One should stop feeding animal food before the fowls have had quite enough of it, so as to keep their appetites always keen for it. This, of course, only applies to those in confinement, as it has been demonstrated that hens living under natural conditions, and having a variety of foods always before them, will go from one to another selecting from each only the amount which their systems require.

FOR A HORSEMAN'S NOTE BOOK.

You can get no more power from a horse than you give him in the food.

The horse is man's invaluable helper and should be treated as a friend.

The best drivers talk much to their animals.

Your horse needs water oftener than you.

A sandy or muddy road doubles the work.

A rise of only one foot in ten doubles the draft.

Shying is very often caused by abuse, overloading or tight harness.

The whip costs more than it saves. P[illegible] away.

W[illegible] save much horse power.

Q[illegible] and patient drivers are worth twice as much as any others.

Your [illegible] intends to please you, but does not always know your wishes.

Dark or damp stables cause low spirits and various diseases.

Axle grease pays one thousand per cent. profit.

Heavy shoeing in front will induce a coach horse to pick up his knees, but if you shoe him heavy all the time, he will get used to it and then he won't pick them up. Stepping him over soft ground will do it, and laying down poles that he has to step over will help to impove his action and the kind of action that is natural to the animal is the kind that stays.

DOMESTIC HINTS.

A Novel Cranberry Pie.— Take a good-sized cupful of cranberries, cut them in two and put them in cold water to draw out the seeds. Mix a tablespoonful of flour with a cupful of sugar, and then add slowly a scant cupful of boiling water and half a cupful of raisins stoned and cut in two. Lift the cranberries out of the cold water, which should be thrown away, and mix them with the other ingredients. Bake between two crusts. Sometimes a tablespoonful of vanilla is added.

Fried Graham Muffins.—For them mix one and a half pints of graham flour with half a cup of sugar, a cup of wheat flour and a tablespoonful of salt. Sift with two teaspoonfuls of cream of tartar and one of soda, or two "rounded" teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Then add two well beaten eggs and a pint of milk. Dip large spoonfuls of the dough in hot lard, and fry them a golden brown. Serve hot.

Baked Turnips.—Wash and pare a good-sized turnip, and then cut in cross-wise slices about a quarter of an inch thick; boil until tender, but not too soft; then remove carefully, and place in a pan with a spoonful of butter, three tablespoonfuls of water and a little salt, and bake until a nice brown. When done place in a vegetable dish and cover with melted butter. Serve hot.

Oyster Balls.—Fry a dozen good-sized oysters in butter; then chop and season well. Mix with a cupful of well-cooked rice, one egg, a little chopped onion and milk enough to hold the mixture together when made into balls. Roll in egg and then in cracker crumbs and fry in butter. A nice luncheon dish.

Cream Sponge Cake.—Whip separately and then thoroughly together the yolks and whites of three eggs; add one cup of sugar, one-third of a cup of milk, one-half of a teaspoonful of soda mixed in two scant cupfuls of flour, and one teaspoonful of cream of tartar, dissolved in milk. Bake in a square tin, and if desired split when cool and add a filling.

THE HORSE.

Condition of the Teeth. — It will make no difference how you feed the horse, unless the teeth are in good condition. The food is prepared for the stomach by the molars or grinders, twenty-four in number. This mastication or fitting of the food for the action of the stomach juices, is done by a sideway movement, the food being changed from side to side at will.

In most horses this action results in the formation of projections of the grinders, such projections or hooks causing sore mouths, slavering the passage of undigested food, wounds of the tongue and lining of the mouth, etc. The treatment is simple, calling as it does for the use of the float (dental file), the operation consisting in filing down the projections on the outer side of the upper and the inner side of the lower molars. The average work horse will need this attention once a year.

Plumping a Thin Horse. — Corn meal, bran, cut hay and molasses may be safely be counted on to fatten thin horses more quickly than any other combination, but a feed of dry grain should be given at least once every two days for the sake of variety. Cracked corn with sometimes a feed of oats, if possible, will prove the best for this. Of course, they must not be given more than they will clean up, for then they will get stalled, and it will take some time to get them back to full feed again, and it is here that the eye of the master must govern.

A ration of two pounds of molasses, four pounds of cracked corn and two quarts of bran, with plenty of cut hay, will be found a great flesh-former. The molasses is reduced with water, poured over the cut hay, and then the ground grain is mixed all through the mass. This makes a heavy ration, and so is the same amount of barley meal fed in precisely the same way, but it will do the work. A feed of the grain as described in the morning, one of the boiled barley at night, and a ration of dry ground barley at noon would make an ideal combination for the purpose named. If oatmeal is to be had at anything like a moderate price a little of it may be used, but if it is high it should not be purchased. The corn and the boiled barley may be mixed in equal proportions if desired and fed with the bran and molasses and cut hay. As stated, variety is always good.

Caution is advised in starting horses on full feed. It is better to err on the side of losing a few pounds by going a little slow at first than it is to get into trouble by trying to force the animals too quickly on to the heavy ration. As a rule to go by, it is well to feed per day one pound of grain for every hundred pounds of live weight in the horse. They should have more than this, as a general rule when at the height of the feeding period, but each horse should have his ration dealt out to him separately according to his capacity. After a horse is thriving on the amount of grain satisfactorily he should have more if he asks for it, but the danger line is usually not far ahead when that point is reached. But as no real rule of thumb has ever yet been formulated that would cover all cases, the feeder must accept this as a basis, and then work to it and beyond it as occasion may require.

Roughage of some sort, of course, the horses must have, but when they are getting plenty of cut hay moistened with treacle water, they do not require much in the long shape. Again, a pound of hay per hundred weight of live horse is a good rule to follow, and what is fed cut up into half or three-quarter-inch lengths should be deducted from the general amount allowed.

7 Sutherland Sisters' HAIR GROWER

Miss Ida Roadhouse, Peterboro' Ontario
Seven Sutherland Sisters' Hair Grower and Scalp Cleaner shows results from the very first. Here is more proof that we have the greatest hair grower science ever produced.
Seven Sutherland Sisters
Dear Ladies,—Having been benefited by the use of your Hair Grower and Scalp Cleaner, I take much pleasure in recommending same. At the time of your visit to Peterboro' last October, I showed you my head, which I thought was a hopeless case, and after looking at the bald spot on my head which was then about the size of a fifty cent piece, and enlarging more every day, you advised me to try your wonderful remedy, which is worthy of being termed so. I did, and to my surprise, before I had used one of your large sized bottles of Hair Grower and only half a package of Scalp Cleaner I could see a covering of a sort of scales and upon continuing to use it the scales fell off without leaving a mark of any kind. My hair now on the bald spot is about three inches long and growing more and more every day to my delight. I cannot really recommend it enough and am thankful that such a remedy came to my rescue.
Yours truly, Ida Roadhouse,

Song of the Retreating Russians

We're marching on to freedom, in the dark before the dawning;
The shells are bursting round us, and the shrapnel shriek on high
We're marching on to freedom through the black and bloody morning;
A crimson thread is in the east, and creeps across the sky.

We're hopelessly defeated; let the joyous news be shouted,
Our armies are in full retreat and soon we shall be free.
Outfought and outmanoeuvred, outflanked and raked and routed,
Three hundred thousand beaten men are singing like the sea.

Our forces fill the valleys full; the plain is overflowing;
Our bayonets clothe the trampled earth like fields of sloping corn,
Above the distant mountain tops, the light is slowly growing,
A scarlet cord is in the east and soon it will be morn.

We're marching on to freedom through the blood-red light of morning;
The cannon roar behind us, and the dead are falling fast.
You can see our patient faces, in the crimson of the dawning;
We've suffered through the weary night but day has come at last.

For we're beaten—beaten—beaten! Let the joyous news be shouted;
We've lost the tyrant's battle now, and soon we shall be free.
Wronged, robbed, oppressed, tormented, imprisoned, exiled, knouted,
A hundred million Russian Slavs are rising like the sea.

Factory Patrons Make Merry.

The new cheese factory, owned by Mr. Duncan Ketcheson, in the fourth concession of Sidney, was the scene of a jolly gathering on Friday evening. The patrons of the factory, with their wives, in all about one hundred, met to enjoy an oyster supper and, as one of the number tells it, "We had a rare good time." They do say that four of the party had a little race in oyster eating. After the supper Miss Sharpe recited and Mr. and Mrs. Waddell sang, all giving a great deal of pleasure to their hearers. Then Mr. Ketcheson made a rattling good speech, incidentally giving his patrons some good advice re the care of milk, pails, etc. Mr. Marvin made an ideal chairman. After the singing of the National Anthem the happy party departed to their several homes and the new factory settled down to a little quiet time before the opening of the '05 season.

A Pineapple Plantation.

The first operation in starting a pineapple plantation is to cut off the hammock growth and clear the area, though the stumps of the larger trees are left standing. The "slips," which are simply growths from the old plants, are usually put in with a pointed stick at the rate of 12,000 to the acre. The first crop matures in about eighteen months, and when three crops are secured, in as many years, the fields are abandoned for this culture, the surface again cleared and planted in tomatoes.

Facts About Breathing.

In the ordinary respiration of man 16 or 17 cubic inches of atmospheric air pass into the lungs 20 times a minute, or a cubic foot every 5¼ minutes—274 cubic feet in 24 hours. The lungs hold 280 cubic feet. At each respiration 1.375 of oxygen is converted into carbonic acid gas. The nitrogen inspired and expired is exactly equal. During the act of inspiration the lungs have been found to be the coldest parts of the body.

TOO MUCH MARRIED MAN.

GORDON FLEMING AT WINDSOR, CONVICTED OF FRAUD.

A despatch to the Globe from Windsor bearing date of March 20th says: "Gordon Fleming, who says his home is on Mutual street, Toronto, was to-day sentenced by Magistrate Bartlett to nine months in the Central Prison for obtaining goods under false pretences from J. W. Peddle & Co., dry goods merchants, of this city.

"Fleming, who is but 24 years old, has a penchant for getting married, and, the police say, he is now the husband of no less than three different women. His first matrimonial venture was in 1902, when he was married to Miss Bertha Ackerman, a young woman of Belleville, Ont. In the summer of 1904 Fleming, having deserted his first wife, was married to Miss Anna C. Hurlburt, of Rochester, N.Y., in that city. He went to Detroit about January 1st last, and lost no time in becoming engaged to Miss Edith Kane, a stenographer, upon whom he also bestowed his name. None of the wives will prosecute Fleming for bigamy.

He had been but a short time a resident of the city as of late years he had been living in the Western States. Those who were acquainted with him speak in praise of his worth as a companion and a friend. He was unmarried. Deceased was a member of the Methodist church.

Cured of Piles.

TRIAL PACKAGE MAILED FREE.

I got a fifty cent box of Pyramid Pile Cure at the drug store, and used it and was entirely cured; got another box in case I needed it, and as the piles did not return in six months I gave the remedy to a friend of mine, who wanted the doctor to operate to cure him. My friend said he would use the "Pyramids," but he knew they would do him no good, but they cured him of piles of twenty-five years' standing. I am free from Piles to-day, and have been since using Pyramid Pile Cure. I was captain in the Civil War."—Jas. Adams, Soldiers' Home, Cal.

The majority of people labor under the impression that an operation is necessary in severe cases of piles, or hemorrhoids, and are very skeptical regarding the remedial virtues of any medicinal compound. Testimony like the above should certainly have a tendency to dispel this impression, although it is odd that such a fallacy should prevail, and still more odd that so many people should think an operation effects a permanent cure, whereas the contrary is more often the case.

Just send your name and address to Pyramid Drug Co., 2111 Main St., Marshall, Mich., and receive free by return mail the trial package in a plain wrapper. Thousands have been cured in this easy, painless and inexpensive way, in the privacy of the home. No knife and its torture. No doctor and his bills.

Defence For Rielly The Doctor's Evidence.

Mr. Johnston's Masterly Address to the Jury—Very Affecting in the Pathetic Passages, But Strikingly Weak as to Argument—Great Deal of Evidence Repeated—A New Detail Regarding Hawkey's Ballots.

MONDAY AFTERNOON SESSION. (CONTINUED.)

The reading of Rielly's former testimony was concluded at 3 o'clock.

Col. Sherwood was called. He arrested Rielly in Kingston, when the latter was in a hospital. He cautioned Rielly as to what he might say being used against him. Rielly admitted that he had written the letter of warning to Carscallen at Watertown. Rielly said he had nothing to keep back. Rielly came up to Belleville in custody. No threat or inducement was made to Rielly, but he was asked for a statement, which he gave Col. Sherwood and which was then signed by Rielly, and was dated November 24, 1904.

Mr. Johnston objected, but Rielly's statement was read. It practically told the same story as Rielly told in the witness box the next day after he had given it to Col. Sherwood.

Cross-examined, Col. Sherwood said that Rielly was a sick man when he saw him in Kingston hospital. They had a warrant for Rielly's arrest. Warrants at that time were out for Shibley and B. O. Lott. The statement was secured after Rielly had been arrested. Regarding the interview between Rielly and Col. Sherwood, the prisoner's counsel seemed to be trying to get that officer to admit duress on his part, but the worst admission he got was that Rielly was under arrest when he gave the statement. Col. Sherwood said he made no suggestions to Rielly at all.

Mr. Johnston was very emphatic in his remarks to the witness, and the Judge said: "Oh! be fair to the witness." This was because Col. Sherwood had stated in direct examination, that what he said might be used against him, but had not so stated in cross-examination. Rielly's statement to him, Col. Sherwood said, was not verbatim, but was correct in substance. Rielly had read it over before he signed it. Rielly had told him that he had sent either $8 or $10 to Carscallen in Watertown to persuade that party to keep his mouth shut. Rielly was given to understand, when he made the statement, that it was for Mr. Shepley's information.

The Judge remarked that Mr. Shepley had a perfect right to receive the statement, as he was acting for the Dominion Government. He had a right to obtain such information for Crown purposes.

Miss McRae again went into the box and was instructed to compare her original notes of question 51, page 300, with the typewritten report of evidence at the first examination. It turned out that the word "any" had been left out in transcribing the shorthand notes.

PHIL LOTT'S SAME STORY.

Phil Lott was the next witness and told the same story, now familiar to all newspaper readers.

There was quite a legal scrap when Phil was asked to identify the letter written by Rielly to B. O. Lott, and Mr. Johnston fought hard to prevent it, but the Judge ruled against him. Again Phil swore that Ruttan carried the letter from Shibley to Rielly, when he and Ruttan went on their memorable drive from Harrowsmith to Kingston. Rielly seemed to get a little excited during Phil Lott's testimony, and looked at Phil sometimes as though he would like to hypnotize him.

Cross-examined by Mr. Johnston, Phil said the only thing he got out of the conspiracy was the case in which the bogus boxes came. He papered the case and used it for a "sock box." He did not act as he did to betray his brother, but to stop a wrong. The only box he had ever seen at first was in the possession of his brother. Phil could not say how long he had been in "the detective business."

Mr. Johnston made a great point over the fact that Phil had betrayed his brother's confidence. He was right after the witness, but the latter rather more than held his own when he said he never tried to show his brother up till the latter tried to drag him into the scheme, and put him in peril. The first day Byron told him of the matter he (Phil) told his wife of the scheme, and that he would expose it if he could.

"And while you were plotting against your brother," said Mr. Johnston, "you were eating his bread."

Phil looked at him, with crossed arms. "I generally buy my own," he said, and everybody smiled.

Mr. Johnston asked Phil a question, and the latter did not answer to suit him.

"How far do you want me to go?" said Phil.

"As far as your conscience will let you," said the lawyer; "I don't know how far that would be."

SAYS STRATTON SETTLED.

The question of the payment, by Byron, of Phil's fine for illegally selling liquor was brought up by Mr. Johnston, and Phil rather scored when he said the fine was paid through an understanding with Mr. J. R. Stratton.

"Do you not know," said Mr. Johnston, "that you are charged as a co-conspirator with the others charged in this indictment?"

Phil admitted that he did, but didn't see how it could hold, as he meant from the start to expose the matter.

There was a sharp battle of wits between the lawyer and Phil, but the former, so far, had got very little the best of it. Phil was making a fine witness; Mr. Johnston, no doubt, came across many "easier" in his time. If he had not intended to expose the plot, Phil said, he would never have gone to Kingston at the request of his brother. Up to the very day of the exposure he had never given his brother reason to believe that he was not in accord with his views and actions. The lawyer was doing his level best to discredit Phil's honesty and straightforwardness. Phil acknowledged that he had lied to his brother only once, and that was on the morning of election. Mr. Johnston said he was not there to argue ethics with a man like Phil, and got rid of some lofty moral ideas. He told Phil that the Crown charged him with conspiracy, and he (Mr. Johnston) meant to try and help prove it, if he could. Phil was surely having the time of his life, but made no admissions which tended to change his present position in the matter. Phil said he lied to Byron on election morning because the latter had a revolver in his pocket, and he (Phil) was afraid of him. Byron, Phil said, would commit perjury at any time to get even with him. Ruttan, Phil said, had suggested the name Hughes for him to pass under in Kingston, as it might be unwise to use the name Lott.

Re-examined in connection with the fine that his brother had refunded, Phil said he had received signatures of several prominent people and magistrates asking that his fine be remitted. He had seen Mr. Stratton, and the latter said it would be fixed up between Mr. Stratton and his brother. His brother had told him the money came from Toronto.

At 6.15 the court adjourned till 9.30 a.m. Tuesday.

Tuesday Morning Session.

It was said that one of the petty jurors, James Peacock, of North Hastings, was quite seriously ill. He is not on the Rielly panel, however.

Patrick Cotter, the lad from Watertown, identified Rielly as the man who had been there in connection with the manufacture of the bogus boxes. Twenty of them were finished, the witness said. He, personally, the witness said, had cut out the covers of the boxes. His employer, Mr. Roof, had done the rest of the work. The boxes were shipped to Ogdensburg when they were completed. The witness had seen Rielly on two occasions in Watertown.

Cross-examined by Mr. Johnston, Patrick said he saw the bill on one of the boxes, which showed him that it was going to Ogdensburg. He could not swear positively that the boxes present in court were the ones made in Watertown. That was about the only matter of importance obtained by Mr. Johnston from the witness, who stuck to his story as told at the preliminary investigation. The Judge interfered for the protection of the witness when Mr. Johnston was trying to pin him down to unimportant details.

Re-examined by Mr. Hellmuth, Cotter said he was ordered to leave the shop when ballot-box matters were being discussed.

Mr. George Thrasher, of Stirling, was next. He repeated his former testimony in regard to sending $50 from Lott to Shibley, and read the letter which accompanied the money.

SHIPMENT OF BOXES.

Thos. E. Whalen told the story of how he had brought over the cases containing the bogus ballot-boxes, at the request of Frank J. Rielly, from Ogdensburg, and afterwards shipped the cases to Kerfoot, Phil Lott and Bremner. He had received a letter from Rielly telling him where to ship the cases. He did not know what the cases contained. He had paid the express charges, but had been repaid by Rielly, receiving $10 in all.

Cross-examed by Mr. Johnston, Mr. Whalen acknowledged that he had been indicted for conspiracy in connection with the matter. The reason he brought over the boxes at night was because he had to work in the day time. Rielly had told him this was none of his business, as he was simply doing it to oblige a friend.

Harry H. Wells, express agent at Prescott, testified to shipping the cases containing the bogus boxes.

In cross-examination Mr. Wells denied that he had either winked or nodded to Phil Lott when the latter came to see him in Prescott.

Dennis P. Horan, hotel-keeper at Prescott, testified that he saw Rielly and another man at his hotel when he and Lott were coming back from Watertown.

Henry Kelly, express agent at Central Ontario Junction, proved by his books that a case had been received on October 28, addressed to P. A. Lott. The box was delivered to Phil on that day. A box addressed to John Bremner, at Bancroft, also passed through his office.

Charles Cochrane, proprietor of the Albion Hotel, Kingston, again swore that he had been instructed by Ruttan to sign for the boxes addressed to Kerfoot.

Patrick Shortell, clerk for Returning Officer Franklin, of Frontenac, at the last Dominion election, again told the story of how Hawkey had "held out" 25 ballots on Mr. Franklin.

Mr. Johnston objected to Shortell's evidence, but His Lordship ruled that it should be given.

Shortell in cross-examination, said he did not know what Hawkey did with the ballots he retained.

In cross-examination Shortell said they (Mr. Franklin and himself) did not know at first how many ballots they had received from the printer.

Mr. F. J. Chadwick, of the Chancery Office, Ottawa, gave the same evidence as at the Ruttan trial.

Thos. Tapping again swore that a bogus box was used at the Clarendon and Miller poll last election day, where Hawkey was returning officer. In Kingston a few days after the election he saw the box which was alleged to have been used at Clarendon and Miller, and saw at once that it was not the one used there by Hawkey.

NEW EVIDENCE HERE.

John McDonald corroborated the evidence of Thos. Tappings. After the poll closed the ballots were turned out into a cheese box, counted and then put back into the ballot-box. Then they made up their returns. The ballots were opened out then, of course. Then the ballots were taken out and put in envelopes. When the box was apparently empty Hawkey turned it upside down and struck it with his hand, when a ballot, which had not been unfolded, fell out. The witness asked Hawkey how it came that that ballot had not been unfolded, and Hawkey said they sometimes got overlooked in that way. This was new evidence.

Robert Emmet Harpell gave practically the same testimony as at the Ruttan trial, in regard to drowning the boxes.

In cross-examination the witness declined to admit that he suspected there was anything wrong in the matter. He did not give the matter much thought.

Archibald Forsyth, telegraph operator at Harrowsmith, testified as to certain telegrams which had passed between Shibley and B. O. Lott. One in particular corroborated the story told by Phil Lott regarding a telegram sent by his brother telling Shibley to meet him (Phil) at Harrowsmith station.

Detective Parkinson again told the story of the rescue of the now historic boxes which found a watery grave at the hands of Ruttan and Harpell.

Fred Clarke, telegraph operator at Anson station, proved the passage of the telegram sent by B. O. Lott to Shibley, telling the latter to meet Phil Lott.

Mr. E. Guss Porter told how Phil Lott had disclosed the plot to him, and how he had sent out after the boxes.

The Crown's case was declared closed.

Mr. Johnston said the Crown's case had not lasted so long as he thought it would, and he was compelled to ask for a little time. One of his witnesses was coming from Kingston on the 11.20 train.

The Judge said it was now 11.12, and they would wait.

In the meantime the Crown Prosecutor said he thought he would go and confer with the Grand Jury about the criminal libel case.

The missing witness arrived, and the court again went into session.

THE DEFENCE.

Dr. Arthur Williamson, of Kingston, who was connected with the Hotel Dieu, in that city, said he remembered when Rielly was in the Hotel Dieu. He was suffering from nervous exhaustion. A man in that condition was unable to think consecutively or coherently. In an advanced condition there might be delusions. The witness said that, considering Rielly's condition last November, he should have remained in hospital at least a week longer. He advised Rielly not to go to Belleville, but did not forbid his going. The Doctor said he would be of the opinion that Rielly, at the time of his arrest last November, would be liable to imagine things after reading about the case.

To Mr. Hellmuth the Doctor said he had not forbidden Rielly to go to Belleville. He would not consider that he would do more than exaggerate incidents. He would not be liable to misstate facts.

"That's the defence, my Lord," said Mr. Johnston.

ADDRESS TO THE JURY.

At 11.45 Mr. Johnston began his address to the Jury. In all criminal trials, he said, the innocent always suffered for the guilty. Did they think that this young man was a prime mover in this affair, or would they fasten the guilt upon the chief conspirators, who had originated the devilish plot? Was it fair to try to fasten this crime upon his client, a man without a dollar, arrayed against him being all the forces of the Government? Was it fair to his client?

Rielly was much affected as Mr. Johnson's eloquent words rang out. He was making a most pathetic and eloquent appeal.

Twelve good men and true, he said, stood between that young man and the penitentiary. They, if they find his client guilty, took that young man, in the threshold of life, a mere boy, from the dock, and sent him to a felon's cell. This young man, the sole support of a widowed mother, a young had, full of life and full of hope, struggling along as he best he can, teaching in the college at Kingston to earn a little money to fit him for a profession; this young man they must remember, had refused to accept the money of Lott and Shibley and leave the country. He felt a consciousness of innocence, so far as the laws of the land were concerned.

Where were the chief conspirators, Lott and Shibley? Where were they? Perhaps sitting, chuckling over the fact that they were free, and this innocent young man was to be offered up as a victim for their iniquity. Should it be said, that a Jury of the County of Hastings would punish a young and trusting man while older and more guilty men went scot free? The origin of the conspiracy was with Lott and Shibley, the men who wanted to be members of Parliament, but could not be honestly elected. They had not the courage to do their own work, and so cast about for some one who would be as potter's clay in their hands. They chose Rielly. Mr. Johnston characterized Phil Lott as a man whom neither the Jury or he would trust with a dollar. Shibley had a young friend. The plot was formed long before Rielly was approached. Rielly trusted Shibley, and was deceived. To-day Shibley sits laughing at Canadian justice, and the young friend, who had served him only too well, where was he? "Oh!" the law says, "we will have a victim: Frank J. Rielly will be the votive offering. The accused was interested in politics, as all young men ought to be. He had no axe to grind, had no interests to serve, other than the interests of friendship. To-day he was charged with a crime which might give him seven years in the penitentiary, and all in the interests of a friend. There was the prisoner, ready for his doom, if a Jury could be found to send him to the penitentiary. How easy it would have been to follow Lott and Shibley if he had felt a guilty conscience. The crime of conspiracy was defined by the counsel. It must be clear to the Jury's mind that Lott, Shibley and Rielly entered into the matter with a common object in view. It was for them to say whether Rielly was a conspirator or a victim. If they found that he entered into the matter only as a matter of friendship, and without thought of evil intent in a definite way, there must be an acquittal. They were not trying Rielly on the moral wrong. That would come before a higher tribunal. Perhaps he had repented over that already. They could see by the evidence how the conspirators had drawn their meshes round Rielly, while they protected themselves. He was not there to defend everything done by Rielly, but he did claim that Rielly did not become a criminal, but would admit that he had been foolish. In regard to the bogus boxes, Mr. Johnston claimed that no actual wrong in connection with the boxes had been proved. Mr. Johnston called Phil Lott a scoundrel, and said he was the chief among ten thousand conspirators. He was the chief conspirator and the Crown's star witness. He asked them, would they trust their goods, their life and liberty to a man like Philip A. Lott? Was there a jury who would hang a dog on Phil's evidence? B. O. Lott was in California, perhaps; Shibley was in safety; Phil Lott was walking round, protected by the Crown; was it right that those three scoundrels should go free and a man like his client be convicted? Would they tell him, what had his client to gain in the matter? Where was the inducement for Rielly to enter into a conspiracy with those two men double his age? Whatever Rielly did was not done on political grounds, it was for a man whom he admired, a man high up in the county, a man who had been kind to him and his family, kind to his mother when his father was taken away—was it any wonder that Frank J. Rielly fell a victim to circumstances? What a difference between his client and Phil Lott. Lott disguised himself, suppressed evidence and acknowledged that he lied. Rielly had done none of these things. In the land that Rielly's ancestors came from they did not treat informers so well as Phil Lott was being treated here—walking around brazen-faced in the light of day. The lawyer scorched Phil with all sorts of superlatives. One would almost think it would take away his appetite for dinner. Mr. Johnston drew a pathetic picture of Rielly, in the years to come, providing he were condemned, coming out of the penitentiary, branded as a convict, and the lawyer said he would, if that came about, rather be in Rielly's place than that of Philip A. Lott. Rielly had been put in the witness box, by the Crown, when he was not physically fit to give evidence. Throughout the whole transaction Rielly's life had been as open as the noonday sun. Was that the act of a conspirator? Had Rielly ever tried to cover a single track? When the others were plotting in the dark, when they were sacrificing their friends, when the great patriot, Philip A. Lott, was betraying his brother's trust, Frank J. Rielly's actions were as open as the day. Was that the conduct of a conspirator? It was for the jury to say whether or not Rielly was a victim. If they were satisfied that he was, then it was their duty to acquit him. If they were satisfied that he was a member of the gang, then it was their duty to convict him, and every man on the jury had the right to his own opinion. The counsel said there was only the evidence of Phil Lott and Rielly's own admissions against his client. The lawyer drew a picture of Rielly, a lamb led to the sacrifice by two political candidates and an insurance agent. The friend of his boyhood had given him the advice which brought him to the prisoner's dock. And yet Col. Sherwood, a Government official, evidently enjoyed the fact that he had succeeded in obtaining a statement from Rielly incriminating himself. Could they call to mind a case wherein Rielly had approached anybody in the matter? Did he approach Ruttan, another man who goes free? Did he approach anybody? No! What he did he did as the victim, the man who was to be offered up, while Lott, Shibley and the others should go free. Where is Ruttan? Like Phil Lott, a free man; Bremner and Hawkey were free, too, but the sword of vengeance was held over Rielly's head, the knife was in the jury's hands, and

PHONES FOR FARMERS

Sir Wm. Mulock Outlines Work For Municipalities.

Charges for Telephone Service Could Be Added to the Tax Bill—Government Could Deal With the Municipality and the Latter Could Deal With the Individual Subscriber—Special Committee at Work.

Ottawa, March 21.—The special committee appointed to enquire into the telephone question held its first meeting yesterday morning, with eight of the eleven members present. It began work as if it meant business. Sir William Mulock, who was unanimously voted into the chair, outlined the scope of the committee. He had arranged with an officer of the Department of Justice to prepare for the committee a summary of all the legislation bearing on Canadian telephone companies. In addition to this the committee expressed a desire for information as to the operation of telephone systems in the United States, Australia, Scandinavia and Denmark.

Patents Not a Consideration.

He intimated to a member of the committee that the question of phone patents was not worth consideration, since the Government could override any patent. Sir William promised to furnish the committee with a report obtained by one of his officers some years ago.

W. F. Maclean suggested that some one should be employed to make special enquiry into the phone situation in the United Kingdom. It was necessary, he said, that the committee should have facts as to the working of the different systems.

Sir William Mulock said he intended to summon officers of the Bell Telephone Co. and get from them all available information as to the working of their system and the capital invested.

Importance to Rural Districts.

Sir William spoke of the importance of the phone to the rural districts. He thought no scheme would be satisfactory which did not provide for the serving of isolated individuals in the country with telephones at reasonable rates. The farmer, he thought, was chiefly interested in getting phone communication with his neighbor and his market town. The long-distance was less important to the farming community. The success of rural phones depended largely on the development of the automatic service system. Sir William said he had heard of systems where a dozen subscribers could have phone communication without a central station.

Let Municipalities Work It.

Sir William suggested that rural phones might be brought within reach of rural residents through machinery provided by the municipality. By co-operation, the municipalities could create municipal services and place the charges in the tax bills, assessing, of course, only phone subscribers. This would save the Government a lot of trouble. The municipality could apply to the Government to establish a system in a certain district and the municipality could deal with the individual.

Mr. Maclean said the phone and the telegraph and the parcel post should be centred in the post office, and the municipal services should be connected one group with another and also the trunk lines.

Sir William Mulock said he desired it to be known that any evidence or information the public could furnish the committee would be gladly accepted.

The committee decided to call Mr. Dagger, of Toronto, to appear before the committee at its next meeting, which will be held next Wednesday.

THE AUTONOMY BILLS.

Premier Announces Change in the Educational Clauses—Second Reading Set for Wednesday.

Ottawa, March 21.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier announced yesterday afternoon in the House that the autonomy bills will be proceeded with on Wednesday. He announced an amendment to the educational clause, as follows:

The Proposed Amendment.

Section 93 of the B. N. A. Act, 1867, shall apply to the said province, with a substitution for sub-section 1 of said section 93 of the following sub-section:

(1) Nothing in any such law shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to separate schools which any class of persons have at the date of the passing of this act, under the terms of chapters 29 and 30 of the ordinances of the Northwest Territories, passed in the year 1901.

(2) In the appropriation by the Legislature or distribution by the Government of the province of any money for the support of schools organized and carried on in accordance with said chapter 29 or any act passed in amendment thereof or in substitution therefor, there shall be no discrimination against schools of any class described in the said chapter 29.

(3) Where the expression "by law" is employed in sub-section 3 of the said section 93, it shall be held to mean the law as set out in the said chapters 29 and 30, and where the expression "at the union" is employed in said sub-section 3 it shall be held to mean the date at which this act comes into force.

EXPLOSION KILLED 60

Brockton, Mass., the Scene of an Awful Disaster.

Boiler Exploded in a Shoe Factory Crowded With Operatives of Both Sexes—Unknown Number of Men and Women Incinerated in Building Burned to the Ground—Specimen Instances of Wonderful Heroism.

Brockton, Mass., March 21.—The city is in mourning for at least three score of her citizens, whose lives were blotted out last night by the explosion of a boiler in a large shoe manufacturing establishment in the Campello district, conducted by the R. G. Grover Co.

The explosion was immediately followed by a fire, which consumed the factory, a long four-storey structure, as if it were a house of cards and incinerated an unknown number of men and women, who were unable to extricate themselves from a mass of tangled wreckage formed by the terrific upheaval in the boiler-room. More than half a hundred of the employes in the building were maimed, burned or bruised by the time they reached safe ground.

Emitted Heat of an Inferno.

Some had jumped in the mad rush to escape from the doomed factory, which from all parts emitted the intense, awful heat of an inferno, driving back the rescuers, who in a few moments had performed gallant service.

The explosion, which was followed by such a sacrifice of life and appalling instances of human suffering, occurred shortly after the operatives had settled down to the work of the day. Suddenly the air vibrated with the roar of an explosion. At the same moment the larger wooden frame of the factory, a four-storey structure, quivered and then the rear portion of it collapsed. In a fraction of a second this section of the great building was transformed into a mass of iron and wood wreckage, in the midst of which human beings were pinioned. In another moment flames broke out in the debris and death by fire and suffocation became the fate of scores of the operatives.

Up Like a Bird.

When the boiler exploded it passed upward almost perpendicularly, tearing a passage as it went, and killing many on the way. After rising high in the air, it descended half the distance, and, swerving northerly, cut its way like some huge projectile, through a dwelling 50 feet away and another dwelling farther on, demolishing the latter structure. Here its course was stopped.

Had Narrow Escape.

The house to the north of the factory, through which the exploded boiler crashed, was owned and occupied by David W. Rockwell, the engineer in charge of the boiler, who was among the killed. Mrs. Rockwell, who was sitting by the kitchen stove, had a miraculous escape from death, receiving many cuts from flying bits of timber. Crawling through the mass, Mrs. Rockwell snatched up her two children, who were uninjured, and started for the home of the nearest neighbor, Mrs Etta Hood. She found this cottage had been rent asunder by the boiler, the head of which was buried in the middle of the structure. Miss Ella Pratt, 78 years old, who was in the house, was knocked down and stunned, but recovered.

Veritable Fiery Furnace.

Scenes of horror followed the rending apart of the factory building. Many fell into a veritable fiery furnace. In the sections of the factory which remained standing the operatives were panic-stricken as they sought escape.

Many fled down the stairways and reached the street, others ran to the windows, the fire escapes in many cases having been torn away by the explosion. In desperation many jumped from the second and third storey windows to the ground and were dangerously injured. The crush on the stairways resulted in numerous minor injuries.

Scarcely had the rear portion of the structure collapsed when a tongue of flame started up from the boiler pit, communicating with the splintered wreckage, and soon the entire factory was in flames. Instant death was the fate of many who went down with the floors that collapsed. Many pinned beneath the timbers were roasted to death.

Heroes and Heroines Live Yet!

By this time nearby citizens had arrived to assist the employes who aided in the rescue of their fellows. The task became momentarily more difficult and perilous, for the heat from the fire was almost unbearable.

Then it was that acts of sacrifice and heroism were seen. One man, whose legs were caught under an iron beam, cried to the rescuers that they could not extricate him and to help the girls behind him. Stretching out his arms, he lifted several girls, one by one and passed them to the rescuers. Then the fire reached him and he died.

Begged to Be Shot.

A woman who was entangled in a shoe machine cried out that she was dying and commanded the rescuers to attend to others who might live. She begged to be shot. Soon the flames enveloped her.

Treasurer C. O. Woerson, of the Grover Company estimated the loss of the factory at $200,000, and the aggregate of loss on the burned structures was placed at about $50,000. The Grover factory, machinery and stock were insured for $200,000.

Don't Neglect Catarrh

When a Cure is so Easy.

It is dangerous to trifle with catarrh. The inflammation in the nostrils extends to the ears, causing deafness. The discharge is carried to the stomach, kidneys and liver, setting up catarrh of these vital organs. Why not cure yourself now, and be rid of this loathsome, dangerous disease? Japanese Catarrh Cure cures Catarrh at once. It relieves the head pains, stops the discharge and droppings in the throat. It is pleasant to use, no atomizers or syringes are required. And Japanese Catarrh Cure does cure catarrh permanently. Here's what an English clergyman says about it:

"I regret that I cannot get Japanese Catarrh Cure here, and enclose post-office order for six boxes. Japanese Catarrh Cure is the only medicine of the many I have tried that has done me any real good."

CARBOLIC ON HER HEAD.

Emma Heath, Aged 14, Dies in Kingston Hospital.

Kingston, March 21.—An unfortunate accident took place at the General Hospital. Emma Heath, aged 14, was being treated for anaemia and was also troubled with vermin. A nurse had taken her over to the sink to bathe her head and had poured out some carbolic acid in a dish intending to dilute it. While she was putting the bottle back on the shelf, the girl took the dish and poured the pure acid over her head, probably thinking it was diluted, as the same treatment had been given before. The nurse at once applied the antidote, alcohol. But all efforts were unavailing, and the child soon after became unconscious and died within two hours, with all the symptoms of poisoning. Coroner Mundell made an investigation and declared death was due to shock and carbolic poisoning, and decided an inquest was unnecessary. The family are in destitute circumstances, both parents being in the hospital, and the children cared for at the Orphans' Home.

Swept Over the Falls.

Niagara Falls, March 21.—An Italian called Frenchy, while shoving ice out of the entrance to the Canadian Niagara Power Co.'s forebay, lost his balance and slipped into the rushing waters of the main river, and was swept over the falls about 10.30 yesterday morning.

Dead Bodies Recovered.

Fire Creek, W. V., March 21.—The second rescuing party, which was organized Sunday, to enter the Rushrun and Red Ash mines to recover the bodies of the 24 men who are believed to have been killed by the explosions Saturday and Sunday, were able to enter the mine yesterday.

Deaths in the Flood.

Elmira, N. Y., March 21.—The Cheming River and its smaller tributary streams, which went on a rampage and did considerable damage Sunday, all receded yesterday, owing to the sudden drop in temperature. Three deaths, two in nearby villages and one in this city, resulted from the flood Sunday.

Forced to Leave Homes.

Meadville, Pa., March 21.—The streets in the southern and western portions of the city are inundated and scores of families have been forced to leave their homes. Many people are homeless and considerable property has been destroyed at South Sharon by a sudden rise in the Shenengo River.

THE LEGISLATURE.

All is Now Ready for the Opening, Wednesday, March 22.

Toronto, March 21.—The opening of the Legislature to-morrow afternoon promises to be an occasion of special interest and brilliance. A change of Government always incites that inate curiosity which makes one desire to see how the parties look under changed conditions. After thirty-two years, the satisfaction on the Conservative side is genuine and Mr. Whitney seems to enjoy the prospect. The Premier waited on the Lieutenant-Governor yesterday morning and spent some time at Government House discussing the speech from the Throne and arrangements for the opening.

The chamber is looking like a new pin after a thorough two weeks' house-cleaning, and all is ready for the session.

The opening ceremonies to-morrow at 3 o'clock will be heightened by the formal election of the new Speaker, which will be the occasion of Mr. Whitney's first speech as Premier. He will nominate J. W. St. John (West York). Richard Hareourt, acting leader of the Opposition while Mr. Ross is absent in the south, will probably be the seconder.

Monday, April 3, has been set as the last day for the presentation of petitions for private bills. The bills themselves must be introduced by April 10, and the committee on private bills must report by April 24. These dates will be strictly adhered to, which has not always been the custom. Col. Clarke, Clerk of the House, has already received a number of petitions for private bills. Chief of these are for new railways, and one asks for the incorporation of a new telephone company in Ontario.

T. F. Langworthy, of Port Arthur, has been appointed Crown Attorney for the District of Thunder Bay, succeeding D. Mills, son of Hon. David Mills, who held the position pro-tem since the elevation of the former encumbent, T. A. Gorham, to a judgeship.

WARSHIPS ORDERED SOUTH.

The French-Venezuelan Complications Have Reached Crisis.

Washington, March 21.—The French cable complication have reached a crisis and U. S. Minister Bowen has informed the State department that the French minister at Caracas, by instructions of his Government, has notified the Venezuelan Government that there must be no further proceedings on its part toward the cancellation of the company's franchise or interference with its property. Further, Mr. Bowen reports that two French warships have been ordered, post haste, to Venezuela, to act in accordance with the instructions of the French minister.

Mimico Lad Re-Captured.

Brockville, March 21.—Peter Baker, a bright lad of 14, was taken into custody about midnight Sunday night at the Grand Trunk station, where he was loitering about. On being locked up he acknowledged that he escaped from the Mimico Industrial School and was beating his way to Gananoque, where his parents reside. He was sentenced six months ago to a term of two years on a charge of theft.

Toronto, March 21.—Baker escaped from Mimico on Saturday afternoon, when five others, who also made a break for liberty, were recaptured. He will be brought back.

THE PITTSBURG FLOODS.

Mills Shutting Down and Over 20,000 Men Are Idle.

Pittsburg, Pa., March 22.—Pittsburg is threatened with one of the worst floods in years. Forecaster Ridgeway predicts over 30 feet. During the early hours yesterday, the water began to recede from the rise in the Allegheny, but a fresh impetus was given by a rainfall of nearly two inches over the entire watershed of the Monagahela River.

Last night about 50 miles above Pittsburg the Monagahela is rising 8 inches an hour, and at the harbor here the gauges show a rise of nearly 3 inches per hour.

Already a number of mills have shut down, the water putting out the fires, from three to five feet of water is expected up the valley and a total of 30,000 men are likely to be idle to-day.

Hundreds of houses in Allegheny, on the south side, and in McKeesport and other suburbs are surrounded by from two to eight feet of water.

The crest of the flood is expected about 9 p. m. Wednesday. It is threatening rain again to-day.

From Thunder Bay West.

Montreal, March 22.—It can now be stated authoritatively that the Grand Trunk Pacific will commence to build in the early spring from Thunder Bay west to the Pacific coast. It was for this purpose that the bonds to the amount of five million dollars were issued. This is the first work that will engage the attention of the company.

Falls From Ferry Boat.

Windsor, March 22.—Joseph Langlois, a carpenter, aged 70 years, fell off the Grand Trunk ferry Lansdowne in the Detroit River yesterday morning and was drowned. He was employed on the boat doing repair work. In attempting to draw a bucket of water he lost his balance and dropped into the river. He sank before aid reached him

Kuropatkin Still Stays.

Idol of Russian Soldiers Commands the First Army.

Volunteers His Services and His Offer is Gratefully Accepted by the Czar—Remarkable Farewell by Residents of Harbin and the Soldiers on His Leaving for the South —Russians Lost 175,000 at Mukden.

St. Petersburg, March 22.—The Russian army in Manchuria is still to have the services of Gen. Kuropatkin. Sinking all feeling of personal bitterness and all the old-time enmity between himself and Gen. Linevitch the former commander-in-chief volunteered to remain in any capacity with the army which he had so long commanded. The tender has been accepted by Emperor Nicholas and gratefully received by the new leader of the army. He is made commander of the First Manchurian army.

Authoritative news of this remarkable step was known in Manchuria, much earlier than in St. Petersburg. Gen. Kuropatkin, having paused on his homeward journey at Harbin, started southward the afternoon of March 20 amidst a most remarkable farewell from the residents of Harbin and soldiers who are on the way to fill out the ranks of the depleted army. The send-off was a mere foretaste of what awaits Gen. Kuropatkin at the front.

When Kuropatkin Wept.

Harbin, March 22.—At the departure southward of Gen. Kuropatkin crowds of thousands of civilians and soldiers gathered at the station and gave him a great ovation. Above thundering hurrahs were heard cries of "God send you happiness," "Good-by, brother," "Good-by, father." As the train started soldiers rushed forward in a surging crowd and grasped the handrail of the general's car, throwing their fur caps in the air and running some distance with the car. The scene made a deep impression on Gen. Kuropatkin, down whose face tears streamed. Removing his cap, he saluted again and again, and stood bareheaded on the platform of the car as long as the train was in sight.

Russians Lose 175,000.

Tokio, March 22.—No reports of the Russian retreat or Japanese pursuit were received yesterday, which is strengthening the belief that the Russian plan to hold the line from Changchun to Kirin.

The Japanese continue to follow closely Gen. Linevitch's rearguard, but the damaged bridges impede their progress and possibly will create sufficient delay to permit the Russians to reconcentrate, reinforce, partially reorganize, and construct works at Changchun and Kirin.

It is reported that a portion of the Vladivostock garrison has been withdrawn and sent to Harbin, but no confirmation of the rumor is obtainable.

Revised figures of the Japanese losses at the battle of Mukden place the number at 50,000, and revised estimates of the Russian losses from the commencement of the battle of Mukden and ending with the fighting at Tie Pass place the total at 175,000 killed, wounded or captured.

Third Pacific Squadron.

London, March 22.—A despatch from Canea, Island of Crete, says that the Russian third Pacific squadron, under Admiral Nebogatoff, has left Suda Bay for Port Said.

The correspondent at Aden of The Daily Mail reports that 34 steamers laden with 100,000 tons of coal were waiting at Jibutil for the Russian fleet, which is expected there at the end of the month.

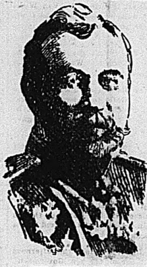
AT SUNGARI RIVER.

Gen. Linevitch Waiting for Defeated Armies to Cross.

St. Petersburg, March 22.—Gen. Linevitch's headquarters has been established for the present at Chenchiawatzu, situated at the crossing of the Sungari River, whence he is directing the retreat of the three armies and disposing of the fresh troops of the fourth corps just arriving from European Russia. The protection of the Sungari bridge is vital to the salvation of the army, as the river is not fordable below Kirin, and once the line of the river is passed and the bridge blown up the Japanese pursuit will be effectually checked. At the same time, the second army is falling back of the line of the railroad, while the first and third, with the transports, are retreating along the Mandarin road to Kirin, both destroying bridges and roads and denuding the country behind them, and making it impossible for the Japanese to live in the immediate wake of the retreat without their own commissariat.

What Are the Japs Doing?

The Japanese are advancing over the Grand Trade route, 20 miles west of the railroad. However, they could probably live on the country, the road just before the opening of the navigation of the Liao River being crowded with Chinese provisions on the way to market southward. Apparently it is a question as to which army will outmarch the other, although the General Staff seriously doubts the ability of Field Marshal Oyama's fatigued soldiers, with the difficulties of getting up guns, ammunition and provisions over the ruined roads, to continue the pursuit energetically. No information is available regarding the strength of the Japanese column advancing along the Grand Trade route, but the War Office says it is hardly large enough to constitute a menace, with the dispositions Gen. Linevitch is able to make of fresh troops. Nevertheless, St. Petersburg is in the dark as to the exact situation, and, considering the resourcefulness of the Japanese, there is constant fear that they may managed to get astride of the railroad and bar the Russians' retreat.



GEN. KUROPATKIN.

Retreated in Five Columns.

Kaopontze, March 22.—The Russians left Mukden with five columns of infantry, in the centre of which were two lines of commissariat, with artillery flanking the body, and cavalry acting as screens, farther afield. The demoralized troops discarded their boots and equipments and abandoned their transport carts, left guns and carriages, using the horses to save as many as possible.

Cossacks on Rampage.

All the last day at Tie Pass the Cossacks looted the booths of traders, sold champagne at a rouble a bottle, and smashed and burned everything unsalable. They caught a Japanese spy, who, upon resisting, was killed. The guilty Cossacks were shot a quarter of an hour later.

Rennenkampff Surrounded.

London, March 22.—Russian official circles in London are inclined to credit a Harbin story published in Paris, connecting the firing reported to have been heard Monday about seven miles south of Tie Pass with Gen. Rennenkampff's division. The despatch from Harbin points out that the only explanation of a cannonade in that locality is that Rennenkampff has at length arrived at Tie Pass, where the Russian armies were ordered to rendezvous in case of retreat, only to find the place occupied by the Japanese. Consequently it is feared that Rennenkampff is surrounded.

Russians Destroying Bridges.

Tokio, March 22.—The following announcement has been made: "Our detachment entered and occupied Kaiyuan Sunday morning at 4 o'clock. On the same day at 10.30 o'clock the enemy's cavalry, about 60 strong, with three companies of infantry, attempted a counter-attack, but was repulsed. Toward the northeast the bridges on the main road south of Kaiyuan has been burned by the enemy. The railway bridges have been partly destroyed. The number of guns captured near Mukden is increasing, owing to discoveries of those buried by the enemy before retreating."

Coal Carrier Captured.

Tokio, March 22.—The British steamer Harbarton, carrying coal to Vladivostock, was seized on Saturday by the Japanese.

DAIRYMEN IN CONVENTION.

PRACTICAL MEN DELIVER INSTRUCTIVE ADDRESSES AT PICTON ON SATURDAY.

Picton Gazette: A meeting of the Dairymen and Cheesemakers of Prince Edward Division No. 7 was held at the opera house on Saturday afternoon. Owing to the bad roads and rainy weather the attendance was not so large as it would have been under more favorable conditions. Mr. James R. Anderson, of Mountain View, director for the district, presided, and after a few opening remarks, called upon Mr. C. A. Publow, dairy inspector for Prince Edward who gave a report of his work done last season.

The next speaker was Mr. J. W. Mitchell, superintendent of Kingston Dairy School, who spoke on the "Production and Care of Milk." He recommended that each farmer should strive to get a better education of the dairy business. Better quality of milk, larger production, and a long milking period, were essential features in the business. These could only be accomplished by the raising of the herd to the highest possible standard of excellence and by most careful feeding and handling. As a substitute for the shortage of pasture he recommended the sowing of peas and oats in equal parts, about three bushels to the acre. This, he said, made an excellent feed, as it contained all the milk producing properties, and if not required to be fed could be ripened and harvested. He also outlined what the model cow-stable should be — whitewashed walls, cement floors, good ventilation, plenty of light, good water, and by all means clean and sanitary conditions should prevail. He then outlined what constituted inferior milk. First, "food taints," caused by feeding certain roots, or allowing cattle to pasture where they obtained certain weeds. Second, "impure air," caused by milking or allowing milk cans to be kept in close proximity to unsanitary places which contaminates the milk; and third, "germ plant life," the most common, and a result of uncleanliness in milking, or washing of cans and pails. The speaker dwelt at some length upon this point, showing the great necessity of using the utmost care in the washing of cans and protecting the milk from this latter defect.

Mr. D. Derbyshire, M. P., of Brockville, President of the E.O.D.A., next addressed the meeting, but as he came by afternoon train and desired to go out by same train, his remarks were cut short. He complimented the Dairymen of Prince Edward on having such a live representative as Mr. Anderson, to look after their interests, and also on having secured Mr. C. A. Publow, as inspector, whom he regarded as the best and most efficient of any. He next spoke of the buyers whom he said should be men of good standing and principle. They should study the industry from every point and help extend it. They were the go-between the manufacturer and consumer and should learn the wants of the latter, and be able to assist the former to produce it. Last year he said Canada exported $24,000,000 worth of cheese, the prices were fairly good and the industry was one of the best. He cautioned them to see that their goods were all put up in a neat, tasty manner. The branding, he said, should be stamped neatly upon each box, and plump weight given. He urged that attention be paid to the suggestions of the inspector, as they were made for the farmers' benefit. He closed by pointing out to the young men that great was the opportunity for them to remain on the farms and develop one of the greatest industries in existence, rather than flock to the cities, and live in a scanty, and in many cases, wanting condition.

Mr. G. G. Publow, Kingston, Chief Dairy Inspector, spoke for a few minutes to cheesemakers. He pointed out that they should be competent to show their patrons how to handle, prepare and deliver milk in order to obtain all that is in it. They should, he said, be clean and tasty in appearance, and work in harmony with their patrons. If they had to reject milk they should show the farmer how to remedy the evil. He closed by forecasting a prosperous season for 1905.

The meeting then closed.

DISMISS THOSE APPOINTED WITHIN LAST TWO YEARS.

EAST YORK CONSERVATIVES HAVE AN OPINION ON CIVIL SERVICE CONDITIONS.

Unionville, March 20.—As an aftermath of a recent meeting of the Norway Conservative Association, at which some dissent was manifested regarding the appointment of the license commissioners in East York, a general meeting of the riding association was called by President Alexander Pringle, and was held in Victoria Hall this afternoon. It resulted in a unanimous endorsation of the selection and course of Alex. McCowan, the member for East York, and also in the proposal and adoption of a resolution of rather startling proportions. T. B. Willis moved and Wm. Latham seconded a demand that all civil servants appointed by the Ontario Government within the past two years be now summarily dismissed. It was stated that the Liberal government had been in a minority during that time, and Mr. McCowan was deputed to present this resolution as a memorial to Premier Whitney and his Cabinet. There was not a dissentient voice. Although some of those present counselled delay in the matter, the principle was heartily endorsed.

Daily Intelligencer.

TWO LIBERAL PREMIERS.

A correspondent of the Toronto News, Mr. W. C. Washington, of Barrie, writes the following trenchant letter to that paper:

"As you are well aware, there are thousands in Ontario (of whom I am one), who loved, honored, believed in and supported Hon. G. W. Ross. But in course of time, for reasons that seemed to them sufficient, with the freeman's weapon, most reluctantly, they helped to overthrow the Government. These men did more reading and writing, and more thinking than talking, so that the greatness of their number was not suspected, until the votes were counted.

"Likewise, in this broad Dominion, there are many more who loved and honored, yes, almost idolized Sir Wilfrid Laurier, because (though French-Canadian and Roman Catholic), he was so gifted and so broad-minded, so free from sectarian bigotry, so eminently fitted to fill the highest position in our great Dominion. But now these men are saying: 'How is the gold become dim! How is the most fine gold changed!' 'Our idol is but common clay.' The broad-mindedness seems to have shrivelled into sectionalism. The sectarian spirit is only too evident. The great Liberal chieftain who, in 1896, manfully and successfully resisted those who sought to fetter the new-born Province of the West, now seems determined to rivet worse fetters upon the twin sister Provinces about to be. As surely as the day of reckoning came to the Premier of Ontario and his foremost followers, so surely will the day of reckoning come to the Premier of Canada and his steadfast allies. Those who occupy the low ground of political and party expediency, instead of the higher ground of enlightened patriotism, if they can only read aright "the signs of the times," will 'stand from under.' 'A prudent man foreseeth the evil, and hideth himself; but the simple pass on, and are punished'"

The question of a free bay bridge will be the chief business of the meeting. The transportation question in connection with bay points will also be dealt with. These matters are of vital importance to every business man in Belleville, and therefore, as we said before, it behooves every one of them to be at the meeting on Friday night.

"I suppose all revenue officers are guilty of that more or less." The public will be loth to believe that. Mr. Whalen, by the way, expects to be reinstated in his position.

In justice to Mr. Whalen it may be stated that he denies entirely making the statement attributed to him by the Toronto paper; in fact denies talking to the representative of the paper in question at all.

We notice that the Council are again talking about the market tolls, tenders for which, for the coming year, are to be advertised for shortly. And in this connection an incident is related which is apt to make one think a little. A party tells us that, last year, he noticed the advertisement asking for tenders for the market tolls, and sent in a tender which was about $300 higher than the one accepted. He also pledged himself to keep the rents paid up one month in advance. In the face of this the Council turned down the highest tender and gave the market to the present lessee.

Under these circumstances the party in question asks what use there is in anybody tendering for the market tolls? When one Council turns down the highest tender, which guarantees payment in advance, what reason is there to expect that the next Council will not do the same? To most people, we think, the idea will commend itself that one man's money is as good as another's, and that it is the duty of the Council to obtain the highest rent possible for the market tolls.

PROGRESS OF THE CAMPAGIN.

Along the Sungari River is the scene of immediate interest in the war. The race for the great bridge crossing the river has been apparently won by General Linevitch, who is temporarily establishing himself there and endeavoring to reconcentrate his army. Part of his army is retreating towards Kirin, from where it is probable, there will be very shortly news of another battle.

The possession of the bridge over the Sungari is of great moment to General Linevitch, as the river is unfordable there, and he may be able to hold that position till the army retreating northward reaches Harbin. He would appear to be reasonably sure of its safety, for in his report to St. Petersburg he stated that he had allowed the men a day's rest.

To the Japanese it is of the utmost importance to be established on the Sungari before navigation opens, about the end of next month or the beginning of May, when the country roads will be mere mud tracks. For this reason they will likely first make for Kirin, toward which there is a report that General Kamamura is marching through the mountains east of the railway and the Imperial Highway.

One explanation of the firing reported two days ago south of Tie Pass is that General Rennenkampff has reached there with his men and is engaging the Japanese. It would indeed be the irony of fate if that general, after his brilliant fighting in the mountains southeast of Mukden, had succeeded in extricating his division and in bringing them off safely only to be eaten up by the victorious Japanese at Mukden.

Whatever immediate movement is developing on the part of the Japanese it is inevitable that Oyama must take Harbin, and, once in possession of that point, can live off the country for the coming year, so far as food is concerned, inasmuch as Manchuria is one of the great grain producing regions of the world. It would be incomparably easier to feed a great Japanese army in Manchuria than it would be to nourish a Russian army of equal size in the neighborhood of Lake Baikal.

So long as the war lasts Japan will be at liberty to use all the resources of Manchuria east of the Liao River, and there is no doubt that under her supervision Manchuria's output of grain will be immensely increased. Should Russia persist in postponing the conclusion of peace for several years, Japan would have a plausible pretext for the permanent annexation of Manchuria. That is one of the reasons why neutral powers interested commercially in the Far East desire to see the war brought to an end as speedily as possible.—The Globe.

SPORTING NOTES.

Jabez White, the English boxer, who has never been beaten, having won sixty fights, has arrived in New York. He will meet Britt in San Francisco.

At Birmingham, Ala., the base lines were so wet that before the New York Club and the locals played sawdust was sprinkled along the base paths, coal oil poured over it and then a torch applied. The sawdust burned all right, but the plan did not dry the ground to any extent.

Fenelon Falls won the championship of the Trent Valley League on Monday night at Lindsay by defeating Cobourg 13 to 5. Chaucer Elliott, of Kingston, was the referee. Bentley, of Cobourg, was hurt early in the game and retired.

The public testimonial being organized in Ottawa for presentation to the players of the Ottawa Hockey Club now amounts to $800. The sum aimed at is $1,000. It is expected that the presentation will take place in a fortnight.

Racing in the United States reached a high water mark in 1904, in the amount of money distributed to horsemen in stakes and purses. The grand total was but little short of $6,000,000, an amount beyond the fondest hopes of those interested in the future of the American turf ten years ago. Of this amount almost one-half was credited to the associations racing under the control of the New York Jockey Club. This year it is quite probable that fully $3,000,000 will be distributed to horsemen in the East alone. In 1903 a single owner, the late William C. Whitney, reached the $100,000 mark. In 1904 the Duryea stable was credited with $200,043, while seven owners earned more than $100,000 each, and no less than seventy-four stables reached a total that exceeded $5,000. This shows the possibilities, and is striking proof of the prosperity of the turf under the wise and capable control of the Jockey Club.

A GOOD DEAL OF NONSENSE

ABOUT "BLOOD BITTERS" AND "TONICS."

Every drop of blood, every bone, nerve and tissue in the body can be renewed in but one way, and that is, from wholesome food properly digested. There is no other way and the idea that a medicine in itself can purify the blood or supply new tissues and strong nerves is ridiculous and on a par with the fol-de-rol that dyspepsia or indigestion is a germ disease, or that other fallacy that a weak stomach which refuses to digest food can be made to do so by irritating and inflaming the bowels by pills and cathartics.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets cure indigestion, sour stomach, gas and bloating after meals, because they furnish the digestive principles which weak stomachs lack, and, unless the deficiency of pepsin and diastase is supplied, it is useless to attempt to cure stomach trouble by the use of 'tonics,' 'pills' and 'cathartics,' which have absolutely no digestive power, and their only effect is to give a temporary stimulation.

One grain of the active principle in Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will digest 3,000 grains of meat, eggs and similar foods, and experiments have shown that they will do this in a glass bottle at proper temperature, but of course are much more effective in the stomach.

There is probably no remedy so universally used as Stuart's Tablets, because it is not only the sick and ailing, but well people who use them at every meal to insure perfect digestion and assimilation of food.

People who enjoy fair health take Stuart's Tablets as regularly as they take their meals, because they want to keep well, prevention is better than cure, and Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets do both; they prevent indigestion and they remove it where it exists. The regular use of one or two of them after meals will demonstrate their merit and efficiency better than any other argument.

A Dollar's Worth Free To Any Rheumatic Sufferer.

I ask no deposit—no reference—no security. There is nothing to risk—nothing to promise—nothing to pay, either now or later. Any rheumatic sufferer who does not know my remedy may have a full dollar's worth free to try.

I willingly make this liberal offer because I know that Dr. Shoop's Rheumatic remedy may be relied upon ALWAYS to bring the utmost relief that medicine can. Years before I discovered this remedy, I studied the nature of Rheumatism. For rheumatism is really

CRYSTALIZED POISON.

Your blood is always full of poison—the poison you eat and drink and breathe into your system. It is the purpose of the blood to absorb and carry off this very poison. And the kidneys, which are the blood filters, are expected to cleanse the blood and send it back through the system clean, to gather more poison which, they, in turn, will eliminate.

But sometimes the kidneys fail. And sometimes, from some other cause, the blood gets so full of poison that they cannot absorb it all. This is the start of Rheumatism. The poison accumulates and crystallizes. The crystals look like little grains of sugar or of fine white sand. The blood carries them and they increase in size. Then, when it can carry them no longer, it deposits them in a joint—on a bone—anywhere.

The twinge in your leg—the dull ache in your arm on a rainy day—these are the outward signs of the unseen crystals. And the twisted limbs and unspeakable anguish of the sufferer who has allowed his symptoms to go unheeded and unattended for years—these are the evidences of what Rheumatism, neglected, can do.

Rheumatism includes lumbago, sciatica, neuralgia, gout—for all these are the results of rheumatism poison in the blood.

Plainly, the first thing to do is to remove the poison. But this is not enough. The "formation" of the poison must be stopped, so that nature may have a chance to dissolve and eliminate the crystals which have already formed. Unless this is done there can be no cure—no permanent relief.

I searched the whole earth for a specific for Rheumatism—something that I or any physician could feel safe in prescribing—something that we could count on not only occasionally, but "always." For the ravages of Rheumatism are everywhere and genuine relief is rare.

I spent twenty years in experimenting before I felt satisfied that I had a certain remedy for this dread disease—a remedy which would not only clean out the poison, but one which would stop its formation.

CERTAIN RELIEF.

The secret lays in a wonderful chemical I found in Germany. When I found this chemical, I knew that I could make a Rheumatic cure that would be practically certain. But even then, before I made an announcement—before I was willing to put my name on it—I made more than 2,000 tests. And my failures were but 2 per cent.

This German chemical is not the only ingredient I use in Dr. Shoop's Rheumatic Cure—but it made the remedy possible—made possible an achievement which, I doubt not, could have been made in no other way.

This chemical was very expensive. The duty, too, was high. In all, it cost me $4.90 per pound. But what is $4.90 per pound for a "real" remedy for the world's most painful disease?—for a "real" relief from the greatest torture human beings know?

I don't mean that Dr. Shoop's Rheumatic Cure can turn bony joints into flesh again—that is impossible. But it will drive from the blood the poison that causes pain and swellling, and then that is the end of the pain and swelling—the end of the suffering—the end of Rheumatism. That is why I can afford to make this liberal offer—that is why I can afford to spend the FIRST dollar that Rheumatic sufferers, the world over, may learn of my remedy.

SIMPLY WRITE ME.

The offer is open to everyone, everywhere, who has not tried my remedy. But you must write ME for the free dollar package order. I will send you an order, on your druggist, which he will accept as gladly as he would accept a dollar. He will hand you from his shelves a standard sized package and he will send the bill to me. There are no conditions—no requirements. All that I ask you to do is to write—write to-day. I will send you my book on Rheumatism besides. It is free. It will help you to understand your case. Address Dr. Shoop, Box 69, Racine, Wis.

Mild cases are sometimes cured by a single package. On sale at forty thousand drug stores.

BROKEN SLEEP — TIRED NEXT MORNING.

Sleep not only rests, but builds up the body. Cut down the hours of sleep, and you cut down health in the same proportion. Rebuilding then ceases, nerves go to smash, you grow tired, weak and wretched. To restore sleep you must get more bodily strength, more nutritious blood, healthier nerves. Ferrozone solves the whole problem, makes you sleep soundly, gives endurance, vim, ambition. No more morning weakness—instead, the fire of youth will run in your veins, supplying abundance of energy and vigor. Witchery expresses the instant effect of Ferrozone; try it.

THE INFERNAL REGIONS.

How They Are Depicted In Buddhism and Islamism.

The infernal regions of Buddhism are horrible. They comprise a great hell and 136 lesser hells. In these hells, according to the sculptures of the Buddhist temples, men are ground to powder and their dust turned into ants and fleas and spiders. They are pestled in a mortar. The hungry eat redhot iron balls. The thirsty drink molten iron.

Islamism says of the infernal regions: "They who believe not shall have garments of fire fitted for them. Boiling water shall be poured on their heads and on their skins, and they shall be beaten with maces of iron."

In the Scandinavian mythology, the mythology of Odin and Thor, we are told that "in Nastrond there is a vast and direful structure, with doors that face the north. It is formed entirely of the backs of serpents, wattled together like wickerwork. But the serpents' heads are turned toward the inside of the hall, and they continually send forth floods of venom, in which wade all those who commit murder or forswear themselves."

In the past Christian clergymen loved to describe hell. The present tendency, however, is to avoid discussion of this place—to dwell upon the gentler and more lovely side of Christianity.—Exchange.

Napoleon's Outrider.

Wernet, Napoleon's outrider, once saved his emperor's life. It was after the abdication of Fontainebleau and when Wernet drove Napoleon away from the palace that he received from a peasant information of a plot to fire on the coach as it passed through the forest. The outrider, representing that there was an obstruction on the road, persuaded the emperor to leave the coach and ride around in another direction, while he brought the carriage as best he could to meet him. This was done, and Wernet encountered a furious fusillade, which, however, left him unscathed, as it was directed not at the box, but at the interior of the empty vehicle. Wernet lived to be outrider to Louis Philippe.—Westminster Gazette.

The Corset In 2000 B. C.

Mr. Arthur Evans, the Oxford archaeologist, who made so many interesting discoveries in the so called palace of Minos, in Crete, found in a subterranean sanctuary certain very ancient small earthenware statues, representing some goddess and two of her servants. The dress of the figures is highly modern. The goddess, we grieve to say, wears a corset—just such a corset as contemporary man shyly wonders at in the windows of a department store.—Everybody's.

Mission Band Entertainment.

The Barrow Mission Band, composed of the boys of the Baptist Church, gave an entertainment in the Sunday School room, last evening. Through the kindness of their mothers, tea was served to the members of the Band at half-past six, after which a splendid programme of vocal and instrumental music, recitations, dialogues and choruses, in which the boys were assisted by Miss Trotter, Mr. John Moe, of Albert College, and Mr. Will Kelly, Miss Vera Riggs presiding at the organ. A letter was read from Miss McLaurin, a missionary in India, in which the life of a boy in that country was clearly outlined. The large audience present showed their appreciation of each number by hearty applause.

What it needs is the strengthening influence of Dr. Hamilton's Pills—they work marvels where the stomach and digestion are poor. In one day the appetite increases and the whole system is rapidly strengthened. No stomach specialist could write a better prescription than Dr. Hamilton's Pills of Mandrake and Butternut. At all dealers in a yellow box, price 25c, or five boxes for one dollar.

BAYSIDE.

A very pleasant event occurred a short time ago, when the parsonage on the Bayside circuit was visited by a number of friends from White's appointment. Baskets well filled with good things were opened, tables were spread and a very pleasant time enjoyed. After the refreshments were over, the following address was read by Mr. Seldon Ketcheson:

Rev. and Mrs. Sexsmith and family:

Dear Pastor,—We, the members and friends of White's appointment, take this opportunity to express in some small way our high esteem of you and your family. Your cheerful and upright life has endeared you to us all as a pastor, and we pray that your life may be spared, and that you and your much respected family may for many years to come be found willing and valued workers in the cause of our glorious Master. Dear Pastor, accept this small gift, not for its value, but as an expression of our esteem for you and your family. Signed on behalf of the congregation.

Mr. and Mrs. I. Waldron.
Mr. and Mrs. S. Ketcheson.

Mr. Sexsmith made a suitable reply. The gift referred to in the above address was a beautiful robe and horse blanket.

TUFTSVILLE.

Owing to the bad roads on Sunday the church services here were cancelled.

Miss Lulu LaRoy and Miss McConnel, of Albert College, spent Sunday the guests of Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Andrews.

Mrs. E. G. Clarke, of Peterboro, is visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. George Clarke.

Master Bertie Andrews gave a party on Friday last it being his birthday. All of his playmates were present. After spending a very enjoyable time the children at an early hour returned home very happy.

Miss Annie Tweedie is the guest of her aunt, Mrs. Wm. Clarke.

A ROYAL BOOKLET.

The Grand Trunk Railway System are distributing a very handsome booklet descriptive of the Royal Muskoka Hotel, that is situated on Lake Rosseau, in the Muskoka Lakes, "Highlands of Ontario." The publication is one giving a full description of the attractions that may be found at this popular resort, handsomely illustrated with colored prints of lake and island scenery, the hotel itself and many of the special features that may be found there. It is printed on fine enamelled paper, bound in a cover giving the appearance of Morocco leather, with a picture of the hotel and surroundings on same and the crest of the hotel embossed in high relief. A glance through this booklet makes one long for the pleasures of summer and outdoor life, and copies may be secured gratuitously by applying to H. C. Thompson, C.P. and T.A., Belleville; or to J. D. McDonald, D.P.A., Toronto. m20-6t

BEFORE TREATMENT

AFTER TREATMENT

Peter E. Summers, of Kalamazoo, Mich., relates his experience: "I was troubled with Nervous Debility for many years. I lay it to indiscretion and excesses in early youth. I became very despondent and didn't care whether I worked or not. I imagined everybody who looked at me, guessed my secret. Imaginative dreams at night weakened me—my back ached, had pains in the back of my head, hands and feet were cold, tired in the morning, poor appetite, fingers were shaky, eyes blurred, hair loose, memory poor, etc. Numbness in the fingers set in and the doctor told me he feared paralysis. I took all kinds of medicines and tried many first-class physicians, wore an electric belt for three months, went to Mt. Clemens for baths, but received little benefit. While at Mt. Clemens I was induced to consult Drs. Kennedy & Kergan, though I had lost all faith in doctors. Like a drowning man I commenced the New Method Treatment and it saved my life. The improvement was like magic—I could feel the vigor going through my nerves. I was cured mentally, physically and sexually. I have sent them many patients and will continue to do so."

TIMELY TOPICS.

The second chapter in the bogus ballot-box conspiracy has been written, and Francis J. Rielly, the Kingston man, has been found guilty. It will, we think, please everybody to note that his sentence is not a severe one, but that the twelve good men and true who formed the Jury found a verdict in accordance with the evidence no one can deny.

Rielly had a fair trial, and his lawyer was one of the best in Canada, Mr. E. F. B. Johnston's appeal to the Jury was one that will not be forgotten in a hurry by those who heard it. Many an eye became clouded as the eloquent lawyer told, in pathetic periods, of the little home where a widowed mother was waiting to hear the verdict.

• • •

But when Mr. Johnston came to argument he weakened his own case. He had nothing on which to argue. There were his client's plain admissions. No, Mr. Johnston might better have pinned his hopes on sentiment, and not have tried to argue that black was white, especially as he had not a Jury of blind men.

• • •

The summing-up by the Crown Counsel, Mr. Bellmuth, was about as logical, clear-cut and convincing an address as one could imagine. He simply tore Mr. Johnston's mythical arguments into shreds and tatters. Point after point, fact after fact, was built up by the Crown Prosecutor. His references to Phil Lott, "standing like a rock before the assaults of Mr. Johnston," were very happy. In fact, it is doubtful if Mr. Johnston did not rather overdo his verbal castigations of Phil. But it is not likely the latter will lose much sleep over it.

The Judge's charge was a model of dispassionate reasoning. With unerring precision the salient points of the different witnesses' evidence were pointed out to the Jury. One could not help feeling that, considering the oaths the Jury had taken, there was little possibility of anything but conviction. But the Judge, all through, was a model of fairness. Dignified, urbane and yet withal hedged about with the "majesty of the law." A very fine old "Gentleman of the Old School" is His Lordship Judge MacMahon.

• • •

Now, as to the Ruttan verdict — but there: perhaps the less we say about the Ruttan verdict the better.

• • •

And so ends the ballot-box conspiracy story for another six or seven months. In conclusion, did it ever strike you what a mine of bad luck those boxes have been to most people connected with them? B. O. Lott and Shibley, both fugitives from justice! Rielly, convicted of conspiracy, with his future badly jarred! Whelan, an innocent agent, apparently, lost his Government situation. Harpell, we are told, lost his position with the insurance company with which he was connected, and has been idle for months; Samuel Harryett lost his position as police magistrate of Bancroft, and has earned unenviable notoriety from one end of Canada to the other; Mr. John Bremner, the Bancroft newspaper man, report says, has been persecuted to such an extent that he has been compelled to sell his paper and plant and seek new fields. And the list could be multiplied, but that is enough. Verily, the baleful shadow of the bogus ballot-boxes seems to have blighted most people on whom it fell!

A Chicago Alderman Owes His Election to Chamberlain's Cough Remedy.

"I can heartily and conscientiously recommend Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for affections of the throat and lungs," says Hon. John Shenick, 220 So. Peoria St., Chicago. "Two years ago, during a political campaign, I caught cold after being overheated, which irritated my throat and I was finally compelled to stop, as I could not speak aloud. In my extremity a friend advised me to use Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. I took two doses hat afternoon and could not believe my senses when I found the next morning the inflammation had largelyy subsided. I took several doses that day, kept right on talking through the campaign, and I thank this medicine that I won my seat in the Council. This remedy is for sale by all druggists.

Woman's love is a paradoxical compound of self-sacrifice and selfishness.

THE BLACKSMITH.

His Profession Is Both an Art and a Handicraft.

There are few more attractive places for the average youth than the village blacksmith shop. Longfellow did not express the whole of it:

And children coming home from school
look in at the open door;
They love to see the flaming forge and hear the bellows roar.

It has a far more valid reason for hypnotizing the boy than this. The greatest charm of the blacksmith shop, both for the young and for grown folk, lies in the fact that, while it is a place where handicraft rules, both hand and brain are required to produce the desired results. It is both an art and a handicraft, for art is either constructive or imitative, while a handicraft is either useful or decorative. The blacksmith must be skilled in them all.

As for horseshoeing, in its best sense it rises to the dignity of one of the learned professions, for no one can shoe a horse properly and not understand something about anatomy and physiology. Looking at it in this way—and there is no other right view to be taken of it—the calling of a blacksmith is one of dignity and honor.—Blacksmith and Wheelwright.

STROLLING MINSTRELS.

West India Negroes Have Music and Masquerades Christmas.

Christmas in the West Indies is a very jovial, rollicking affair, at least in the estimation of the negroes. The great feature of the season is the series of masquerades or mystery plays enacted by strolling negro performers.

These are of two sorts, representations of such Biblical stories as that of David and Goliath, when you may see the jolly actors clad in such historically accurate garments as "bedtick" trousers and cretonne coats of flaming patterns, and those of a purely local character. Of these last is the mongoose play, which is peculiar to St. Kitts and the object of which is to wage mimic war against the destructive pest which is the curse of the island. These strolling players are the chief feature of Christmas celebrations.

They are quite an imposing lot of men, with a good ear for music, and as you watch their antics you might easily imagine that instead of being in a civilized British colony you were back in the heart of Africa, assisting at some savage death dance or other heathen rite.

FISHING LINES.

The Very Finest Are Those Formed From Silkworm Gut.

Silkworm gut forms the best line for fishing purposes partly on account of its great tenacity and partly because it is so transparent. Every year a sufficient number of Spanish silkworm grubs are selected for this purpose. After they have eaten enough mulberry leaves and before they begin to spin they are thrown into vinegar for several hours. Each insect is killed, and the substance which the grub in the natural course would have spun into a cocoon is forcibly drawn from the dead worm into a much thicker and shorter silken thread.

The threads are then placed in pure water for about four hours and afterward dipped for ten minutes in a solution of soft soap. The fine outer skin is thus loosened, so that the workman can remove it with his hands. The threads must be dried in a shady place and are often bleached with sulphur vapor until they acquire the bright appearance of spun glass.—London Telegraph.

Harrison's Rejoinder.

Every schoolboy is familiar with the saying of Benjamin Franklin as the group of anxious faced yet loyal men stood around to sign the immortal Declaration of Independence, "Now we must all hang together or we'll all hang separately." But the rejoinder of the signer, Benjamin Harrison, to the above witticism is not so well known. Harrison, a portly man, looking down over his ample proportions, replied, "Yes, but when they drop us off at a rope's end some of you lightweights will be kicking and suffering long after I'm done for."

Duty of a Cheerful Face.

To wear a cheerful face when the heart is aching is not deceit. When a good housekeeper cleans the front steps and porch before she sets the house to rights she does not mean to deceive passersby. She merely shows some pride in her house and some consideration for her neighbors. We conquer our heartaches more quickly when we begin by considering the friends who are near us.

Lucky to Be Alive.

Patient—Great Scott, doctor, that's an awful bill for one week's treatment! Physician — My dear fellow, if you knew what an interesting case yours was and how strongly I was tempted to let it go to a postmortem you wouldn't grumble at a bill three times as big as this.

Not Unexpected.

"O'Rafferty is dead. He wuz shtruck by lightnin'."

"Oi's not surprised at all. The lasht toime Oi saw him he wuz lookin' mighty bad."

A Definition.

Little Clarence—Pa, what is an optimist? Mr. Callipers—An optimist, my son, is a person who doesn't care what happens if it doesn't happen to him.—Puck.

Whoever dreads punishment suffers it, and whoever deserves it dreads it.—Colton.

An Irishman gave his wife away by talking in his sleep. That is nothing. Plenty of wives give their husbands away by talking while awake.

It is worse than madness to neglect a cough, or cold which is easily subdued if taken in time but becomes, when left to itself, the forerunner of consumption and premature death. Inflammation, when it attacks the delicate tissue of the lungs and bronchial tubes, travels with perilous rapidity; then do not delay, get a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, the medicine that grasps this formidable foe of the human body, and drives it from the system. This medicine promotes a free and easy expectoration, subdues the cough, heals the diseased parts, and exerts a most wonderful influence in curing consumption, and other diseases of the throat and lungs. If parents wish to save the lives of their children, and themselves from much anxiety, trouble and expense, let them procure a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, and whenever a child has taken cold, has a cough or hoarseness, give the Syrup according to directions.

Why is bread like the sun? Answer—Because it rises from the yeast.

There can be a difference of opinion on most subjects, but there is only one opinion as to the reliability of Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator. It is safe, sure and effectual.

If you were to ride a donkey what fruit would you resemble? Answer—A pair.

Are you a sufferer with corns? If you are, get a bottle of Holloway's Corn Cure. It has never been known to fail.

What black thing enlightens the world? Answer—Ink.

Sudden transition from a hot to a cold temperature, exposure to rain, sitting in a draught, unseasonable substitution of light for heavy clothing, are fruitful causes of colds and the resultant cough so perilous to persons of weak lungs. Among the many medicines for bronchial disorders so arising, there is none better than Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. Try it and become convinced. Price 25 cents.

Name something with two heads and one body. Answer—A barrel.

They Are Carefully Prepared.—Pills which dissipate themselves in the stomach cannot be expected to have much effect upon the intestines, and to overcome costiveness the medicine administered must influence the action of these canals. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are so made, under the supervision of experts, that the substance in them intended to operate on the intestines is retarded in action until they pass through the stomach to the bowels.

What coat is finished without buttons and put on wet? Answer—A coat of paint.

A Small Pill, but Powerful.—They that judge of the powers of a pill by its size, would consider Parmelee's Vegetable Pills to be lacking. It is a little wonder among pills. What it lacks in size it makes up in potency. The remedies which it carries are put up in these small doses, because they are so powerful that only small doses are required. The full strength of the extracts is secured in this form and do their work thoroughly.

What is that which is lengthened by being cut at both ends? Answer—A ditch.

A Requisite for the Rancher.—On the cattle ranges of the West, where men and stock are far from doctors and apothecaries, Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil is kept on hand by the intelligent as a ready made medicine, not only for many human ills, but as a horse and cattle medicine of surpassing merit. A horse and cattle rancher will find matters greatly simplified by using this Oil.

Those three words will in part form the meaning of our decorative painting — paper-hanging and wall paper departments for the year 1905.

1904 was the largest trade in our history for any one year notwithstanding the several small stocks shown in opposition.

Ample evidence this that the purchasing public favor the large assortment from which to select.

This year already we have placed in stock nearly sixty thousand rolls of the newest and finest of wall papers possible to find and with twenty years of hunting we know where to find the game—.

For your convenience and our profit we have a staff of workmen engaged for 1905 numbering twenty. Expert workmen in their several branches—of Paperhanging — painting, decorating, graining, etc.

At the present time we have a number of our workmen executing decorative work in Toronto — we go anywhere for business — no city too large, no village too small!

That every roll of our Wall Paper has been made for this spring. People are already telling us we have the best values in the city and the sales we have made convince us they are right. We do not employ workmen to hang paper and do painting, and charge our customers a dollar or more per day extra for their time as a profit for ourselves, but we can put you in touch with expert decorators with whom you can make your own bargain for work, and thereby save some money and run no chance of paying master workmen wages to apprentices.

ettes, I know, Lady Fanworthy."

"Not if you give me one for myself," she said.

Vane led her, with a certain courtesy which he did not usually display, to the easiest of the chairs, and, when the cigarettes were smoked, took Julian by the arms and gently pushed him towards the piano.

"Sing us that thing you sang to me at your rooms, will you?" he said; and he went and seated himself in a low chair beside Lady Fanworthy's, and with his arms folded behind his head listened with half closed eyes; he was back on the island again, be sure.

Julian sang three songs in response to Lord Fanworthy's eager murmur of admiration and delight and Vane's almost proprietorial "Go on Julian!"

The light from the shaded candles fell full on the performer's dark face, and Lady Fanworthy watched it steadily.

"Julian's a regular nightingale, isn't he?" said Vane in a low voice. "Isn't it a fine voice?"

The old lady withdrew her eyes slowly.

"Yes," she said "He is very good looking, and has a fine voice, and quite pretty manners. Did you ever see the black panther at the Zoo, Vane?"

Vane stared at her, then laughed.

"The black panther when it is asleep, or has just been fed and is purring and licking itself."

Vane colored with momentary annoyance; then he laughed again.

"This is the first time I have ever known you to be—unjust and hard," he said in a low voice.

The brilliant eyes regarded him steadily, gravely.

"How do you know that I am—unjust and hard now?" she asked, with a slight imitation of his voice.

Vane moved with a gesture of impatience and deprecation.

"He's too good a fellow, is Julian, to be compared to a tiger," he said.

"Panther, I said," retorted Lady Fanworthy, sweetly. "And a black one. Thank you so very much, Mr. Shore. You have a charming voice charming. Godfrey, we must not rob these young people of their beauty sleep; it is late."

Lord Fanworthy was glowing all over with satisfaction as they drove home.

"Splendid thing for the county, Vane's succession. I'll get him to take the hounds! And I say, Emily, what a delightful young fellow this Julian Shore is, eh?"

"Delightful," responded Lady Fanworthy; but as she spoke she looked at her radiant husband with the tender pity with which the clever wife tolerates the spouse whom she loves notwithstanding his duller intelligence.

"There go the happiest pair I ever met," remarked Vane, as the two men sat in their smoking jackets in the billiard room.

"They seem devoted to each other," said Julian. "I suppose the man who said that marriages were made in Heaven must have had such a couple in his mind."

"Marriages are made in Heaven, but they smuggle a very fair counterfeit from quite another place," observed Vane, absently. "How is it you never married, Julian?" As the question left his lips he would have like to have checked it, for the subject was a sore one for him; but the question was asked, and he waited for the answer.

Julian knocked the ash from the cigarette and looked before him under his dropping lids.

"I don't know," he replied, as if he himself were wondering. "I suppose it is because I have never seen the woman I wanted to make my wife."

"You have never been in—love?" asked Vane, though he could have kicked himself for the banality of the thing.

"No," said Julian, after another pause. "No, I suppose not!"

Vane laughed grimly.

"You suppose not," he said. "You certainly have not, or you'd have known it. Bed? Right!"

Julian went to his room, but it was some time before he went to bed. It was a moonlight night, and he leaned against the window and looked at the park, and the hills beyond, the land that represented to some small extent the vast wealth into which his cousin had come; looked at it with an expression in his eyes which, if she could have seen it, would have justified Lady Fanworthy's comparison.

But it was not the black panther asleep, or placidly satisfied and purring. There was a hungry, restless look in the dark eyes, and the white, even teeth gleamed as the lips closed and unclosed with a nervous movement.

They stayed three days at the Court, and during the whole of that time Vane treated Julian as the heir and "did him honor," as the significant old phrase has it; so that the servants, even Mr. Holland, came to regard Mr. Julian Shore as almost of equal importance to the earl himself.

Before they started to return to London, Julian gave orders for the cleaning and doing up of the Wizard's Room and, at Vane's suggestion, even instructed a mason to alter the fireplace.

They reached London just before tea-time, and Vane suddenly remembering his promise to Judith Orme, said:

"Engaged this afternoon, Julian?"

Julian replied in the negative.

"Well, then, come with me to call on a lady, will you?"

It would be as well, if he were going to call on Judith, that he should make the visit as conventional and void of significance as possible by taking a friend with him. A year ago the proposal of a tete-a-tete with Judith Orme would have set his heart beating; but now—There is safety in numbers, though it be only two.

"Who is it?" asked Julian.

"Miss Orme," replied Vane.

"The Miss Orme?"

Vane nodded. "The very Miss Orme," he assented. You know her?"

"No; I have not even seen her," said Julian; "but, of course, I have heard of her: who hasn't?"

"Who, indeed?" said Vane, drily.

A neat maid-servant admitted them and took them upstairs.

Judith was seated at the piano, but at the sound of Vane's name—he had not given Julian's—she rose quickly. But at sight of Julian she paused in her advance and the color of resentment rose to her beautiful face. It was there only for an instant, the next she came forward with outstretched hand, her sapphire eyes smiling, her lips half parted.

"How do you do, Lord Lesborough? Did you meet my father? He has only just gone out. I'm so sorry!"

"I've brought my cousin, Mr. Julian Shore," said Vane.

The smile shone on him, and her hand went out to him, and as Julian took it, he drew a long breath and raised his lids slowly, as a man does who is trying to hide some deep, intense emotion.

What had happened to him? A moment or two ago, before he had entered the room, he had been master of himself, sole possessor of his soul. And now, His dark eyes sought the lovely face, and all the world seemed to stand still, as if it were gazing with him and listening with him to the exquisite voice, so low and sweet, so full of music, so sad, and yet with a subtle suggestion of tenderness and passion.

He threw his head up as if he were trying to throw off the impression, the spell, under which he had fallen as suddenly, as helplessly as if he had been mesmerized.

"We've just come from the Court," Vane was saying in cool, conventional tones. "Mr. Shore and I have been playing Bachelor Hall there."

She turned her eyes to Julian and smiled, and he felt a thrill, the thrill of a sudden passion which sways a man as a reed is swayed by the wind, the passion against whose tyranny the strongest man is as weak as the veriest babe. Unconsciously he moistened his lips with his tongue for the power of speech seemed to have deserted him.

"My first visit," he said, scarcely knowing what he said.

"Yes?"

That was all, just the one word; but in Julian Shore's ears it was like a note of heavenly music.

CHAPTER XIV.

Nina had, at last, found her good Samaritan.

"To think of your finding the way to the very street, and me just driving up at the very moment!" Polly exclaimed the next morning with infinite satisfaction. "That's what they call the long arm of coincidence, isn't it? Anyhow, whatever it was, I'm jolly glad. You look better after your night's rest, dear, and as beautiful as ever. What luck for me that I haven't gone to the Provinces! Mr. Harcourt's taken a London theatre. The Momus, you know, and 'My Lady's Pride' is going strong. Now, do try to eat some breakfast, there's a dear, good girl! And don't sigh so! You're safe and with a friend—if you don't mind having me for one."

Nina tried to express her gratitude, but Polly waved it aside with the hand in which she held her needle; she was hard at work trimming a hat.

"Don't you talk like that, Miss Wood; and you wouldn't if you knew how proud I was to have you here. Why, too, didn't you see that I'd taken a fancy to you on board the ship? I've thought of you ever so many times since, and wondered what had become of you and whether we should ever meet again. Bother this feather; it won't go right! And now you're actually sitting there—and going to sit there, leastways stop here with me for a long time—for always, if you like. But, lor' bless me, I know that's nonsense. You'll be off to your friends directly and forget all about Polly Bainford—no, I don't mean that! You're not the sort to forget."

"No, I shall not forget you and your great kindness, Polly," said Nina. "Won't you call me Decima, please?"

Polly jumped up to the infinite peril of the hat, and kissed her.

"Of course I will! I've been dying to do so, but I thought you wouldn't like it. You see you're a swell, a lady, and I'm only a poor girl."

Nina sighed woefully.

"You cannot be so poor as I, or so friendless," she said. "I haven't a penny in the world, or a friend—"

Polly jumped up again, and taking an old tobacco jar from the mantelshelf emptied its contents on the table.

"You've half of that, anyhow," she said, emphatically, "and you've got one friend, at any rate. There, don't cry"—for Nina's eyes had filled with tears. "There's nothing to cry about in being poor. If I haven't been quite without a penny, I've been pretty near it. Something always turns up just when things are at their worst. There's a kind of luck, chance, in it. It's always just when you think you're going under that a friendly wave carries you on shore. I'm your friendly wave."

"Yes, indeed!" said Nina. "But, Polly, dear, I could not be a burden to you. I cannot stay and be a drag on you. I must find some work—" she sighed bitterly. "How easy it is to say that, but how difficult it is to find the work!"

She gave Polly an account of her experiences with the agents, and Polly snorted wrathfully.

"I should like to punch that young bounder's head!" she said. "The colossal impudence he must have had! To think that you'd be seen out with him! But there are plenty of things you can do. Let me see. You wouldn't for instance, like the profession, I suppose?"

"What is the profession?" asked Nina, eagerly.

"Why, the theatrical—mine—ours!" replied Polly with surprise. "Don't you know that it's the only profession worth speaking about?"

Nina shook her head and smiled.

"I'm afraid I've no talent for the stage," she said. "And—and I don't think I should like it."

"Really?" said Polly with a surprise that was flattering to the dramatic profession. "That's a pity, for you're cut out for it. Such a face and figure! Oh, you may smile; but in my opinion you're one of the prettiest girls I've met; and Mr. Harcourt would agree with me if he saw you. Well, of all the stupid hats! And yet I thought I'd got the one I saw in the window quite fixed in my mind. I went in and bought the materials; you see you get the hat so much cheaper if you trim it yourself. But I suppose I've forgotten just how the trimming went." She put the hat on her head, and, surveying herself in the glass, uttered an exclamation of impatient disgust and made a grimace at herself in the mirror. "I wouldn't be seen dead in a ditch with it!"

"Let me look at it. Give it to me. May I try?" said Nina.

Polly tossed it to her, and leaning back in her chair, watched her as she twisted the feather this way and that and arranged and rearranged the ribbon. At last Nina held it out deprecatingly, and Polly tried it on.

"Oh, you dear!" she exclaimed, joyfully. "That's splendid! It isn't quite like the one in the shop, but it's twenty times more pretty and stylish. I've never had such a hat; it's a duck and a darling! And how quickly you did it! Why, I've been hours and hours fumbling at it!"

"I'm glad you like it," said Nina. "I used to trim my own hats and make my own dresses—"

"And no wonder, if they were as good as this!" said Polly. "Why"—she stopped suddenly and pursed her lips—"I'm going to rehearsal in that hat, and if I don't knock the rest of the girls with it, well—I'm afraid I must go now, dear. You won't feel lonely while I'm away? And you won't fret? Promise!"

"I sha'n't feel so lonely if you will leave me something to do," said Nina. "Isn't there another hat, for instance, or a blouse or a dress that wants mending?"

Polly dragged a blouse from a box under the bed and slipped it on.

"That was made for me, if you please!" she cried with infinite scorn. "Observe the fit! You can't tell the back from the front, can you? And I paid twenty-two-and-six for it; I did, indeed!"

"It wants taking in here," said Nina.

"It wants burning!" retorted Polly, indignantly. "You don't mean to say you can alter it?"

"I can try. Let me, while you are away, Polly."

She set to work at it immediately Polly had gone, and in her pleasure and satisfaction in doing even a little for the girl who had not only befriended her but bestowed her affection upon her, she found some relief of mind and spirit. She tried to think only of the present and her terribly vague future, but every now and then, in the quietude of the room, the picture of the past rose before her, and one man's figure stood out prominently in it.

Polly was away about three hours, and when she returned she carried a hat-box in her hand. Her face was flushed, her eyes were sparkling.

"Not done the blouse, really?" she cried.

"Oh, yes, some time ago. Slip off your jacket and let me try it on. Is that better? Oh, I hope so!"

"It fits like a miracle!" said Polly, solemnly. "I tell you what it is, Decima, you are a born genius! And look here! What do you think I've got here?"

She whipped out a hat and some materials.

"See that! I told you I should knock 'em! Why, the girls were like a flock of bees round me the moment I stepped on the stage. Oh, what a pretty hat, Polly! Where did you get it?' and that sort of thing. They were positively green with envy. Then I worked the idea that struck me just before I went out, and I told 'em I'd get as pretty a one for 'em for twelve-and-six. They wouldn't believe at first; but Jessie Green said she'd trust me and fished out the money there and then. I told 'em my terms were cash, you know. So I bought the things as I came home—the same shop; it's a cheap but stylish one—and here you are. Hat and materials cost eight-and-nine; profit, three-and-three. But perhaps you don't think it's enough—" doubtfully.

Nina actually laughed up at her.

"Give it to me!" she said. "Why, it will take no time. And how pretty it is! Oh, I do hope I shall trim it to please her!"

Polly snorted. "Trust you for that! Jessie's bound to like it; and see here, Decima, if she does, the other girls will want to have their hats trimmed, for she's one of the best-dressed of our lot. I told her I'd got a swell milliner who'd do the things for us on the cheap."

"What a clever girl you are—notwithstanding the fib," said Nina, laughing again. "I think this ribbon ought to go like this."

"It won't go any way until you've had some lunch," said Polly, taking the hat from her. "Oh, I know your sort at sight; you're one of those girls who'd work themselves to death if they weren't stopped at it. You've done a hat and a blouse to-day, and that's—oh, don't color up and look at me like that; I'm not going to offer to pay you for them!"

"I should think not!" said Nina, indignantly.

Polly allowed her to go to work soon after lunch, but, though the hat was finished, Polly refused to [illegible] it with her to the theatre that evening.

"Not much!" she said, knowingly. "What! Give the show away! No, no! Friend so full up with work that she couldn't think of even looking at the hat to-day. Oh, no. If you want to get on in any business, you mustn't make yourself too cheap; you must give yourself airs and put on frills. Why, don't you know that real swells, ladies and duchesses, have gone into the millinery business? Some of 'em run afternoon tea shops. Last would suit me better; more change and society, don't you know. But perhaps you wouldn't like that so well?"

"No, I think not," assented Nina.

"So I thought. I know your sort. You're the 'humble violet shrinking in the shade.' There ain't many of 'em about nowadays," added the shrewd Polly, "more's the pity!"

She brought home another order—a toque this time—and Nina worked at it—for some reason, inexplicable to the male mind, a toque is a more elaborate performance than a hat—all the next day. Polly approved of it, but looked at Decima with stern scrutiny.

"You're working yourself to death. And you're thinking all the time." Nina colored quickly. "Look here, you want a change. Come to the theatre to-night. I'll pass you in."

Nina shrank from the offer for awhile, but finally gave in. Polly got her a seat in the upper circle—a back seat with a pillar to dodge—and went off behind.

Nina felt strange at first. She had never been to a theatre alone before, and the troublous times she had passed through made her nervous and self-conscious. But presently she grew calmer.

Mr. Harcourt was a liberal manager and had "presented" a first piece to his audience. "Presented" is not altogether inappropriate; for certainly the one-act "comedy" was not worth paying for. It was supposed to be sentimental, with a touch of comic humor and pathos. Unfortunately the comic and the pathetic changed places now and again, and the sentiment either irritated Nina or made her want to laugh. The rest of the audience stared at it with an Arctic indifference or guyed it under their breath; and when the curtain fell upon the forced situations, the forced dialogue, and the wooden acting—for not the best actor or actress alive could talk the stuff set down for them and remain flesh and blood—the people yawned and the male part promptly went to the bars for the refreshment they sorely needed. But it was very different when the band struck up the overture to the musical farce. The thing was well done, and Nina enjoyed it. She recognized Polly amongst the chorus, and once or twice caught a scarcely perceptible nod from her in the direction of the upper circle.

THE THIRD PERSON

By KEITH GORDON

Copyright, 1904, by T. C. McClure

They had been engaged for a week. Felicia's heart was full of the sweet wonder of it, yet her mind clung tenaciously to a theory imbibed in the unrecorded days that went before. It seemed a terrible theory now; but, bewildered though she was, she acknowledged its claim.

"Jack," she said solemnly, "an engagement should be the lightest, most easily broken thing in the world."

"Eh—what?" exclaimed her companion in amazement, bringing his truant gaze back from the stretch of moonlit country whose poetry seemed a symbol of his own happiness. "What's that you're saying?"

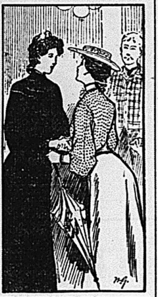
"An engagement," she repeated gravely, "should be taken as an experiment, a trial. At the first suspicion on the part of either person that he or she has made a mistake it should be broken."

An unconscious sigh expressed the relief she felt at getting this sentiment off her mind. Another moment and he was leaning toward her, with her hands clasped firmly, almost roughly, in his, his voice sterner than she had ever heard it.

"See here, little girl"—

At something that he saw in her face he stopped, and his glance softened.

"I see," he said at last, with boyish relief. "It's only a theory. But you gave me a shock that made my heart stand still. I was just thinking how sweet and beautiful life would be—you and I together—always. I felt as if 'forever' had already begun, and right in the midst of it you plump down a remark like that as if our engagement were a mere episode, a pastime. You didn't mean it, darling. You"—



FIVE MINUTES LATER SHE WAS GREETING A TALL, DARK GIRL.

Just here further words became unnecessary, but later on Felicia returned to the subject.

"Still, Jack"—she spoke in the thoughtful voice of a person who has been mentally occupied with her subject—"theoretically it does seem right. Engagements are made to be broken, if they will break. More than that, I believe that when people are engaged they ought to see as much as possible"—

"Of each other," he interpolated approvingly.

"Of other eligible men and women," she continued calmly, "just to prove beyond any possible chance that they really are the right persons—the final right persons. Every engagement should be thoroughly subjected to the third person test."

Jack frowned. It seemed to him that the dearest girl in the world was talking nonsense—chilling, analytical, disquieting nonsense.

"I believe in letting well enough alone," was his pointed comment, but long after he had turned his back upon the moonbeams that night and fallen into a deep and healthy slumber Felicia sat at her chamber window, her chin pillowed on her hands, possessed by the thought that possibly out in the great world somewhere there was what she called her "ultimate love"—a man before whom Jack would pale as other men had done before him. Some way the thought made her eyes grow wide.

"By the way," said he when, after breakfast the next morning, he strolled over, as usual, "the Danbys arrived last night, and the mater sends word that you're to come back with me to meet Miss Danby. Oh, come on," he continued as Felicia looked down at herself with debating eyes. "You needn't ever expect to look better than you do in that pink linen. It would be a work of supererogation if you did."

Thus beguiled, the young lady yielded, following him along the narrow path that skirted the hedges and talking blithely enough, though she said never a word of the thing that was nearest her heart.

"Is she pretty? Is she fascinating? Do men like her?" were the questions that were running through her mind. Of course as his mother's guest Jack would have to pay her a good deal of attention.

"Hurry up!" she ordered suddenly, feeling a quick, breathless need to find out for herself just how seductive Miss Danby was, and five minutes later she was greeting a tall, dark girl, whose eyes and smile nullified all attempts at criticism.

Jack, too, seemed impressed by the unusual character of the newcomer's charm. In repose her face was almost ugly. Then she would turn those wonderful, coercing eyes upon you and smile, and forever after you watched and waited.

Even in that first hour Felicia trembled for her supremacy. Covertly she noticed that Jack was as irresistibly attracted as she herself was. For ten whole minutes he had not once looked in her own direction.

"She has a lovely smile," the latter observed craftily as her lover walked home with her.

"Heavenly!" was his unsuspecting answer. "And her eyes! By Jove, I never saw such eyes! It isn't that they're so beautiful, but it's what they say. When she looks at you you feel as if you're it!"

Felicia, walking behind him in the narrow path, felt suddenly bereft. She didn't have eyes that made you feel that you were it. She didn't have a smile that even Jack grew enthusiastic over. She was just pretty.

"So unusual! She draws you in spite of yourself. I simply can't keep my eyes off her. She's fascinating."

On he went in the same strain, too absorbed expressing his interest and admiration to his other self to notice the forlorn brevity of her replies.

"Not to come over this evening?" he repeated in surprise when, at the door, she told him her wishes. "You must be crazy. Of course I'm coming."

But in spite of his protests she was obdurate, and he went away in a huff.

If Felicia were capricious during the following week, Miss Danby was all that a man could wish. In her society Jack's wounded pride was soothed and comforted. She made him forget his worries and appear at his best.

Once, and once only, he had a heretical thought. He wished Felicia were more like her. Then he winced at his own disloyalty. Dear, blue eyed, sunny Felicia! A wave of tenderness swept over him, and he determined to find out without further delay what was the impalpable shadow that lay between them ever since the Danbys came.

"Well, by Jove!" he exclaimed aloud, a light dawning upon him. Then, as if there were really no use of trying adequately to express the wonder that the suspicion caused him, he exclaimed again helplessly, "By Jove!"

"And she is the lady who believes that an engagement should be the lightest of ties; that engaged people should see as much as possible of unengaged ones. Oh, my eye!" And he threw back his head and roared with delight.

That afternoon they had it out. Felicia, with burning cheeks and flashing eyes, accused him hotly.

"You've been perfectly daft over her from the first moment. There's no use of denying it. You know you have, and our engagement"—

She choked, and Jack, who stood looking down at her, his hand thrust in the pockets of his short coat, finished the sentence.

"Has stood the test of the third person," he said in a teasing voice. Then he held out his arms, and after one startled, questioning glance she went to him.

Would Take It.

He was a theatrical lover, and she didn't like his style in the least.

He was constant in his devotion, however, and that made matters worse. She had tried gentle means to get rid of him, but he had disregarded them with painful persistency.

In this moment of her desperation he felt it incumbent upon him to propose to her, as men under similar circumstances so often do.

"Dear one," he exclaimed, hurling himself tragically at her feet, "I love you. My life is yours. Will you take it?"

She did not look like a murderess.

"Mr. Singleton," she responded, with calm determination, "I will."

He gazed at her rapturously.

"Don't do that!" she begged, drawing back from him as if in horror. "I have taken your life, as you requested me to do, and you are henceforth to all intents and purposes dead."

He seemed dazed.

"I do not, Mr. Singleton," she continued, turning aside, "desire to have a dead person in the house, and if you do not go away at once I shall send for an undertaker and have you removed to the nearest cemetery."

Then the dreadful situation in which his own precipitate folly had placed him was revealed, and he removed himself with promptness and dispatch.

Think of Others.

A gentleman who was traveling in Ireland sat down one day in a cottage to talk with an old woman. As they were having their "dish of discourse" there came a clap of thunder, and the old woman at once spread out her hands in supplication, crying:

"God bless and save us! And save his honor and save the people and all of us!"

For the space of half an hour the thunder was frequent, and each time she prayed. Then she told the visitor this story, which has a good moral in its defining of the proper spirit which should belong to prayer:

"There was a man, and he was working in a field like, and it came on to thunder, and he put his head in a hole in the wall, and he said:

"'God save what's out o' me!'

"But he ought to have prayed for the whole of him, for he no sooner said that than the wall fell and took his head off.

"It was telled to me that his was a judgment on the crathur because it is not right to pray small, just for yourself. But you should pray large—to save us all—pray big and open hearted. But that may be only a story, sir."

BAKED BEANS.

How They Are Cooked For the Lumbermen In Maine.

Didst ever hear—oh, ye epicure—of the lumberman's baked beans, the delicatessen of the backwoods, the twenty-one times a week, stick to the ribs provender that floats in amber juices and that when mined in the morning from the bean hole emit such delicious odor as to make mouths water all along the border? The cook and the cookee join drives in building up this monument to high art in culinary. The woods cook usually bakes a tin wash-boiler nearly full of beans, first parboiling them before he gets them ready for the pot. Then he peels an onion and slices it into the bottom of the pot. Then he pours in half the beans; then slices over them another onion; then puts in the chunks of salt fat pork; then douses in the rest of the beans. Over all this he pours a pint of molasses and then more pork. Just enough water is added to cover the beans, and then a sheet of birch bark is placed over the top of the pot and the cover pounded in tight. When the water begins to steam the bark swells and seals the pot, holding in all the flavor. The cookee (there's all the difference in the world between the cook and the cookee) builds the fire in the bean hole. When the birch wood has heated the stones that line the hole and has itself burned to redhot coals most of the coals are taken out and the beans are put in. The beans are placed in the hole in the afternoon. They stay there all night. In the morning they are dug out. All other baked beans are libels on the name, for these have the sauce of the pine and the spruce.

AMERICAN COLLEGES.

They Are Unique Among Institutions of Learning.

The American college is in every way unique. It may be defined in a word as a school for imparting more general and advanced instruction than can be obtained in the various academies and private schools. The university, however, more particularly comprises a number of technical schools, imparting instruction in all departments of knowledge, including classical literature, the arts and sciences, as biology, medicine, surgery, law, theology, mechanics and so on. The issue as to which is the most desirable, the most useful, has been discussed at educational congresses, in the public press and notably in the leading reviews. There has been evident in these discussions a tendency to look upon the college as a kind of inferior school which must be given its place only when there is not enough money to establish the more expensive university. On the other hand, the college has not wanted its stout champions, in whose view the American college, with its concentrated curriculum, the closeness of touch between pupil and professor, is not only an institution that is to be conserved, but is one that often, if not always, offers a better kind of education than is available in the university.

How to Read.

Reading is not a lost art to the same degree that conversation is, but it has in most cases an arrested development through so much reading that makes no demand upon aesthetic sensibility, so that one is apt to bring to a fine story full of delicate shades of thought and feeling the same mind which he yields to a newspaper, putting a blunt interrogation as to its meaning as conveyed in the terms of a rational proposition, and the writer's charm is wholly lost upon him. While the reader's surrender to the author must be complete, his attitude should not be passive, but that of active responsiveness and partnership.—H. M. Alden in Harper's Magazine.

First Love.

It is a popular fallacy that the first love is the true one, unique in its excellence, says an exchange. As well say that the first picture of a painter is the best of all he will paint in the course of his life; that the first speech, the first book, the first statue, the first composition, will be the best of the statesman, novelist, sculptor or musician, as the case may be. First works have all the imperfections of uncertainty, of inexperience and ignorance. And it is rather by chance than by anything inherent in the nature of Cupid's ways that the first love turns out to be the great one.

Girls In Guatemala.

None of the maidens in Guatemala are allowed to go abroad from their homes without the company of a chaperon, and a lover is only allowed to come and court his sweetheart through the heavily barred windows of her father's home. After they are married they pass along the streets in Indian file, the women marching ahead, so that the husband can be in a position to prevent any flirtations.

Perfectly Correct.

The deacon was hard to convince.

"No," declared he, "I'll have no such contraption in my house. Pianners are things of evil."

"Oh, but, pa," protested his lovely daughter, "this is an upright piano!"

There Are Some Funny Ones.

"Tell me," said the editor's friend, "who are the most humorous writers you have ever met?"

"Most of those who think they are serious writers," replied the editor.

AS TO NET FISHING.

MR. JOSEPH TEMPLETON DISPUTES THE STATEMENTS OF MESSRS. McCARGAR AND BLACK

To the Editor of The Intelligencer:

Dear Sir,—As I am one of those who have been active in circulating the petitions asking for an investigation into matters of net fishing in the Bay of Quinte, and as said petitions were signed by over 700 citizens of Belleville and endorsed by our City Council, I will endeavor to state the case, or rather some points of it, from the angler's standpoint. Mr. J. K. McCargar, Fishery Inspector, and Mr. W. Black, fish dealer, both are reported as saying: "That bass are as plentiful as ever they were in our bay." This I dispute and doubt if they can get a solitary angler or person not interested in net fishing to agree with them, while I can produce dozens of our most experienced anglers from all points from Trenton to Kingston, who will testify that for the past few years bass fishing has been getting steadily worse, both in number of fish and size. The fact that the large number of Americans who used to visit Massassaga and other bay points for the fishing now go elsewhere, also the article by Mr. Walter Greaves you printed some weeks ago, who is one of the best authorities on bass fishing in America, and who states that netting has ruined the Bay of Quinte and that he will go elsewhere in future, all prove that some of the sympathy asked for the "poor fishermen" ought to be reserved for us poor anglers. From the glowing accounts we have been reading in the papers for the past two or three years of the great work done in restocking our bay, it ought to be possible to get a fair catch once in a while, but I leave the question to your readers to decide from their own experiences. "Is it not becoming hopeless to expect to get even one bass in a day's fishing, and as to three and four pounders that used to be quite common, how many have they caught for the past few years?" What becomes of large bass if they are not caught in nets? I claim to be pretty well acquainted with bass grounds between Nigger Island and Long Point, and that I use as good tackle and bait, also work as hard and try all known spots, as most, and my experience last year was: From June 16th to October 19th I was out on 19 days and caught altogether myself 13 bass over 10 inches, largest 2 1-2 pounds: the parties with me caught altogether 14, and on 11 days (there were usually three of us) did not get a single bass, though we usually cover 10 to 15 miles of water and are out from 7 a.m. till 9 or 10 p.m. Five was the best catch three of us had on any one day, and we generally tried minnows, hoppers, crawfish and worms besides trolling for hours. Dozens of others can tell the same story and you cannot blame us for doubting the statements made by interested parties that bass are more plentiful then ever. Where are they and who gets them?

As I know your space is limited just now I will have to omit much that could be added in proof of our plea for a restriction of net fishing and a stricter observance of law in other respects. Thanking you for space, I remain,

Yours respectfully,
JOS. TEMPLETON.

STOTT & JURY, BOWMANVILLE, ONT.

Rielly Found Guilty; Gets a Year in Jail.

Crown Counsel's Masterly Address—Mr. Johnston's Arguments Torn to Ribbons—Judge MacMahon Charged Against Rielly—The Jury's Verdict—Closing Scenes Were Striking—Other Ballot-Box Cases Laid Over to Fall Assizes.

Tuesday Afternoon Session.

An air of expectancy was apparent as court opened at 3.10 o'clock. Something was evidently going to happen.

CROWN COUNSEL'S ADDRESS.

The Crown Prosecutor opened his address by repeating to the Jury the oath they had taken. That oath they had no right to shirk or evade. They must find according to the evidence given before them. The counsel for the defence had a perfect right to soar into flights of oratory or break out into bursts of eloquence which might carry them off their feet: he could even draw - as he could be shown to have done — heavily upon his imagination: he might even call down the prayers of his client's widowed mother. That was something the Crown could not do. No Crown Prosecutor could attempt to secure a conviction by any such means. It was the duty of the Crown Prosecutor to lay before them the evidence. It was the duty of the Jury to listen to the evidence and find a verdict according to it. Then the responsibility passed to His Lordship. The Crown Prosecutor said he must take issue with the theory laid down by the counsel for the defence. If he was wrong he would be corrected by His Lordship. Take a case of poisoning: One man mixed the poison and handed it to another man, who administered it. Which of the men was the most guilty? That case was analagous with the case of the conspiracy being tried, only instead of trying to kill a human being they were trying to kill the votes of many of the electorate. A man when he went to the polls went, not to elect his master, but to elect his servant. Was it right or wrong to balk him in his purpose and take away his own legal right? There was a conspiracy and the Crown Prosecutor said he could not understand how any sensible man, who had heard the evidence, could deny that the three chief conspirators were Byron O. Lott, W. J. Shibley and Frank J. Rielly. They did not need secret chambers and passwords and oaths of fellowship to bring about a conspiracy. Where would individual responsibility be if any man could commit a crime and then shield himself under the plea of friendship. The law made allowance for no such—he was going to say—rubbish. If they came to the conclusion, after hearing the evidence, that the defendant had guilty knowledge of the matter, they must convict or violate their oath. If they could, after hearing the evidence, feel convinced that Rielly had no guilty knowledge, then they must acquit or again violate their oaths. The speaker referred to the references made to a widowed mother by Mr. Johnston. It was a pathetic appeal, which no true man could listen to unmoved, but must every criminal be released because he had relatives. Should he not rather, on account of those relatives, refrain from committing crime. The lawyer for the defence had imagined many things, he had drawn shoals of herring across the track; he had abused, in a most virulent way, Philip A. Lott, until one remembered that yesterday the round-faced Philip A. Lott had stood there in the witness box and all the arts and eloquence of his learned friend had been powerless against him. The fact was that the chief witness against Frank J. Rielly was not Philip A. Lott, but Frank J. Rielly himself. Rielly's testimony showed plainly that the chief actor in the conspiracy was Frank J. Rielly. Mr. Hellmuth defended Col. Sherwood against the aspersions of Mr. Johnston. Did he, in the box, look like a man who was anxious to torture a witness to get information from him. Detective Chamberlain, the Crown Prosecutor said, had not been put in the box because the Crown knew that he had no evidence to give. Speaking of Rielly's actions, the Crown Counsel went on to show that Rielly knew there "was a great scheme on." A long time after, after he knew the scheme was on foot, he sent a sample ballot-box to Watertown. At that stage of the game Rielly admitted that he felt there was some personal risk in the matter for him. The Crown Counsel was making out a very damaging case against the prisoner, and was showing up much stronger than in the Ruttan case. Mr. Hellmuth waxed very sarcastic re some of the gilded platitudes of Mr. Johnston, and was tearing that eminent lawyer's argument into ribbons. Rielly's statement to Carscallen, that if he went to see Roof "he would become a principal in the affair" was a shrewd one, but it was not a remark that would emanate from a perfectly innocent man. Rielly also said "he did not want too many men in the Watertown transaction." An innocent man did not care how many men were in the transaction. He afterwards goes over to Watertown with Byron O. Lott, and together they go to see Roof. Then it is discovered that the false receptacle in the box is not large enough, and he has it remedied. Was that the act of an innocent man? There were only two conspirators till Byron O. Lott came in. The fact that Rielly engaged Whelan to bring over the boxes showed that he was a free agent and was one of the chief personages in the conspiracy. Rielly's position, and the fact of his relatives in Watertown made him an ideal personage for the position of chief conspirator. No man in Canada would be better fitted. The Crown Prosecutor was certainly making a masterly and convincing address; the crowded court room was listening intently to his words. Rielly had admitted that he did not want to involve any of his friends in Frontenac, which showed that he had finer and decenter instincts than Lott and Shibley. The counsel for the defence made a great point because Rielly had always used his own name. But he had ordered the boxes addressed to Kingston to a fictitious name, was that not as bad? Then about the hundred dollars. Rielly did not receive the money personally from Shibley, but he was told when it would be handed to him, and where. Where did the credit to Rielly come in? After the thing was blown upon, Rielly sent hush money to Carscallen in Watertown. Was that the act of an innocent man? Did he think that, if he stayed and Lott and Shibley skipped, there might be no evidence to convict him? Mr. Johnston had spoken of Lott and Shibley sitting on verandahs in the sunny South, laughing and chuckling as they thought of Rielly in the dock. But there was another side to the shield. Lott and Shibley were fugitives, they were driven from home; they were in the position of men who laughed little and cried long. The Crown Prosecutor admitted that, in his opinion, Rielly should not receive so heavy a punishment as Shibley and Lott should, if they were tried, but that he should be acquitted he could not admit. He did not ask them to pay attention to the evidence of anyone else but Frank J. Rielly. Philip A. Lott was not on trial, though Mr. Johnston would have them believe that he was.

THE JUDGE'S CHARGE.

Judge MacMahon said the indictment charged that the defendant was one of certain parties who had conspired to defraud two Parliamentary candidates of their seats. The fact that that there was a conspiracy was not denied. What was urged was this, that this defendant was not a party to the conspiracy to defraud the electorate. If they were satisfied that the defendant entered into the conspiracy knowing the object it had in view, they must find him guilty. It was regrettable that a young man of the prisoner's position should be placed in the position he was to-day, but that could not be urged in his favor. The law made no distinctions. If a man broke the law he must expect punishment if detected. As to the charge which had been made by the counsel for the defence against the Government, the Judge inferred that it was far-fetched. The Government supplied means to bring about honest elections, and had a perfect right and duty to investigate all cases in which it was apparent that a wrong had been done. The Government had paid servants to look after such matters, and the acts of those servants had been proper, and had resulted in forcing the two chief conspirators to leave their country for their country's good. It was proven that Rielly went to Watertown, and the Judge told the story of what occurred in that town. He was charging strongly against the prisoner, pointing out that Rielly gave Roof the order for bogus boxes, knowing what Shibley wanted them for. The Judge said that many of Phil Lott's statements had been corroborated by Rielly himself. Phil had been called an ingrate and an informer, but the Judge said that history showed that nearly every conspiracy which had been discovered had been through some co-conspirator giving the case away. The Judge defended Phil's action in obtaining possession of and keeping the letters, and said it might be a very fortunate thing for him that he did, for otherwise he might, by his brother, been made a victim in the case. His Lordship said that Rielly had pledged his credit to the Watertown tinsmith for the manufacture of the boxes, he was the man who received the money to pay for them: if the jury were convinced that he did these things knowingly, and acted in concert with Lott and Shibley, then there could be no possible doubt of Rielly's guilt, and they must convict him; if they were satisfied that many of the statements made by himself and others were false, then they could acquit him. In speaking of the doctor's evidence in Rielly's case, the Judge said there was nothing in his evidence to show incoherency or any sign that he was not mentally strong when his statement was given.

CASE GOES TO JURY.

The case was given to the jury at 4.55.

The Grand Jury came in and announced that they had found a True Bill against Thomas S. Carman for criminal libel.

It was announced that the criminal libel case and the case of Rex vs. Harryett would be traversed to the next assizes.

A VERDICT REACHED.

At 7.05 the jury rapped on the door of their room and announced that they had agreed on a verdict. They had then been out just two hours and ten minutes, that being, by a curious coincidence, just exactly the time taken by the jury in the Ruttan case. The Judge and all the officials had gone from the building, and the "gentlemen of the jury" had to wait, like the twenty or so people left in the court room. Gradually the audience and officials came back. The prisoner came in; everybody was waiting for the judge, who arrived at 7.50. The "gentlemen of the jury" were sent for. It would soon be over. Rielly looked anxious, but wore a half smile.

AN ANXIOUS MOMENT.

"Gentlemen of the jury," said the Clerk of the Court, "how do you find the prisoner at the bar?"

And the foreman said:

"Guilty, with a strong recommendation to mercy."

A deep hush had fallen over the court.

Crown Counsel Hellmuth moved for sentence.

Judge MacMahon said:

"Stand up, Frank J. Rielly. What have you to say why sentence should not be passed on you?"

RIELLY'S REMARKS.

Rielly spoke up in firm, clear tones, saying that he had felt that, while he had taken part in the ballot-box matter, he had tried to discourage it on several occasions, and was not guilty of entering into it with the same spirit as the principals. He had hoped the jury would have taken these circumstances into consideration.

The Judge said the penalty for the offence of which Rielly had been found guilty could be made a very severe one. He could give him seven years in the penitentiary if he so desired, "and," said the Judge, "had the principals in this case appeared before me and been found guilty I would certainly have given them the full sentence without any hesitation." It was a pity, the Judge said, to see a young man, of good education, like Rielly, connected with a conspiracy of this kind, which aimed to rob honest voters of their franchise. The prisoner, the Judge said, seemed to have been blinded to the true facts of the case. He was not disposed to deal severely with him, but would give him a chance to redeem himself in the days to come. The sentence of the court was that he be confined in the jail at hard labor for 12 months.

Rielly did not seem much affected by his sentence, but a sigh went over the court room. It made one feel sorry for the bright-looking young fellow who, perhaps, had not realized the extent of his folly till too late.

Mr. Johnston at once arose and made application for a reserve case.

The Judge, after a brief consultation with the Sheriff, said that he was laboring under a mistake in sentencing Rielly to the county jail, where prisoners were only kept six months. He might have to go to the Central prison. However, he would not change his sentence, and if the authorities were satisfied to leave him here he could stay.

That ended the proceedings. The crowd passed out, many of them shaking hands with Rielly, and the second chapter of the famous ballot-box history had been written.

Mr. Johnston's application for a reserve case was on the question of admissibility of evidence, and it is stated that a motion will be made at the Court of Appeal in April.

The Assizes Over.

GRAND JURY'S PRESENTMENT — JUDGE MacMAHON SEVERE ON COURT HOUSE ACCOMMODATION

At 10 o'clock this morning court was opened and the Grand Jury made their presentment.

GRAND JURY'S PRESENTMENT.

Canada,
Province of Ontario,
County of Hastings.

The Grand Jury of our Lord the King report:

We desire to thank Your Lordship for the instructive address delivered to us as to our duties on this Grand Inquest.

While we regret the appearance of crimes of a political nature in this county, yet we feel we can congratulate our county on its general freedom from crime.

We have taken occasion to visit the public institutions of the county, including the jail, and are pleased to be able to report that the same are efficiently maintained and conducted in the interests of the public.

We have carefully inspected the Court House and its approaches, and regret to have to report that the same are far below the standard required in these modern times for convenience and utility, more especially in the matter of heating and ventilation and lavatory accommodation within the building, and lighting of the approaches outside.

We would respectfully recommend that sufficient lights be placed along the approaches to the Court House to render the same safe and that the accommodation within the Court House building be modernized in the furnishing of urinals and toilet rooms for the public, witnesses and the legal profession, and in its system of heating and ventilation, which are at present in a condition wholly out of keeping with the requirements of this large and wealthy county.

We desire to express our sincere regret at Your Lordship's ill-health during this session and hope for a speedy restoration.

All of which is humbly submitted.

Dated this 22nd day of March, A.D. 1905.

MORDEN BIRD,
Foreman.

His Lordship Judge MacMahon, in replying to the presentment, said that he desired to refer to a loss which the county had sustained through the death of a prominent, efficient and esteemed official, who was respected by all who knew him. He referred to the late Mr. A. G. Northrup, who for 50 years had been a public servant. He was a true, Christian man and exemplified his Christian character in every day life. It was a loss to the city and county that was irreparable in many respects. The Judge thanked the jury for the efficient manner in which they had discharged their duties. Very important matters had been brought before them, but they had attended to them promptly and efficiently. He echoed the sentiment of rejoicing that there was a general freedom from crime. Outside of matters which had occupied the attention of the court for some days, only one other true bill had been presented and that for an offence of no serious magnitude. The county of Hastings was to be congratulated upon the absence of crime within its borders, and that it was free from the class of criminals which infest other portions of the country.

In referring to the Court House, His Lordship said it was a reflection on the county that it was not properly equipped. The mode of heating was antiquated, and the accommodation is not what it should be. The Judge's room is most discreditable to the county. It was also dangerous to be about the premises after dark on account of the insufficiency of light about the building. The County Council of Hastings appeared to be the Rip Van Winkles of the age. The county building should be made attractive, for visitors are often attracted to the city by the beauty of the buildings, both public and private.

So far as the duties of the Grand Jury were concerned in regard to this court, they were at an end, but they would have to succeed themselves as a Grand Jury for the Sessions.

The court was then formally closed.

The Sessions were opened at 2 o'clock this afternoon, Judge Lazier presiding.

SELL YOUR COLD FOR $1?

You surely won't stop at a dollar bill to cure that horrid, sniffeling cold? Go to any druggist and get "Catarrhozone" and your cold will be a thing of the past. There is almost witchery in the swift way Catarrhozone kills colds. But when you consider the penetrating, healing and antiseptic qualities of Catarrhozone perhaps it's not so wonderful. Certainly there is no remedy half so prompt for colds and catarrh as Catarrhozone. Refuse a substitute and insist on having only "Catarrhozone."

THE "DROP-OFF" HEART

Doctors didn't give Mrs. James long to live—but Dr. Agnew's Cure for the Heart foiled them and cured her.

For fifteen years Mrs. John A. James, of Wiarton, Ont., was a great sufferer from Heart Disease. For days at a time she was confined to bed, and it seemed as though every breath might be her last. Her physicians said that she might "drop off" any minute. With woman's tenacity in suffering, and believing that "while there's life there's hope," she started using Dr. Agnew's Cure for the Heart. Three bottles cured her. This remedy relieves in thirty minutes. 75

McINTOSH BROS.

OPENING OF ASSEMBLY

Forecast of the First Whitney Speech From the Throne.

The Abolition of the Numbered Ballot, the Creation of a Department of Mines, the Extension of the Temiskaming Railway to Form Junction With G. T. P., Among the Principal Items of Legislation Promised.

Toronto, March 22.—At 3 o'clock this afternoon the eleventh Parliament of Ontario will be opened by Lieutenant-Governor Clark. A mounted escort from the Royal Canadian Dragoons will accompany His Honor from Government House to the Parliament Buildings, where a guard of honor of 100 men from the Royal Grenadiers will receive him and a salute will boom forth from field guns, manned by a detail of 35 men from the Fourth Field Battery of Hamilton, which is the corps commanded by Hon. J. S. Hendrie.

As soon as the Lieutenant-Governor ascends the Throne, the Assembly will be called upon to elect a speaker, and His Honor will withdraw to permit of this proceeding.

The nomination of Mr. St. John will be made by Premier Whitney and will be seconded by Mr. Harcourt, acting leader of the Opposition. The speeches will not be lengthy.

Speech From the Throne.

When this essential to Government has been disposed of, the representative of the Crown will enter the chamber, and read the speech from the Throne.

It is understand that the Lieutenant-Governor, after welcoming the members to their duties and expressing thanks to the Almighty for the abundant harvest of the past year, will note the increasing activity and enterprise of the people in all sections of the province.

Reference will be made to the departure of the Earl of Minto as Governor-General of Canada, since the last session of the Legislature. The severance of the official connection of the Governor-General with the people of Canada was greatly regretted by the people of Ontario. During his term he strengthened the attachment of the Canadian people to the Empire and to the principles of constitutional Government, by his interest in the progress and development of the Dominion. Reference will also be made to the active part of Lady Minto in philanthropic movements, and her departure, the speech will say, has been sincerely regretted. In this connection the Lieutenant-Governor will refer to the appointment of the Earl of Grey and express the hope that his tenure of office may be attended by the increasing prosperity of the people.

Join Grand Trunk Pacific.

Referring to the Temiskaming Railway, the representative of the Crown will say that the road, as originally planned, has been practically completed, but that legislation will be required after the route of the Grand Trunk Pacific has been located, in order to extend to form a junction with the transcontinental road.

During the session the report of the railway taxation commission will be laid before the House, and legislation along this line is foreshadowed.

The Education Act will be amended and a bill introduced relating to the Forests Reserves Act. There will also be legislation changing the designation of the commissioners of the Crown Lands and Public Works Departments to that of minister.

Changes will be promised in the law respecting County Councils and the holding of elections. The change in the Ballot Act will be in the direction of secrecy, as promised in Premier Whitney's reply to the Dominion Grange.

Reply to the Speech.

On the conclusion of the speech from the Throne, the Assembly will be adjourned, and on Thursday the session will open with the moving of the address in reply to the speech from the Throne by W. H. Hoyle (North Ontario). J. P. Downey (South Wellington) will second the reply and Mr. Harcourt will reply for the Opposition. It is expected that the debate on the address will be concluded on Thursday.

Selection of Whips.

On Thursday morning, at 11 o'clock, the Conservative members will caucus in the public accounts committee room. The first business of the caucus will be to elect a whip. The junior whip of the Opposition last Parliament was I. B. Lucas, and now he is line for promotion to the rank of senior whip, whose duties were performed by Dr. Willoughby in the old Parliament.

Seine Fishing in the Thames.

At a meeting of the Provincial Cabinet yesterday afternoon, a decision was arrived at relative to the question of seine fishing in the Thames River. The Government will issue no licenses for seine fishing east of Chatham for this year, and after this year no licenses for any part of the river will be issued. Hon. Adam Beck, representative of the City of London, has pressed the claims of the anglers in this matter, and the decision of the Government will be hailed with satisfaction by lovers of the sport.

Prison-Made Goods Deputation.

About forty members of the Dominion Trades Congress waited on Hon. W. J. Hanna yesterday afternoon and urged their views with regard to prison-made goods. They asked that the manufacture of brooms be confined to the hand-made process, pointing out that the physical and mental exercise incumbent upon the operators was beneficial, and that the goods so manufactured would not enter into competition with non-prison-made goods. In any case the deputation asked that the product of prisons be stamped "prison-made." Consideration was promised.

Discussing Indian Affairs.

Mr. F. Pedley, of Ottawa, Assistant Superintendent-General of Indian Affairs, was in conference with Hon. J. J. Foy yesterday morning in regard to the respective responsibilities of the Province and the Dominion of Canada toward the Indians of Ontario. The dispute is a matter of long standing, but it is hoped to reach a basis soon upon which a definite and satisfactory settlement can be arrived at.

BORDEN WILL OPPOSE.

Announces His Intention re Autonomy Bills to the Conservative Caucus—Proceedings in The House.

Ottawa, March 21.—At an Opposition caucus this afternoon R. L. Borden announced his intention of opposing the autonomy bill in its new form. The announcement was favorably received, but the individual members of the party were not pledged. The Quebec Conservatives will probably vote for the Separate Schools clauses of the bill even if the Opposition should oppose them. The feeling is that the session will be a long one.

Slim Attendance in House.

Ottawa, March 22.—With a very slim attendance, the House spent the whole of yesterday's session in Committee of Supply; but little interest was taken, the members having their minds fixed in anticipation on the debate of today, when the second reading of the Northwest autonomy bill will be moved. About $750,000 was voted for the Marine and Fisheries Department. Hon. Mr. Prefontaine announced that the improvements and the aids to navigation on the St. Lawrence, upon which some $2,000,000 has been spent, would shortly be finished, and the fact was incidentally developed that during the past ten years, as a result of the expenditure on that work, the insurance rates had been reduced by 50 per cent.

Messrs. Bergeron and Geoffrion were added to Sir Wm. Mulock's Committee on the Telephone Question.

Object to Fruit Boxes.

In committee on Mr. Fishers bill to amend the act respecting the packing and sale of staple commodities, Mr. Henderson (Halton) expressed the hope that the House would not pass the measure at this time. It was strange, if there was a strong demand for the bill, as stated by the Minister of Agriculture, that resolutions from some organized association of fruit growers had not been laid on the table. In his district, Mr. Henderson asserted, the fruit growers were opposed to the size of the box specified, which, he contended, was a nondescript, being neither one-fourth nor one-third of a barrel.

Mr. Arch Campbell advocated the boxes, and said the fruit growers of his district would prefer them to the barrel. There had been a good deal of loss through the making of barrels from gum wood or through exposing properly made barrels to moisture, so that the staves swelled, the hoops broke, and the package would not stand shipment. The present box was a third of a barrel, and would hold one bushel. It seemed a suitable size.

Mr. Fisher Has the Resolutions.

Hon. Mr. Fisher said that there were resolutions of fruit growers to support the proposed bill. He read resolutions passed by the Fruit Growers' Associations of Ontario, of Quebec, of Nova Scotia, and of British Columbia. They all ask for the standardization of an export box of the size specified in the bill. Mr. Fisher also read letters from Canadian apple buyers and packers and English importers favoring the size specified in the bill. At Mr. Fisher's suggestion, the operation of the bill was postponed until June, 1906, in order to allow shippers to get rid of this year's crop, and the bill was given third reading and passed.

Senate and Railway Passes.

Ottawa, March 22.—For a couple of hours yesterday afternoon the Senate wrestled with the bill to amend the railway act in regard to the free transportation of members of Parliament. The object of the bill is to abolish passes and to require railways to carry members on presentation of a certificate signed by the Clerk of the House. The Senators seemed to be about evenly divided as to the merits of the bill. After a long discussion the committee rose and reported progress. The Murphy divorce bill was read a third time on division and passed.

FIFTY-FIVE DEAD.

Sixteen Identified Victims of the Brockton, Mass., Fire.

Brockton, Mass., March 22.—Fifty-five dead, sixteen identified, forty-eight missing and 255 employes of the factory accounted for, is, in brief, last night, the situation following Monday's mill catastrophe. For the first time since the fatal explosion razed the shoe factory of R. B. Grover & Co. the city seemed yesterday to fully realize the enormity of the calamity. This has been brought about by the positive identification, by bits of clothing, or otherwise, of several bodies, and the failure to return home of those who, had they survived, must have before sought their friends.

Parent Quits.

Quebec, Que., March 22.—After going through routine proceedings in the Legislature yesterday afternoon, Hon. Mr. Turgeon moved, seconded by Hon. Mr. McCorkill, that the House adjourn until the 23rd inst., in order to give Hon. Mr. Gouin, who has been sworn in as Prime Minister, time to construct his new Cabinet, which motion was adopted. Hon. S. N. Parent, ex-Prime Minister of the Province of Quebec, will leave for the United States to undergo expert medical treatment for his throat trouble.

Czar Must be First to Move.

Peace Proposal Must Come to Japan in His Name.

These Considerations Russia Now Recognizes, and an Actual Pacific Proposal May be Just Ahead—It Will Not Contain, However, Any Cession of Territory or Indemnity' as Czar is Opposed to Such Concessions

St. Petersburg, March 23.—The party within the Government which is urging the Emperor to indicate to Japan Russia's willingness to end the war if a reasonable basis can be reached, has been greatly encouraged the last few days, and an actual pacific proposal may be just ahead. The subject has occupied much of the attention of the conferences at Tsarskoe Selo.

Certain grand dukes, supported by Gen. Sakharoff, the Minister of War, Admiral Vellon, the head of the Admiralty, and what is known as the war party, are still bitterly opposed to the idea of peace under present circumstances; but with the exception of war and marine, the Emperor's ministers, headed by M. Witte, solidly favor the course and the convincing arguments they offer are telling.

Will Be Through France.

French influences in the same direction are now being supported by German opinion. The rumor noted by the Associated Press last week that Emperor William had tendered his good offices now seems to be confirmed. The Associated Press is in a position to assert, however, that if Emperor Nicholas decides to approach Japan it will be through France, and that negotiations will be conducted either between M. Delcasse, the French Foreign Minister, Mr. Delono, the Japanese Minister at Paris, or M. Harmand, the French Minister to Japan, and Count Katsura, the Japanese Premier at Tokio.

The Russian Government now feels certain that Japan will not make the first move, nor disclose her position until overtures are made authoritatively in the Russian Emperor's name, on the ground that he alone is capable of binding Russia.

No Cession or Indemnity.

The conferences concerning the question whether Russia should now indicate her willingness for peace, all agreed, firstly, that preparations to continue the war shall not be relaxed and incidentally to reject humiliating terms. There would probably be two points on which Russia would be found implacable, namely, cession of territory and indemnity, to neither of which, it is said, would Emperor Nicholas ever agree.

It is pointed out, however, that after Japan seriously desires enduring peace on collateral questions, Russia might be ready to offer liberal compensatory considerations.

Away North of Tie Pass.

Gunshu Pass, Manchuria, 108 miles north of Tie Pass, Monday, March 20.—The Russian rearguard is now at Sipinghai, 70 miles north of Tie Pass. The Japanese are slowly pursuing, but are not energetically pressing the rear. Apparently Field Marshal Oyama is holding his main army at Tie Pass. When the Russians evacuated Tie Pass March 15 one span of the five span bridge over the Tehai River, which falls into the Liao River just north of the town, was destroyed by dynamite immediately after the last train had been despatched northward. As the army moved northward the bridges of the railroad were disabled and every thing in the shape of stores, etc., which could not be taken was burned.

The Russian Retreat.

Tokio, March 23.—It is reported that the rearguard of the retreating Russians was 20 miles north of Kaiyuan (about 20 miles north of Tie Pass) Tuesday, the Japanese vanguard following closely. The Russians are retreating along the three main roadways, their destinations being Kirin and Changchun.

Jap Cavalry Appeared.

St. Petersburg, March 23.—A despatch from Gen. Linevitch, dated March 21, says: "Yesterday Japanese cavalry detachments appeared in front of one of our advance posts. Behind the cavalry were infantry, who halted at the Village of Machantzy."

Will Go to Meet Togo.

St. Petersburg, March 23.—At the Admiralty it is strongly intimated that Admiral Rojestvensky will effect a juncture with Admiral Nebogatoff within ten days and then proceed to meet Admiral Togo. The third division of the Russian second Pacific squadron, commanded by Rear Admiral Nebogatoff, left Suda Bay, Island of Crete, Tuesday for Port Said.

RUSSIA IN POLAND.

Compulsory Use of the Language May Be Abandoned.

St. Petersburg, March 23.—The abandonment of the compulsory use of the Russian language in the schools of Poland, one of the main features of the Government's Polish policy of the last thirty years, and the substitution therefor of Polish was discussed at a special meeting of the committee of ministers yesterday, a large majority headed by President Witte favoring a discontinuance of the attempt to Russify Poland by this method.

At another meeting of the ministers it was decided that it was inadvisable to attempt to resume work at the universities and other closed places of instruction until September 14.

The impatience at the delay in the realization of all the projected reforms is having an exceedingly bad effect. The various commissions are making little progress.

Military Fires on Peasants.

Warsaw, March 23.—Serious agrarian disturbances occurred yesterday at Kutno. It is reported that the military fired on peasant rioters and many were killed and wounded. There were similar riots at Ostrov, in the same district. The Governor of Warsaw, with the public prosecutor, has gone to investigate the affair.

Six Miners Killed.

Princeton, Ind., March 23.—Six miners were killed and four injured, two fatally, by an explosion in the mine of the Princeton Coal and Mining Co. yesterday.

500 Arrests Made.

St. Petersburg, March 23.—In connection with the peasant revolts there have been 500 arrests in the Dvinsk district, where, besides sacking and burning properties and compelling the owners to seek refuge in the towns, the rioters are killing cattle and felling trees.

Attempt to Assassinate.

St. Petersburg, March 23.—At Dvinsk yesterday afternoon an attempt was made to assassinate Assistant Commissioner of Police Degtereff. He assailant, who escaped, fired several shots at Degtereff and wounded him in the head.

ASPECT HAS CHANGED.

Naval World Not Like That of Fifteen Years Ago.

London, March 23.—In the House of Lords last evening the navel expenditure was lengthily discussed on the call of the Liberal leader, Earl Spencer, for papers regarding the naval program. He said he did not desire to condemn the Government, but he wanted an explanation of the plans involving the withdrawal of such a large number of vessels from the list of those which could be commissioned for active service, and the reasons for the increased expenditure since 1894-1905.

Viscount Goschen, former first Lord of the Admiralty, justified the [illegible] increase in the last fifteen years. [illegible] the two power standard was no longer applicable.

Lord Selborne, the First Lord of the Admiralty, said the increased expenditure was due to the fact that the whole naval aspect of the world east and west had changed within the last 15 years. New navies had sprung up. Russia recent had suffered great losses, but the Japanese fleet and the German navy had become factors, and the great French navy maintained its efficiency. Great Britain was not forcing the pace in shipbuilding.

At Lord Selborne's request Lord Spencer withdrew his motion for papers.

Between 60 and 75 Die.

Brockton, Mass., March 23.—City Marshal Boyden, after examining the pay-roll of the R. B. Grover shoe factory yesterday, estimated the number killed by Monday's explosion and fire at between 60 and 75. The factory books showed 400 employes enrolled, and 93 of these had not reported as having escaped up to 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon.

Pure Bred Stock Sale.

Guelph, March 23.—The second annual pure bred stock sale under the auspices of the Department of Agriculture, the Live Stock Association of Ontario and the Guelph Fat Stock Club, was held in the Winter Fair Building yesterday and was a success. Bidding was rather slack, and prices on the whole were low. The highest price paid was $250.

Germany Wants French Friendship.

London, March 23.—The Daily Chronicle this morning claims to have the authority of the German embassy at London for stating that Germany is anxious for a reconciliation with France, and that Emperor William is desirous of getting on terms of closest friendship with the French Government,

IN MEMORIAM.

REV. S. McCAULEY.

Who, having given so many years of service to the moral well-being of his fellow-men and his country, deserves this tribute. He was a brother beloved for character's worth, exemplifying in himself that "virtue is its own reward," and "Godliness with contentment is great gain." True to an early commission, "Go, work in my vineyard," he was strengthened in companionship, "Lo, I am with you," and while laboring for the rest and promised reward, the love of Christ constrained, impelled, inspired.

Samuel McCauley had but ordinary opportunities in his youth, was early soundly converted and received on probation in the Methodist ministry in 1871. For three years a faithful colleague, when he entered Cobourg College; an earnest student for two years, when he was ordained and stationed at Northport and Demorestville, where he was married to his most helpful companion, Miss Libbie Anderson. We knew our brother at his next circuit, Marmora, and subsequent fields of his labors more abundant at Cherry Valley, Smithfield, Oakwood and Warkworth, where he was serving a fourth year at his people's request, though failing in health. He reluctantly left the circuit early in this winter, taking up his residence in this city, from which all that was mortal was lovingly borne by his brethren to the last earthly resting place. His end came sudden and unexpected; he felt he was getting la grippe, which settled in pneumonia, and, being weak, he did not long withstand it, though clear in consciousness, restful in the gospel to the last, saying, "I am going to Jesus." A vision of glory was evidently before his eye, as he slept.

A grateful and fragrant memory of our brother's worth remains upon these circuits mentioned, where scores and hundreds were converted, churches built and property improved and his home life and family a benediction. And our brother paid the price of success in God's work. He sought not place or office or honor, had no other business or interest, was not associated with any other fraternity. He consecrated his noble, physical energies, his mental powers, were clear and incisive, giving the best preparation for each effort, the choice of language and the beauty of thought and illustration, while his own experience and life brought conviction and added to the inspiration of the truth presented.

"He tried each art, reproved each dull delay,
Allured to brighter worlds and led the way."

One of the advance guard has fallen, and from the line in action he heard "be faithful unto death. Partake my victory and thou shalt wear this glorious wreath, and thou shalt reign with me."

R.H.L.

Tar at the Bar.

(Watson's Magazine.)

It's like this here, Your Honor, see?
As near as I can tell.
A gentleman hired my boat, and he
Was quite a proper swell.
He brought a lady down with him
To make a longish trip,
And so we scrubbed her thoroughly—

Judge—The lady?
Tar—No! The ship.

Well—cutting off my story short
To come to what befell,
We started, but put back to port,
Which much annoyed the swell.
She fell between two water ways,
And got a nasty nip,
So we rigged her out with brand-new stays—

Judge—The lady?
Tar—No-o! The ship.

At last we put to sea again,
And started for the west,
All spick and span, without a stain,
When all at once, I'm blest,
Her blooming timbers got misplaced,
Which quite upset the trip,
The water washed around her waist—

Judge—The lady?
Tar, (nodding)—And the ship's.

That's all, I think, Your Honor, now,
I'll state to you my claim.
Five hundred dollars, you'll allow,
Won't build her up the same.
Her rudder's gone, her nose is broke,
Her flag I've had to dip;
She's lying now upon the mud—

Judge—The lady?
Tar—No-oo-o-o! The ship.

Daily Intelligencer.

LACK OF APPRECIATION.

Canada has had many times to complain of the lack of appreciation of British statesmen. Nowadays they seem to be imbued with the idea of pandering to the United States quite as much as formerly. They do not fully know the feelings which really exists in Canada regarding the country. We, as an exchange remarks, owe the States nothing, rather the reverse; we are independent of them; all our wishes are towards closer commercial ties with Great Britain and the British Empire.

Therefore, how foolish is it for the British Postmaster-General to set his face against trying to devise some scheme by which British literature could be encouraged in seeking currency here. The question goes beyond literature, as everyone knows, for the American journals are padded with advertisements and trade is brought about, to the disadvantage of Great Britain.

Here is the latest report upon the subject; and it would be as well if the important papers in the Old Country devoted themselves to the subject:

"Replying to a deputation of members of Parliament, introduced by Sir Gilbert Parker, Lord Stanley disposed of all hope of a reduction of postage on British newspapers and magazines to Canada at least while he remained Postmaster-General.

"Sir Gilbert Parker said the deluging of Canada by American magazines many containing 50 to 75 per cent. advertisements, did a great deal to divert trade from Great Britain to the States. He referred to resolutions passed in Canada, and read a petition signed by the President of the Canadian Press Association, Mr. John A. Cooper; by the president of the British Empire League, and by Hon. G. W. Ross, late Premier of Ontario, amongst others. Sir Gilbert also commented upon the people becoming imbued with American ideas, asked that the rate should be reduced from four pence to a penny a pound.

"Mr. Alfred Ammott, M.P., said it was an important question of Imperial solidarity. At present facilities were allowed for a non-British atmosphere to exist there.

"Lord Stanley said he had great sympathy with the sentimental side, but his business was to run his department on a business basis. The only method by which the matter could be remedied would be to equalize the British rates with those of the United States. That he calculated would mean a loss of revenue of three millions sterling, and that was impossible. He suggested that at the time of the convention with the United States in 1875, Canada was not so friendly towards Great Britain as now. The best remedy was to raise the American rates, which, he thought, the American authorities would not object to.

"In answer to General Laurie, he refused to consider the question of reducing newspapers to the domestic rate."

IRISH JAP GENERALS.

O'YAMA AND O'KEOUGH THEIR REAL NAMES — HOW IT ALL HAPPENED.

Logansport, March 22.—New light upon Japanese history was cast at the St. Patrick's banquet of the Ancient Order of Hibernians in this city. O. P. Smith, State labor organizer, aroused the enthusiasm of his hearers to a high pitch by declaring that the Japanese Generals, Oyama and Oku, were descendants of Irishmen and still bore the original Irish names of the families, slightly modified.

"Oyama is of Irish ancestry," said Smith, "and his name as originally borne by his forbears was O'Yama. The original O'Yama, whose given name was Patrick, left Ireland during the Elizabethan era for France, but was shipwrecked in the Bay of Biscay, and rescued by a Spanish ship bound for the Philippines. He was taken there and cast adrift. His descendants went to Japan and turned naturally to the career of fighting men. Intermarriage with the natives gave them standing and position close to the Mikado, which was advanced by their activity in military affairs.

"Gen. Oku's name originally was O'Keough, who though a military genius, was a poor hand at spelling. The rigors of the Japanese alphabet proved too great for him, and by Imperial edict he was given permission to cut out a few letters. Thus the family name became Oku and the sons and grandsons after many generations followed the fighting trade."

LISBON'S WARM WELCOME TO BRITAIN'S QUEEN

MET BY TWO GOLDEN GALLEYS—ROWERS DRESSED IN MEDIAEVAL COSTUMES — QUEEN'S PATH STREWN WITH THOUSANDS OF FLOWERS.

Lisbon, March 22.—Queen Alexandra of Great Britain to-day was given a hearty welcome to Portugal. The harbor was crowded with gaily decorated steamers and yachts, and the British Royal yacht ascended the river amid volleying salutes.

Two great golden galleys, pulled by 80 boatmen in mediaeval costumes of scarlet and gold, took out King Charles, his suite and Ministers to meet the Royal guest. A beautiful pavilion had been erected on the quay for the reception formalities. After the Queen Dowager of Portugal had met Queen Alexandra at the steps of the quay, an imposing procession of State carriages and officials took the guest and her suite to the palace amid rousing cheers. The route of the procession was decorated with flags and streamers, and many thousands of camelias and other flowers had been distributed to be thrown to Queen Alexandra as the procession passed, while hundreds of pigeons with ribbons of British colors tied to their necks were liberated and mingled in the shower of flowers.

It transpires that the storm which compelled the British Royal yacht to put in at Vigo for shelter was so violent as to cause the Royal party the greatest anxiety and discomfort. Princess Victoria, owing to weakness consequent upon her recent illness, was completely unnerved. The heavy seas damaged the yacht's fittings. Nobody aboard slept from noon Monday till Tuesday morning. Princess Victoria has now recovered.

Nervousness

READ MY OFFER—A FULL DOLLAR'S WORTH OF MY REMEDY FREE TO TRY — WITHOUT DEPOSIT, OR RISK, OR PROMISE TO PAY.

Nervousness, fretfulness, restlessness, sleeplessness, irritability — all are the outward signs of inward nerve disturbance. The fault is not with the nerves which give you warning—not with the nerves which enable you to feel, to walk, to talk, to think, to see. But the "inside" nerves, the automatic power nerves—these are the nerves that work wears out and worry breaks down.

I have not room here to explain how these tender, tiny nerves control and operate the stomach, the heart, the kidneys, the liver. How excesses and strains and overindulgence destroy their delicate fibres. How, through a bond of sympathy, weakness in one center is conveyed to each of the other centers. How this same bond of sympathy produces the outward signs of nervousness which should warn us of the trouble within. I have not room to explain how these nerves may be reached and strengthened and vitalized and made well by a remedy I spent thirty years in perfecting—now known by druggists everywhere as Dr. Shoop's Restorative. I have not room to explain how this remedy, by removing the cause, puts a certain end to all forms of nervousness, inward and outward, including fretfulness, restlessness, sleeplessness, irritability. All of these things are fully explained in the book I will send you when you write.

In more than a million homes my remedy is known and relied upon. Yet you may not have heard of it. So I make this offer to you, a stranger, that every possible excuse for doubt may be removed. Send no money—make no promise—take no risk. Simply write and ask. If you have never tried my remedy, I will send you an order on your druggist for a full dollar bottle—not a sample, but the regular standard bottle he keeps constantly on his shelves. The druggist will require no conditions. He will accept my order as cheerfully as though your dollar lay before him. He will send the bill to me.

Will you accept this opportunity to learn at "my expense absolutely" how to be rid forever of all forms of nervousness—to be rid not only of the trouble, but of the very cause which produced it? Write to-day.

For a free order for a full dollar bottle you must address Dr. Shoop, Box 69 Racine, Wis. State which book you want.

STORIES FOR THE LADIES

THE WOMAN WITH A MISSION.

The other day I met a young woman who had a mission in life and was earnestly endeavoring to further it.

The object of her mission is not pertinent to this article.

What I want to talk about is her manner of trying to convert others to her view. It was, to say the least, unfortunate.

Instead of sounding her listeners and finding out their views of the subject she flung her theories at them in an imperative manner that antagonized them before they half understood what she was getting at.

Their principal idea was "Gracious, if this woman is a fair representative of the cause she is fighting for, let me stand for anything else!"

She demanded their conversion rather than invited it.

If there was a gentle side to her character it was entirely submerged.

She was earnest, energetic, wholesome, everything but womanly.

I doubt exceedingly her power of bringing many converts into the fold.

In order to bring conviction it is necessary to be forcible, but it is not necessary to fling out your argument as though it were a bombshell.

Just as soon as a woman grows self-assertive, domineering, she ceases to convince.

The woman who thrusts herself before the public must make up her mind to one thing, and that is that she must be content to be treated much as though she were a man.

Of course, you hear many women declare nowadays, that they wish they were men. But when it comes to treating them as such they cry out very quickly.

There is not one woman in five thousand who is absolutely content to be treated in all respects as though she were a man.

What she wants to be is an emancipated woman, with all the privileges of a man and all the alternatives of a woman. Unfortunately the two do not go together.

A woman rarely gains her point by positiveness. She can do no better than by sticking to her time-honored womanly wiles of persuasiveness and gentleness. It is by making herself and her subject attractive that she gains most adherents.

A business man will listen to a soft-voiced, gentle-mannered woman when he will turn a rough, unfeminine woman out of his office.

Never try to gain a point by neglecting the privileges of your sex.

PROGRESS OF THE CAMPAGIN.

Fighting of an important character has ceased for the time being, and the three shattered Russian armies are reorganizing and concentrating at Changchun, a point about half way between Tie Pass and Harbin. Pursuing with their usual thoroughness their plans for the complete conquest of Manchuria, the Japanese are advancing in three directions: along the railway to Harbin, along the high road to Kirin, and along the Yalu and the coast to Vladivostok. How the Russians can hope successfully to meet these three movements the military critics do not profess to know.

In one of these movements in the direction of Kirin and Vladivostok it may be expected that General Kamamura's army will play an important part. At the end of last year a new and very solid army consisting of more than six divisions of territorial troops was formed under General Kamamura, and during the first three weeks of January the whole of it was transported to the theatre of war. Is it marching upon Vladivostok? Has it pushed up from the Yalu via Shingking to prolong Kuroki's line? Has it followed Nogi and marched on to complete the northern line of hurdles round the Russian flock? The critics have not the faintest idea, but if this magnificent force fails to appear upon the scene at the decisive moment there will be every cause for legitimate surprise.

Within ten days, it is announced from St. Petersburg, Admiral Rojestvensky will effect a juncture with Admiral Nebogatoff and then proceed to meet Admiral Togo. Rojestvensky's force, including, as it does, more than twenty battleships and cruisers, nine of which have been built since 1900, is nominally much superior to that of Admiral Togo. A Japanese squadron, the size of which is unknown, is known to be cruising south of Singapore, with the obvious intention of intercepting Rojestvensky should he attempt to traverse the Straits of Malacca or the Straits of Sunda.

It is probable that he will enter the China Sea by one of the many channels that traverse the Indian archipelago. In that event his Japanese opponent should be able to learn of his movements in time to meet him with all of the war vessels that Japan can spare for the purpose, part of her fleet being needed to protect communications with the mainland against a possible attack on the part of the Russian cruisers stationed at Vladivostok.

There seems to be a consensus among naval experts that, owing to the superior efficiency of the Japanese seamen, engineers and gunners, Togo will be able to destroy or disperse the Russian fleet, but from a strategic point of view there is manifestly a large element of chance in the matter, and anxiety must needs be intense at Tokio until the outcome of the naval battle is made known. Togo's defeat and the consequent interruption of communications between Japan and the Asiatic Continent would, of course, spell catastrophe; and even Rojestvensky's safe arrival at Vladivostok would materially change the aspect of things. — The Globe.

MODERN MASSACRE OF THE INNOCENTS.

RUSSIAN POLICE GUILTY OF HORRIBLE BRUTALITY — TERRIBLE SCENES DURING A STRIKE AT KURSK—BOYS AND GIRLS KICKED TO DEATH.

Berlin, March 22. — Heartrending accounts of awful brutality towards children have been received from Russia. These accounts would be regarded as incredible were they not vouched for by Russian papers of such standing as Russkija Vjedomosti.

On Feb. 11 the schoolboys of Kursk resolved to strike, and on the next day a procession of them made a tour of the principal streets, and were augmented from the chief educational establishments of the city.

The strikers were accompanied throughout by the police, who did not interfere, even when the boys broke the schoolhouse windows and played other schoolboy pranks.

Suddenly, however, on an appointed signal, the police and their creatures fell on the school children, who had collected on a large, open space, from all sides, the former with their swords, the latter with their fists. Blows were rained on children's heads and faces. Any boy or girl who fell was dragged up by the hair, and then thrown down again and kicked with the heavily-booted feet of these butchers.

In one case a watchman seized an 11-year-old boy. He struck him to the ground, and beat his head on the stone pavement.

Escape from the ruffians there was none, for police and watchmen had been posted with knouts to drive back any scholars who attempted to escape.

One old railway official said that on the news reaching him early in the afternoon of the children being flogged, he and other fathers went to the scene of the tumult and there saw "many children, 10, 11 and 12 years old, with their faces streaming with blood, and their hair torn out, while those on the ground were being cruelly kicked."

The chief of police, Col. Weik, was a spectator of the butchery, and to some civilians who implored him to use his authority to stop the massacre he coolly replied: "Gentlemen, you know I am a peaceable man, and cannot help."

It is generally believed that the outrage was organized by the police, and that it could have been stopped at any moment.

YOUR MIRROR TELLS THE TRUTH

If your mirror tells you that your face is losing its roundness, the eyes their lustre and the cheeks their glow, don't blame the mirror. You are losing flesh—there's a waste somewhere. Try the scales. You don't tip the beam at the point you did formerly. It's several notches back. Try on last year's clothing. Doesn't fit so snugly, perhaps. These are all evidences that you need Scott's Emulsion because you need more flesh. Nothing picks up lost flesh or stops wasting like

SCOTT'S EMULSION

Losing flesh may be all right for people who are overweight, but the average person can spare little and retain the even balance of health. If your body is in need of more flesh, try Scott's Emulsion. If there are any evidences of wasting, try Scott's Emulsion. It will put you back in normal condition and restore your lost weight so quickly that you will wonder why you didn't try it before.

WHAT OSLER REALLY SAID.

NEW YORK MEDICAL JOURNAL TELLS THE STORY—SAYS JOKE IS ON YANKEES.

New York, March 22.—"Echoes and News," an important medical journal of New York, in an editorial, "Much Ado About Nothing," has something to say about the frenzied persons who have been criticizing Dr. Wm. Osler. It runs as follows:

The American favorite funny story is about the Englishman who cannot see a joke. The tomato story with "They eat what they can and tin the rest," has circled the globe, and "What was the matter with the custard pie?" is equally famous. But now it is the Englishman's turn to laugh. We fancy that for some years to come no American on English soil can hear the word "chloroform" without feeling silly.

Americans may not know that with all their ability to see a joke they are world-famous for not being able to take a joke; and a more jovial joker, a more epigrammatic and witty member of society than Dr. Osler never made after-dinner speeches.

The furore has been raised over his retiring speech at John Hopkins reminds one of the "Hobson's kiss" episode, and the "Dewey's house" business. It is on a par with the marvellous facility of the press to kindle a mighty flame from a very little matter, and it illustrates most delightfully our national tendency to take ourselves very seriously. We can ha, ha at our neighbor's expense, but not at ourselves.

Now, when Dr. Osler in his dry and genial matter wished modestly to indicate to his fellow-workers that he felt he had lived his best days with them, he facetiously quoted from Anthony Trollope's novel, "The Fixed Idea," the scheme on which the plot hinges, of a college into which at 60 men should retire for a year of contemplation before a peaceful departure by chloroform. He adds, pointing at himself the barb which all the solemn readers of the daily news claim was hurled at their self-respecting selves, these words: "That incalculable benefits might follow such a scheme is apparent to anyone who, like myself, is nearing the limit, and who, like myself, has made a careful study of the calamities which may befall men during the seventh and eighth decade."

He then adds, after recounting some of the well-known follies of the age: "The teacher's life should have three periods. Study until 25, investigation until 40, profession until 60, at which time he should be retired on a double allowance." The press missed this point.

To round up his playful allusion, he says, with affected hesitation: "Whether Anthony Trollope's suggestion of a college and chloroform should be carried out I have become a little dubious, as my own time is getting too short."

Dr. Osler is taking with him to Oxford a curious epistolary collection, for he has been bombarded with letters, telegrams and articles from the senile and the presenile all over the country, stating in good set terms why they should not be chloroformed.

If Dr. Osler was to stay with us much longer we fear that he would have to take to heart the advice of John G. Saxe, who says:

"Learn to wear a sober phiz,
Be stupid, if you can;
It's such a very serious thing
To be a funny man."

SELL YOUR COLD FOR $1?

You surely won't stop at a dollar bill to cure that horrid, sniffeling cold? Go to any druggist and get "Catarrhozone" and your cold will be a thing of the past. There is almost witchery in the swift way Catarrhozone kills colds. But when you consider the penetrating, healing and antiseptic qualities of Catarrhozone perhaps it's not so wonderful. Certainly there is no remedy half so prompt for colds and catarrh as Catarrhozone. Refuse a substitute and insist on having only "Catarrhozone."

Revival Stops Dancing

Sterling, Ill., March 22. — As a result of a great religious revival which has just closed in Dixon, five dancing clubs have disbanded and several thousand persons have taken an oath not to frequent bar-rooms and not to have anything to do with dancing parties or card tables. The Kendal Club, a charitable organization which raises several thousand dollars a year for charity, voted not to hold any more dances and gave three hundred dollars to William A. Sunday, the "baseball evangelist." During the revival three bartenders were converted. A basket collection was taken for the evangelist, who got $750 for his four weeks' work. It is estimated that 180,000 persons attended the meetings and that there were at least 2,000 conversions.

A CAUSE OF HEADACHE.

ONE VERY COMMON CAUSE, GENERALLY OVERLOOKED.

Headache is a symptom, an indication of derangement or disease in some organ, and the cause of the headache is difficult to locate because so many diseases have headache as a prominent symptom; derangement of the stomach and liver, heart trouble, kidney disease, lung trouble, eye strain or ill-fitting glasses all produce headaches and if we could always locate the organ which is at fault the cure of obstinate headaches would be a much simpler matter.

However, for that form of headache called frontal headache, pain back of the eyes and in forehead, the cause is now known to be catarrh of the head and throat; when the headache is located in back of head and neck it is often caused from catarrh of the stomach or liver.

At any rate, catarrh is the most common cause of such headaches and the cure of the catarrh causes a prompt disappearance of the headaches.

There is at present no treatment for catarrh so convenient and effective as Stuart's Catarrh Tablets, a new internal remedy in tablet form, composed of antiseptics like red gum, blood root, which act upon the blood and cause the elimination of the catarrhal poison from the system through the natural channels.

Miss Cora Ainsley, a prominent school teacher in one of our normal schools, speaks of her experience with catarrhal headaches and eulogizes Stuart's Catarrh Tablets as a cure for them. She says: "I suffered daily from severe frontal headache and pain in the back of the eyes, at times so intensely as to incapacitate me in my daily duties. I had suffered from catarrh, more or less for years, but never thought it was the cause of my headaches, but finally became convinced that such was the case because the headaches were always worse whenever I had a cold or fresh attack of catarrh.

"Stuart's Catarrh Tablets were highly recommended to me as a safe and pleasant catarrh cure and after using a few fifty cent boxes which I procured from my druggist's I was surprised and delighted to find that both the catarrh and headaches had gone for good."

Stuart's Catarrh Tablets are sold by druggists at fifty cents per package, under the guarantee of the proprietors that they contain absolutely no cocaine (found in so many catarrh cures), no opium (so common in cheap cough cures), nor any harmful drug. They contain simply the wholesome antiseptics necessary to destroy and drive from the system the germs of catarrhal disease.

NEW JOBS FOR THEM.

(Hamilton Herald.)

It seems odd to read of Tory lawyers being appointed to conduct the Crown business at county assizes. For over thirty years Tory lawyers have had no experience as Crown Prosecutors. It is to be feared that some of them will be seized with stage fright when they begin their unaccustomed duties.

The Grits in Kingston, it would appear by the article from the Whig in another column, censure Rielly only for one thing, namely, telling the truth last November. A few days ago the Hamilton Spectator noted the fact that, fifty years ago, the English and Scotch societies always turned out and walked with the Irish societies on St. Patrick's day. The Toronto Globe, noting this, wondered what was the reason why the different national societies do not fraternize now, like they used to. The Spectator comes back with the emphatic declaration that the cause can be traced to the establishment of Separate schools, which have pried Protestants and Catholics apart, kept them at arms' length, and are forcing them farther apart every day.

Cured of Piles.

AFTER SUFFERING MORE THAN TWENTY-FIVE YEARS.

TRIAL PACKAGE MAILED FREE.

"Until about two years ago I had had piles for about thirty years, at times bleeding and very painful. I got a fifty cent box of Pyramid Pile Cure at the drug store, and used it and was entirely cured; got another box in case I needed it, and as the piles did not return in six months I gave the remedy to a friend of mine, who wanted the doctor to operate to cure him. My friend said he would use the "Pyramids," but he knew they would do him no good, but they cured him of piles of twenty-five years' standing. I am free from Piles to-day, and have been since using Pyramid Pile Cure. I was captain in the Civil War."—Jas. Adams, Soldiers' Home, Cal.

The majority of people labor under the impression that an operation is necessary in severe cases of piles, or hemorrhoids, and are very skeptical regarding the remedial virtues of any medicinal compound. Testimony like the above should certainly have a tendency to dispel this impression, although it is odd that such a fallacy should prevail, and still more odd that so many people should think an operation effects a permanent cure, whereas the contrary is more often the case.

Just send your name and address to Pyramid Drug Co., 2111 Main St., Marshall, Mich., and receive free by return mail the trial package in a plain wrapper. Thousands have been cured in this easy, painless and inexpensive way, in the privacy of the home. No knife and its torture. No doctor and his bills.

All druggists, 50 cents. Write to-day for a free package.

DOMINION HAS NO RIGHT

To Impose Separate Schools on the New Provinces.

R.L. BORDEN'S GREAT SPEECH

Shows That Sir Wilfrid Laurier Violates Constitution in the Education Clauses of Autonomy Bills — In Strong and Brilliant Argument Leader of Opposition Pleads for the Right of the Provinces to Manage Their Own Educational Affairs.

Ottawa, March 23.—The school question, arising out of the autonomy bill, cleared this much yesterday that both political parties have revealed their attitude towards it. R. L. Borden showed in no unmistakeable way that he is opposed to the restriction of the powers of the new Provinces in dealing with their educational affairs. He dealt with the question almost wholly from a constitutional standpoint.

In an argument which was strong throughout and at times brilliant, the leader of the Opposition showed that the Dominion Parliament has no right to impose separate schools on the new Provinces. Such interference, he said, would violate both the letter and the spirit of the constitution. He brought to the support of this contention authorities like Justice Davies, Justice Girouard, Hon. David Mills, Sir John Thompson.

A speech made by Sir Wilfrid Laurier himself in the House in 1890 was summoned to the support of the principle, which is being violated by the separate schools clauses of the autonomy bill. It showed clearly that at that time Sir Wilfrid was convinced that separate schools were only temporarily imposed on the Northwest.

Party Left Free.

Mr. Borden said he did not desire that the question should be made a party political question, which was taken to mean that party loyalty will not be invoked in the fierce fight which is to be waged against the separate schools clauses.

The amendment moved by Mr. Borden was a diplomatic one. It concurs in the principle of the bill, which is that of granting autonomy to the Territories, but declares "That the Legislatures of the new Provinces subject to and in accordance with the provisions of the B. N. A. Acts of 1867 to 1896 is entitled to and should enjoy full powers of Provincial self-government, including power to exclusively make laws in relation to education." Mr. Borden made it clear that he did not argue for separate schools or about separate schools, but for the right of the Provinces to manage their own educational affairs.

Laurier Overshadowed.

As a constitutional argument Mr. Borden's speech completely annihilated and overshadowed the weak appeal in which Sir Wilfrid Laurier presented the bill to the House on its second reading. The Premier's feeble efforts to picture the separate school clauses as a moral and legal obligation imposed on the Dominion Parliament were not even plausible. He did not clear up a single one of the numerous lines of constitutional argument he attempted. In each case he fell back on the contention that the minority in the Territories have a just claim to separate schools in perpetuity.

Juggle with the facts of history and the clauses of the B. N. A. Act as he would, the Premier ultimately found himself forced to regard the real question as a question of policy. So Hon. W. S. Fielding regarded it. Mr. Fielding was not in good form when he undertook to reply to the leader of the Opposition last night. Perhaps his heart was not in his words. But he was able to get the crowd behind him cheering. He threw the constitutional question to the winds, declared the real question to be a practical question and rang the changes on the moral and legal rights of the minority of the Northwest and the duties which impose themselves on the majority in mixed communities.

Fielding's Suggestions.

Towards the end of his rather remarkable speech, Mr. Fielding suggested that it would be a terrible thing if the autonomy bill were defeated, and Sir Wilfrid Laurier had to resign. There was no one who could take his place on the Government side of the House. And he doubted if the leader of the Opposition would undertake to form a Government on religious lines. It would be found, however, that when the vote was taken there would be a united Government, with a united party behind it, something that the Opposition would not be able to do. There was no party crisis, but if the Prime Minister had to resign, and the leader of the Opposition were called upon to form a Government, he would have to form a Protestant Government.

"Shame! Shame!" said an Opposition member.

"Who says shame?" demanded the Minister of Finance.

"It is the first time religion has been brought into this question," said E. B. Osler.

Mr. Fielding repeated that a Government formed by the Opposition would have to be formed on religious lines, since the Catholics were united on one side, and the Protestants were keeping up the agitation on the other side.

Dr. Sproule moved the adjournment of the debate.

Reinforcements Needed.

Constantinople, March 23.—The Minister of War has been ordered to hold further battalions in readiness for service in Yemen Province, Arabia, but in the meanwhile the Government is unable to obtain ships to convey to Arabia the troops already awaiting transportation. Reinforcements are urgently needed. The casualties of the Imperial forces since the outbreak of the insurrection are already estimated at from 4,000 to 5,000 men.

Tornado's Death Sweep.

Roanoke, Ala., March 23.—Reports have reached here of a disastrous tornado which swept across the southern part of Randolph County, late Monday night. Eight or nine lives are known to have been lost, and damage amounting to thousands of dollars was done to property.

An Irishman gave his wife away by talking in his sleep. That is nothing. Plenty of wives give their husbands away by talking while awake.

It is worse than madness to neglect a cough, or cold which is easily subdued if taken in time but becomes, when left to itself, the forerunner of consumption and premature death. Inflammation, when it attacks the delicate tissue of the lungs and bronchial tubes, travels with perilous rapidity; then do not delay, get a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, the medicine that grasps this formidable foe of the human body, and drives it from the system. This medicine promotes a free and easy expectoration, subdues the cough, heals the diseased parts, and exerts a most wonderful influence in curing consumption, and other diseases of the throat and lungs. If parents wish to save the lives of their children, and themselves from much anxiety, trouble and expense, let them procure a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, and whenever a child has taken cold, has a cough or hoarseness, give the Syrup according to directions.

What is that which is lengthened by being cut at both ends? Answer—A ditch.

It is the Farmer's Friend. — The farmer will find in Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil a potent remedy for wounds or pains in the body or for affections of the respiratory organs and for household use generally. He will also find it a convenient friend in treating injured horses, cattle, etc., or relieving them when attacked by colds, coughs or any kindred ailments to which they are subject.

Why is bread like the sun? Answer—Because it rises from the yeast.

Not a Nauseating Pill.—The excipient of a pill is the substance which enfolds the ingredients and makes up the pill mass. That of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills is so compounded as to preserve their moisture, and they can be carried into any latitude without impairing their strength. Many pills, in order to keep them from adhering, are rolled in powders, which prove nauseating to the taste. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are so prepared that they are agreeable to the most delicate.

If you were to ride a donkey what fruit would you resemble? Answer—A pair.

How to Cleanse the System.—Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are the result of scientific study of the effects of extracts of certain roots and herbs upon the digestive organs. Their use has demonstrated in many instances that they regulate the action of the liver and the kidneys, purify the blood, and carry off all morbid accumulations from the system. They are easy to take, and their action is mild and beneficial.

What black thing enlightens the world? Answer—Ink.

To discern and deal immediately with causes and overcome them, rather than to battle with effects after the disease has secured a lodgment, is the chief aim of the medical man, and Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup is the result of patient study along this particular line. At the first appearance of a cold the Syrup will be found a most efficient remedy, arresting development and speedily healing the affected parts, so that the ailment disappears.

Name something with two heads and one body. Answer—A barrel.

Worms cause feverishness, moaning and restlessness during sleep. Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator is pleasant, sure and effectual. If your druggist has none in stock, get him to procure it for you.

What coat is finished without buttons and put on wet? Answer—A coat of paint.

Is there anything more annoying than having your corn stepped upon? Is there anything more delightful than getting rid of it? Holloway's Corn Cure will do it. Try it and be convinced.

Those three words will in part form the meaning of our decorative painting — paperhanging and wall paper departments for the year 1905.

1904 was the largest trade in our history for any one year notwithstanding the several small stocks shown in opposition.

Ample evidence this that the purchasing public favor the large assortment from which to select.

This year already we have placed in stock nearly sixty thousand rolls of the newest and finest of wall papers possible to find and with twenty years of hunting we know where to find the game—.

For your convenience and our profit we have a staff of workmen engaged for 1905 numbering twenty. Expert workmen in their several branches—of Paperhanging — painting, decorating, graining, etc.

At the present time we have a number of our workmen executing decorative work in Toronto — we go anywhere for business — no city too large, no village too small!

Linked by Fate

BY CHARLES GARVICE

Author of "The Verdict of the Heart," "A Heritage of Hate," "Nell of Shorne Mills," "Paid For," "A Modern Juliet." Etc.

"Well, what did you think of it?" asked Polly when they got home. "All alive, isn't it, and it goes with a bang, eh?"

Nina expressed her admiration for the big piece, but was silent about the first; and Polly nodded, as if Nina had criticized it.

"Yes, the first piece, 'For a Sister's Sake,' is feeble, isn't it?"

"Yes," said Nina with deference. "The idea is a very pretty and effective one, but they talk—"

"Like people in a book, one of the old frumpish books, I know."

"And they're never surprised at the most extraordinary coincidences," continued Nina, warming to her subject. "Nothing astonishes them. When the man comes back from America with a million of money nobody asks him how he made it in four months; when the heroine gives up her sister to the hero they all take it as a matter of course, as if it didn't matter—"

"And it doesn't—to the audience," said Polly.

"And the little girl—"

"'Shall I be a hanged when I die, mother?'" quoted Polly. "Yes; if any sensible mother had a child like that she'd put its head in a bucket."

"How is it that Mr. Harcourt, who must be a clever man, puts on such a silly first piece?" asked Nina.

Polly shrugged her shoulders. "Oh, they don't think of anything but 'My Lady Pride.' Anything's good enough to play the people in. It's only the pit and gallery and a sprinkle in the upper circle."

"Poor people! What have they done that they should be bored to death?" said Nina.

"Oh, well," responded Polly, "perhaps it makes 'em all the keener to see the big piece. See? But all the same I'm sorry for the people who play in it. Miss Tracey, for instance—who plays the idiotic sister—can act awfully well if she has a part to suit her."

The toque was as great a success as the preceding "confections" Nina had turned out, and nearly every day Polly brought home a fresh order. She put the price up, of course, and the joint earnings of the two girls enabled them not only to live better, but to go for little outings in the day time; so that Nina's face began to lose its sharpness and something of the old light began to creep back to her eyes. Polly made her promise not to work at the millinery at night, and Nina passed the time while Polly was at the theatre in reading—and dreaming of the past. One night Polly asked her to go to the theatre to see Miss Tracey, who wanted a new hat, and insisted upon giving the instructions herself. "We can't have her here; they'd all want to come." Nina hesitated, but at last consented. "Behind the scenes" is always somewhat awe-inspiring to the novice, and Nina made a nervous grab at Polly's hand as they passed amongst the forest of wings and "back cloths" to Miss Tracey's dressing-room.

That young lady was making up for the idiotic first piece; but, after a stare of something like surprise, she received Nina in the friendly "hail fellow well met" fashion of the profession and explained what it was she wanted. The call-boy summoned her in the midst of her elaborate description.

"Don't go yet; wait till I come off again, Miss Wood," she said. "P'r'aps you'd like to go to the wings and see the play. I'll put it right with the stage-manager."

She got the permission and Nina went up and stood out of sight. She'd seen the play once too often; and instead of listening to the vapid dialogue she let her mind wander. It wandered in so strange a direction that she roused herself with a start.

"Well, silly thing, isn't it?" said Miss Tracey with a moue of disgust. "I wonder they stand it. But it's wonderful what the Great B. P. will stand. About the hat, Miss Wood," etc.

Nina could not sleep that night. The idea that had come to her as she stood at the wings haunted her; and the next evening she almost mechanically got a pen and some paper and began to write. She was so absorbed in her task that she lost count of the hours, and had only just time to snatch up the many sheets she had covered and thrust them into a drawer as Polly came in.

The next night she took them out and fell to work again, read what she had written, and was going to tear it up; but something held her hand, and with a grimace she put them away in the drawer again.

She had a headache the following evening, and Polly insisted upon her staying in bed to breakfast.

"You'll take a holiday to-day, Miss Wood," she said, sternly. "In fact, if you're not better when I come home, I sha'n't let you touch a hat for a fortnight. You're looking almost as pale as when I fou— when you came to 'cheer my solitary lot.' You'll just sit up with a shawl over you like the regulation invalid. Wonder why we always put on a shawl when we're queer? A man doesn't put on a great coat."

She went to the drawer for the shawl and found the sheets of paper. On the front page was written:

"Betrothed: A Play in One Act."

Now, a play has no sacredness for an actress, and Polly, after she had put the shawl round Nina, went back to the sitting-room they now shared and read "Betrothed" without a scruple.

When she had finished it she jumped up, slipped on her hat and jacket and stole stealthily down stairs to the girl typewriter who lodged on the first floor back.

"How soon can you copy that?" she asked.

"This day week," said the girl, wearily.

Polly laughed. "Get it done in three hours—oh, I know how long it will take; lodged with a typewriter once—and I'll give you an extra two shillings."

"Make it half-a-crown," said the girl, wistfully; and Polly made it half-a-crown.

Nina got up in the evening—she felt strangely exhausted all day—and going to the drawer took out the MSS. and burnt it carefully and slowly sheet by sheet. Then she sighed heavily, and shaking herself, as one shakes off an illusion and a weakness, got a book and read; but every now and then she looked at the fire which had consumed her "Betrothed," and checked a sigh larger even than the first.

Polly carried the typewritten copy to the theatre. But she did not fly to the manager and exclaim that she had a masterpiece in her possession; she was too clever for such folly. She knew too well that Mr. Harcourt would recoil as if the word "play" were synonymous with "snake."

It is true that managers live by plays, but—ah, well, it is easier for a millionaire to dispose of his millions than for a new author to persuade a manager to look at the first effort.

She went to Miss Tracey—to talk about the hat—and dropped the play just by the door, where Miss Tracey found it, glanced at it with surprise, pitched it behind the looking-glass, and promptly forgot it. Her maid, hunting for some grease paint, found it and laid it on the top of the pincushion. Miss Tracey picked it up resentfully and attacked the manager with it when he came into the room a little later.

"I wish you wouldn't leave your silly plays about, Mr. Harcourt," she said, pettishly.

"No play of mine," he said with listless indignation.

"Then where did it come from?"

"Don't know, don't want to know. Want to speak to you about this first thing. Have to come off. People won't stand it."

"I'm not surprised. It's worse than bad. What will you put in its place?"

Mr. Harcourt mentioned an "old favorite."

Miss Tracey shrieked "Not for me, thanks!"

"'Pon my soul, there's no pleasing you!" he grumbled as he left the room.

Miss Tracey threw the play aside, then picked it up, saw that it was typewritten and began to read it. In less than five minutes her attitude changed from peevish disquietude to one of absorbed attention, and presently she sprang to her feet and called impatiently to her maid.

"Jenny, this play—who brought it here—who's been in my room? Yesterday it was. Now, keep your eyes in your head, though so far as their usefulness goes you might drop them. Quick!"

Jenny assured her that no one had been in the room—excepting Miss Bainford.

"Then fetch Miss Bainford."

Jenny had not far to go; Polly was hovering in the corridor.

"Oh, Miss Tracey, I left it here then!" she exclaimed. "I'm so glad I found it! I thought I must have dropped it in the street. Oh, thank you!" She held out her hand, with an innocent expression.

Miss Tracey whipped hers behind her back.

"Who wrote it? It's—its' not bad," she said. No actor will admit that a play is good unless he has the leading part actually in his possession. No manager will admit, under any circumstances, that a play is good. It would hurt him too much.

The belief that no woman can write a successful play still exists, notwithstanding some notable instances to the contrary; and Polly, who was quite aware of the prejudice, which is as hard to kill as an annuitant, said, with the same innocent expression:

"Oh, it's my friend Miss Wood's brother. He's an invalid—a cripple. His name's Herbert. He lent it me to read, but I haven't had time. Oh, Polly, Polly! He'd be mad if I hadn't found it!"

Miss Tracey still held on to the play.

"It's not at all bad," she said, guardedly, "and there's a part in it that I rather fancy. I'll speak to Mr. Harcourt about it, if you like."

Polly went home in a state of suppressed excitement, which she concealed beneath a show of extreme weariness.

"Don't you ever have anything to do with the theatre, Decima," she adjured. "It's a poor game at the best, and at the worst—" She shrugged her shoulders.

"I'm not at all likely to," said Nina with a smile and a sigh, which, quiet as it was, Polly heard.

Mr. Harcourt sent for her two days afterward. Oh, the suspense of those two days! If the "Betrothed" had been Polly's own betrothed she could not have suffered more keenly.

"Oh, Miss Bainford," he said with touching listlessness, "Miss Tracey showed me that little play. It's not good, of course, but we might knock it into shape. Miss Tracey says the principal part will suit her. I'm inclined to try it. Of course, your friend, Mr.—Mr.—"

"Wood," suggested Polly.

"Ah, yes, Wood, wouldn't expect anything for it?"

"Oh, but he would!" said Polly. "He's not poor—not what you'd call poor. His father left him an independent income—"

Mr. Harcourt took up a bundle of letters and kept his eye on them in an absorption so long and profound that any one less sophisticated than Polly would have been convinced that he had forgotten the play and her. But Polly waited in bland security. She knew she had her fish on the hook; the thing was to land him.

"Eh?" he said, looking up at last and pretending to be aware of her presence. "Oh, ah, yes; the play. Oh, well, usual terms. He'd better come and see me."

"He can't, poor fellow; he's a cripple. But I'll tell him what you say and get him to sign the agreement."

Mr. Harcourt looked at her sharply.

"You weren't born yesterday?" he said with a smile.

"No, the day before, sir," said Polly, demurely.

"I should have said last week, now," he retorted. "Here, Mr. Thompson, fill in an agreement for this thing, will you?"

Polly took a cab home, held her hand to still the beating of her good little heart, and entered the room with a yawn which stretched her expressive mouth to cavernous proportions.

"Been reading all the time, dear?"

Nina put down her book.

"No. I've got the supper. Is there any news?" For, actress as she was, Polly could not quite conceal her excitement.

"N—o, nothing. Oh, yes! They're going to put on a new curtain raiser."

Nina bent over the saucepan she had taken off the fire.

"It was time," she said, quietly. "What's the title of it? Who is it by?"

"The title is"—Polly got close to her, took the saucepan from her and set it on the table, regardless of the cloth—"the title is 'The Betrothed,' and it's by a new man named—Herbert Wood!" she said as she flung her arms around Nina's neck and hugged and swayed her.

CHAPTER XV.

It was a fluke, of course, aided by Polly's sharpness; and it is to be hoped that it will not inspire the sagacious reader to sit down and write a play, either in one or three acts.

It was put in rehearsal at once, and, of course, the troubles which always beset a play, from its birth to its production, and not seldom afterwards, at once set in. There was a part in it for which Mr. Harcourt cast the low comedy lady—she used to be called a soubrette—but the lady didn't like it—said it wasn't "strong" enough.

"Not strong enough, if you please!" exclaimed Polly to Nina with a snort. "Why, it's as strong as Sandow, only it's in a new and quiet way. She likes a part that let's her tear about the stage and knock the men's hats off; and, of course, this doesn't suit her. Not strong! Why, listen to this!"

She did a bit of the part, and Nina's eyes sparkled. But she said nothing; she could be as secretive as Polly—it is a gift which most women possess—but the next evening she gave Polly a letter for Mr. Harcourt.

He read it, stared fixedly at Polly, frowned doubtfully, then said with acute misery in his voice and countenance:

"Well, you can try it—only try it, mind! We'll see how you get on at the next rehearsal. Now, what are you staring at?"

"I don't know what you mean," said Polly.

"Oh, don't you? Well, your friend, Mr. Wood, wants you to have the part of Sally Brown."

Polly uttered a cry and the tears sprang into her eyes.

"Oh, Mr. Harcourt!" she gasped. But Mr. Harcourt sniffed and hurried off; perhaps he was unaccustomed to gratitude.

Polly, when she got home that night, kissed Nina very quietly.

"You know you are giving me the chance of my life, dear?" she said, gravely. "But, oh, if I miss it I shall spoil your play!"

"You won't miss it, and you couldn't spoil my play if you tried," said Nina, tenderly. "I mean that you will play the part splendidly."

"If you'll only help me I'll—I'll do my best," faltered Polly.

They went over it there and then, and kept at it until the dawn peeped in at the window at two pale-faced, excited girls; so that at the next rehearsal Polly was not only perfect in her words but in her business. The stage manager did not throw up his arms in delighted satisfaction—they only do this in novels—but he grunted and nodded at her, and Polly thrilled with pride and hope.

Nina suffered a great deal during the rehearsals because she could not be present. ("You couldn't cut off that beautiful hair of yours and come down to the theatre in a blue serge suit and a limp?" suggested Polly.) But the little play was well cast, and the stage manager knew his business.

Polly reported every day, reported fully, and Nina gave a hint or two which Polly—heaven knows how—managed to convey to the other actors.

Presently Polly brought her an advertisement announcing the play, and Nina, when she was alone, bent over it with a strange mixture of ecstacy and sadness; for even the production of this her first effort could not bring her perfect happiness. The fly is still in every piece of amber which we mortals carve for ourselves.

But at the last rehearsal Polly got permission for "Mr. Wood's" sister to be present; and Nina, hot and cold by turns, watched it from the stage. It sent her down to the lowest depths of despair; because even a last rehearsal is a hopeless and appalling thing.

"I didn't think it could be quite so stupid," she said, meaning the play. "The poor people won't be able to sit it out. Oh, Polly, I'm so sorry for all the trouble I've given you and everybody else concerned! Do you think Mr. Harcourt would let me withdraw it?"

"I don't know; but I'll ask him if you like. You silly, it's splendid, and they all know it. Miss Tracey was tired, and I don't mean to give myself away till the night. It will go with a rush, you see. And, oh, Decima, we'll—we'll have a supper at the Cri—and a bottle of champagne—a big one!"

The night arrived. Polly wanted Decima to have a box, but Nina said she preferred her old seat behind the pillar in the upper circle.

"No one will see me, and if it's a failure—as it will be—I can slip out and drown myself quietly and without any fuss."

"Better hang yourself—round my neck," said Polly.

Nina crept to her place. One or two persons were already seated, and they glanced curiously at the lovely girl with the white face and anxious eyes; but she drew well behind her pillar and tried to possess her soul in patience.

A first night is a bad time for the manager and the actors—to say nothing of the audience—but it is worse for the author, because he, poor wretch, can only look on and endure in inaction. Nina thought the overture would never end, the curtain never go up; but it ascended at last, and the play began to a crammed pit and gallery, an upper circle fairly well filled and a sprinkling in the dress circle and stalls.

For a moment or two the scene swam before Nina's eyes, and she could not see the actors nor hear their voices; but presently sight and hearing came back to her, and, incredible as it may seem, she almost forgot her authorship in her interest in the play. Were these sparkling words hers? Was it she who wrote the lines that, spoken by Miss Tracey, brought the tears very near her, Nina's, eyes? Did she invent the business which in Polly's clever hands caused the theatre to ring with laughter? Oh, how sweet, how sweet was the sound of that laughter in Nina's ears! The color stole to her face, her eyes grew bright. Was her poor little play going to be a success—really a success?

She began to glance round the theatre—only glance—for she could scarcely take her eyes from the play. What did these gentlemen in the stalls, the critics, think of it? She saw one whom she supposed belonged to the awful tribe laugh and nod to a fellow member. Was he really satisfied?

The people were laughing, the play was going smoothly and "strong." Her heart beat with almost painful rapidity, but still fearfully, for your author is a modest and a timid coney. How splendidly Miss Tracey played! And Polly—oh, you dear, sweet girl, to make them laugh every time you open your lips! How, how do you do it?

Her eyes wandered from the stalls to the boxes and scanned the faces of the few occupants with eager, anxious inquiry. Then suddenly she forgot her anxiety, the players, the play itself, and her face grew pale and her eyes fixed as she gazed spellbound at the box nearest the stage on the first tier.

A lady and gentleman had entered. A lovely woman with auburn hair with golden lights in it, with sapphire eyes of wondrous hue, with a face of clear ivory, and lips on which men might swear away their lives, their honor, their souls. The man was young-old, beautifully dressed, with an orchid in the silk facing of his irreproachable coat, and a fixed smile on his painted lips. But Nina had no eyes for him. She knew the woman in a moment—at the first glance.

It was the original of the portrait in Vane Mannering's coat; it was the woman he loved, the woman whose name he had breathed as Nina had leant over him that night in the men's hut. It was Judith!

As Judith Orme sank into her chair, and, dropping the opera-cloak from her white shoulders, looked round the house with a languid and yet serene gaze, Nina felt as if the sapphire eyes were fixed on her, and her heart seemed to cease beating. Her breath came in painful gasps. She tried to look at the stage again, but her eyes, as if magnetized, wandered back to the exquisite face, the exquisite grace of the woman.

The young-old man went out of the box, and presently another, a younger man, entered. He was dark, almost sallow, with brilliant black eyes and thin lips. Both eyes and lips seemed restless as he bent over Judith's chair, and Nina fancied that she could almost see his hand trembla as it rested on the chair-back.

"Oh, are you here?" said Judith, with a slight uplifting of the beautiful brows, a curve on the perfect lips.

"Yes," he said in a low voice with the thrill in it which passion alone can give—the passion that burns like the smouldering fire of a volcano, the fire that, though it seems so still, so innocent, may burst into a death-dealing flame at any moment. "Yes; you said you were coming, and—I am here."

She smiled with the woman's tolerance for the love she does not desire.

"You may stay," she said. "My father—well, he may look in for a moment before the musical farce is over. Are you alone? Is"—she paused an imperceptible instant—"is Lord Mannering here?"

The question was put in the most casual way, but a cloud descended on the sallow face and the lids drooped over the brilliant eyes.

"Vane is here, or will be here, I think," he replied. "I came early. I wanted to see—this new piece."

"Yes?" she said. "It is rather good, is it not? The people are laughing a great deal."

"But not the piece alone," he went on in a lower voice. "You said you were coming early, you remember."

"Did I?" with a smile. "I forget."

"Ah, yes, but I do not!" he said, not in the tone with which such compliments are paid, but a little hoarsely, with a twitch of the thin lips, a restless movement of the white hands so near her gleaming shoulder. "I never forget, never lose the chance of being near you, you know."

"Hush!" she whispered with her voice of subtle music. "You must listen to the play—and let me do so."

There was a pause, during which he looked, not at the stage, but at her—looked with the passion smouldering in his eyes, beating in the sallow cheeks which had grown somewhat sunken, breathing from the set lips—and she, leaning back and feeling his gaze, seemed so serenely, exquisitely calm and emotionless that one would have said that no passion could have power to touch her even with the ends of its burning fingers.

But suddenly, though her eyes did not move, her bosom rose and fell quickly. She had heard a step in the corridor—Vane entered the box.

She did not turn her head, but despite herself, her marvelous power of self-control, the color dyed her face and her eyes shone.

Julian saw the momentary change, the flash of emotion that betrayed her, and his face went pallid, his lips grew straight and there flashed into his now sombre eyes a gleam of hate—the hate which, joined with jealousy, is of all kinds the most malignant, the most merciless.

Vane did not come forward, but, with a bow and a smile, dropped into a chair behind the curtain, so that he was unseen by Nina, whose eyes were still turned to the beautiful woman, now languidly fanning herself, with a new touch of color in her face, a new light in her eyes.

So they sat, in silence now, for Vane was one of those persons who, oddly enough, in these days when most well-bred people appear to regard the theatre as a place for conversation, did not talk while the curtain was up. He leant back and looked on at the play with at first an absent air, but presently an interest awakened in spite of himself. She listened—to Vane's regular breathing; and Julian sat with his arms folded, his lids lowered, his eyes fixed on the hem of the dress of the woman he had grown to love with a passion that absorbed, devoured him, and left him no rest for body or soul. And nothing about him moved but the tick, tick of the nerve in his hollow cheek.

As the play drew to an end the interest, the laughter of the audience increased, and when the curtain fell there was one of those outbursts of applause which managers, actors, authors, love to hear.

"The Betrothed" was a genuine, unmistakable success.

The applause seemed to deafen Nina. She watched the actors and actresses cross before the curtain, and she longed to clap her hands—for, oh, how grateful she was to them! —but she felt incapable of movement. Her heart beat so wildly that she did not at first hear the cries of "Author! Author! Author!" but as they grew louder and more insistent she began to tremble, and; clutching her opera-cloak round her, she rose and fled; so that when Mr. Harcourt came forward, with his hand on his heart, and announced that the author was not in the theatre, he, marvelous to relate, spoke the truth.

Vane moved forward and stood by Judith's chair.

"A pretty play," he said, "and a clever one. I am sorry I did not see it all."

She swept her magnificent dress from the chair beside her, but he did not accept the invitation. He glanced wearily, listlessly, round the house, then, as if he remembered why he had come to the box, he said:

"Julian and I go down to Lesborough to-morrow. There is to be a house party in a week, as you know. May I ask Sir Chandos to bring you? Lady Fanworthy plays chaperone. I hope you will come."

Her heart beat swiftly, but she looked straight before her, so that Julian, who was watching her from behind with a feverish eagerness, grew sick with suspense.

"Thanks, very much," she said at last, with an instant lifting of her eyes to Vane's face. "You know"—in a lower voice, one scarcely above a whisper—"that I should come!"

"I am glad," he said, gravely. Then he looked at his watch.

"Are you going?" she asked in the same tone.

"Yes, presently," he said. "Good-night. I will find Sir Chandos."

After he had gone she sat and looked straight before her. Julian moved and she turned to him, her eyes cold as ice, and glittering like the diamonds on her breast.

"Will you find my father and tell him I am going on to the Vandaleur's after the first act, Mr. Shore?"

Julian rose and left the box. But in the corridor he paused and pressed one burning white hand to his lips as if to still the quiver of hate and jealousy; then, with drooped lids and face set like a mask, he went on his errand.

Nina could not go back to the theatre, and she paced up and down the Strand, seeing nothing, hearing nothing, with the applause still deafening her, the lights of the theatre still blinding her.

Her play was a success. Oh, how happy, how glad she must be! A success! She had found her true work at last—no, so soon, so soon! The gods had been good to her beyond all measurement. A success—

Then suddenly she stopped and an inarticulate cry rose from her lips.

Judith! The woman he loved!

Back it all swopped on her, and her joy turned to misery.

She found her way to the stage-door. Polly came rushing out and caught her by the arm.

"Decima!" she gasped. "Decima! What a success! Oh, oh, oh! But what is the matter?" she broke off, aghast at the white face, the misery-haunted eyes. "You look as if you'd seen a ghost. You're not—ill?"

"No, no!" said poor Nina. "It is—is the suspense, the excitement."

Polly drew a breath of relief.

"I know. Here—a cab! Get in! Oh, let us get home! Never mind the supper! Let us get home!"

CHAPTER XVII.

It was not a large party at Lesborough, but it was a very pleasant one, and all were agreed that Vane made a splendid host. He did not make the mistake of attempting to amuse his guests; nowadays we refuse to be amused and are best left to ourselves; and what we like is a large house, run on the lines of a first-rate hotel, where we can do as we please—and have no bills to pay at the finish.

Breakfast at Lesborough was a movable feast, so also was lunch,

A SCHOOL FOR SPIDERS.

The Insects Taught to Weave Their Webs Only on Bottles.

"This is my spiders' school," said the young woman, and with a little stick she brushed a few webs from the wall. "Not much to look at, is it? Only a dozen rows of wine bottles, a great many spiders and a great many webs. I make nevertheless a little money out of the school.

"Spiders' webs are in demand among surgeons and among the makers of certain astronomical instruments, the surgeons using them to stop hemorrhages with and the instrument makers using them in certain very delicate instruments—instruments wherein, strange to say, a human hair would not take their place, because a hair is neither fine enough nor durable enough to serve the required purpose.

"Besides selling the webs I also sell the spiders. A corrupt class of wine dealers buy the spiders. These men put them among bottles of new wine. I train the spiders to weave on bottles only—I tear down webs woven anywhere else—and it is amazing how quickly these well schooled pupils of mine will cover a case of port or claret with cobwebs, giving to the wine an appearance of great age.

"Six spiders in a week will add two years to the aspect of a dozen bottles of wine; hence you will readily see how valuable the ugly little creatures are to wine merchants of a certain type."

SEWING COTTON.

The Humble Origin of the Great Thread Industry.

The origin of sewing cotton was told at a cotton manufacturers' meeting by the head of the great thread house of Paisley, Scotland. It was discovered in 1803 by his grandfather, who had a little business in Paisley, making silk twine for heddles, which were used by every weaver. The silk came from Hamburg, and in 1803 Napoleon caused the stock held there to be burned in order to hamper British trade. The weavers were in despair, but James Clark conceived the idea that cotton yarns could be twisted together to form the twines.

The experiment succeeded, and from this grew the idea that cotton could be substituted for flax in the manufacture of sewing thread and would not be so coarse and harsh. He began the manufacture of the thread in a very small way. It was at first put up in skeins and had to be wound into little balls by the purchaser, and then Mr. Clark invented the modern spools. He had them made by a wood turner, half a gross at a time. They cost him sixpence a dozen, and he charged the purchaser of the thread a halfpenny for the spool, which, however, was refunded when the spool was returned. The ladies of Paisley used to come to his shop with their spools and wait while he wound the thread on them. From this small beginning grew a great industry.

Young Hunter's Hard Luck.

"Some years ago," said a hunter, "when I lived down on the eastern shore of Maryland, where I was born, I had passed a whole day gunning rabbits and had not killed one. On my way home through the woods I met a boy who had a live rabbit. Ashamed to go home empty handed, I gave the boy 25 cents for his rabbit.

"I then said to myself, 'I will tie Mr. Rabbit to a bush and kill him, and the folks at home will say Ed shot a rabbit.' I took a shoestring and fastened the rabbit to a bush and then stood off, took aim and fired. When the gun had stopped kicking I saw Mr. Rabbit flying through the woods. My bullet had cut the shoestring in twain and had set the little animal free."

Sword Stands In Churches.

Sword stands came into use in London churches when it became customary to carry the city sword before the lord mayor as he went to church in state. During service the sword was placed in the stand or case provided for it, and in his own church the lord mayor generally had the stand placed conveniently near to or in his family pew. This custom, which was quite common before the end of the sixteenth century, apparently began in the reign of Elizabeth. The state visits to the city churches were discontinued in the mayoralty of Sir R. N. Fowler, 1883.—London Standard.

Profitable Inventions.

No one class of inventions has been so profitable to both the manufacturer and the inventor as musical instruments and appliances for same. Numerous improvements to the piano have been a source of large fortunes, and various devices are at present being continuously applied. Radically new instruments possessing real merit are the inventions needed in this line. The public is always ready to adopt almost anything new in both wind and stringed instruments.—Inventor.

Would Even Things Up.

"Oh! Ouch! Stop that!" yelled Tommy.

"Why, Tommy, aren't you ashamed?" exclaimed his mother. "I wouldn't cry like that if it were my hair that was being combed."

"I'll bet you would if I wuz doin' the combin'," replied Tommy fiercely.

MILKING BY MACHINERY.

LIVE STOCK COMMISSIONER HODSON SAYS MILKING MACHINES ARE AN ACTUAL FACT AND HAVE COME TO STAY.

One by one this practical utilitarian age crowds out the poetry and romance of life. Co-operative dairying with its big herds, making the work of milking laborious, has relegated the milk maid to the drawing room, the piano and the shade slung hammock, and replaced her dainty manipulation of the bovine dugs by the muscular grip of the "hired man." Now the hired man will have to go to the tread mill. A milking machine, operated by a treadle, that will milk, has been invented and is being manufactured for actual use. The following statement by Mr. F. W. Hodson, Canadian Live Stock Commissioner, may be regarded as official information on the subject:

At the annual convention of the Manitoba Dairyman's Association, held at Winnipeg last week, Mr. F. W. Hodson, Canadian Live Stock Commissioner, said that the milking machine had come to stay. In opening his address Mr. Hodson said that in several provinces of the Dominion the travelling dairies are doing good work. Sometimes they took a tent along and worked in that, sometimes they took a covered wagon and a team with their outfit in it and they had done and were doing excellent work in showing the farmers how to take care of their cream, and to test their milk. The department of agriculture was trying to find out what the cows of Canada were doing, and they found that when the output of the cows was all reduced to butter and averaged, that the average production of each cow in Canada was only 115 pounds of butter per year and the average production of the cows of Manitoba was only 96. They had averaged the value of this product at 18c and had placed the cost of the cows' keep and attendance at $17. This was not profitable dairying. "I believe we are on the eve of a great change in dairy work," said Mr. Hodson. "The milking machine has come to stay.

"I am careful about my statements and I say that I am not afraid to stake my reputation on it. We have had experiments going on in Scotland for five years and Clement, the cheese king of Scotland, is ready and willing to stake his reputation on the milking machine. It is not going to be so very costly either. I have tried it myself, and milking eight cows at a time I found that right through stables, taking half dry cows, strippers and fresh cows, I averaged five minutes per cow. You can milk a cow better by machinery, just as you can bind wheat better with a machine. It is in the memory of all here when the building of the C.P.R. drew the young men away from Ontario and we could not get men to reap our harvests. Then the binder came along and we went miles to see one work. No one is surprised at a binder in these days, and it will be the same with the milkers. The difficulty with dairying to-day is the difficulty of handling the cows properly and economically, and this will in a great measure be overcome by the milkers. Each pail will milk two cows and with a single-tread power you can manage a herd of fifty.

A TRUE APPETIZER AND TONIC.

Mi-o-na Will Make You Feel Hungry and Hearty, and Give Strength and Vitality.

Ask any friend who looks thin, pale, and out of health how many meals he or she eats a day, and the chances are that the answer will be "Not over two, and I don't feel hungry then." The plump, rosy, and robust eat three square meals daily, and their perfect health is due to a strong stomach and digestive system, as such a system takes out of the food all those elements that make pure blood, and give nourishment and vitality to the body.

The one appetizer and tonic that should be taken is Mi-o-na, the only agent known that will strengthen the stomach and digestive system, and put them in such perfect working order that they will digest easily and naturally all the food that is eaten, and send you to the table positively hungry, for the next meal.

Without a strong stomach digestion will be poor, the blood impure, and serious liver and kidney troubles, result, causing headaches, backaches, spots before the eyes, dizziness, sleeplessness, nervousness, irritableness, a furred tongue and bad breath, all of which can be readily overcome by the use of Mi-o-na (costing but 50c a box), as it goes right to the foundation of perfect health, the stomach.

Scores of leading people in this Province, including editors, ministers, bankers, and their families, gladly testify to the strengthening and health-giving effects of Mi-o-na. Furthermore, Mr. J. S. McKeown, one of the most reliable druggists in this section, sells Mi-o-na under a guarantee to refund the money if it does not produce satisfactory results.

PRETTY HOUSE WEDDING.

MR. FRED R. MALLORY, OF SIDNEY, AND MISS ANNIE E. GRASS MARRIED IN THIS CITY LAST NIGHT.

At 8 o'clock last night a pretty wedding took place at the residence of Mr. T. E. Ketcheson, Bridge St., when his niece, Miss Annie E. Glass, was married to Mr. Fred R. Mallory, of Sidney Township, son of Mr. B. F. Mallory, County Treasurer-elect. The bride looked very charming in a gown of white colienne, over white silk, with lace trimmings. She carried a bouquet of lilies of the valley. To the strains of Mendelssohn's Wedding March, played by the groom's sister, the bridal party entered the drawing-room, where the ceremony was performed by Rev. Rural Dean Beamish, Rector of St. Thomas'. The bride was given away by her uncle, Mr. T. E. Ketcheson. The wedding was of quiet simplicity, only a small number of relatives being present. After the usual congratulations the guests were invited to the dining-room, where ample justice was done to the good things provided. A short time was spent in social chat and music, and the happy couple took the east-bound train for Ottawa, and other places of interest. The bride's going-away suit was of pearl grey cloth, with Persian applique trimming, and hat to match. Mr. and Mrs. Mallory will be at home, after April 15th, at their residence in the fourth concession of Sidney, where Mr. Mallory is a promising young farmer. Their many friends will wish them a long, happy and prosperous voyage over the sea of matrimony. In which wish the Intelligencer joins.

NUPTIALS OF MR. NEIL P. FLEMING AND MISS NELLIE M. DAVIS LAST NIGHT.

At 7 o'clock last evening a wedding took place at Christ Church, the ceremony being performed by the Rector, Rev. W. B. Heeney. The bride was Miss Nellie M. Davis, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Davis, Mill street, and the groom Mr. Neil P. Fleming, who has been a despatcher at the G.T.R. station here for some time. The bride was attired in a brown travelling suit, with hat to match, and carried a shower bouquet of white carnations and smilax. The services of a bridesmaid and groomsman were dispensed with. Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Davis were present as witnesses. After the ceremony a wedding repast was partaken of at the residence of the bride's parents. Mr. and Mrs. Fleming have gone away for a few days.

Professor Ramsay-Wright of Toronto University, cannot perhaps be expected to prove that "even an oyster may be crossed in love," but he will no doubt reveal many mysteries regarding that submarine bivalve when he lectures upon its natural history (illustrated with lantern slides and views), on Friday evening, at St. Agnes' School Hall. Professor Wright always touches on the commercial and national aspect of the fisheries as well as the anatomy and development of the specific subject. Miss Stork has kindly consented to sing, and the Deaf and Dumb Institute have again loaned their splendid lantern.

COMMENTS ON THE RIELLY VERDICT.

(Montreal Star.)

The conviction and sentencing of Rielly for his share in the Belleville ballot-box affair will give the country a more comfortable sense that it is still possible in Canada to get justice done in the case of a political crime. People find it difficult to escape from the dangerous and absurd notion that a crime committed in the midst of a political fight is, in some mysterious way, not really a crime at all; or, at all events, is to be judged by some easier standard than are ordinary crimes.

But if there be any difference between political and other crimes, it is that the political crime is the more damaging to the community and the more far-reaching in its effects. A man who breaks into the house of a single citizen and robs him of his watch and pocket-book, inflicts a definite amount of injury upon that citizen; but no one else suffers directly. It is true that by punishing him we hope to deter the commission of like crimes by others; but this deterrent element is as strongly present in the punishment of political crime. Political crime, however, inflicts injury upon far more than the solitary citizen. It robs him of his vote. It may, indeed, rob a whole constituency of its vote. But it also puts in a position of influence at the Capital a man or a combination of men who may rob the country of concessions and franchises and taxing privileges worth millions. There is no limit to the effects of political crime, yet we sometimes act as if it were the milder offence of the two.

But the sending of a man to prison for taking part in a conspiracy against the ballot-box cannot fail to have a good effect. It is true that there are others now enjoying the hospitality of Uncle Sam whom we should like to see in the box beside Rielly. But even they are not escaping punishment, though they are escaping trial. Take it all round, the experience of the men who were charged with complicity in that shameful affair has not been such as is likely to encourage a repetition.

If we can convince the election "worker" that the ballot-box is too dangerous a thing for him to tamper with, we shall have taken a long step toward our political salvation. There is a voluntary element about bribery which makes it far less menacing than ballot manipulation. If the citizens do not want to be bribed, there is an end of it. But the citizens might be desperately in earnest over some political issue and ready to throw the first man who suggested a bribe out of the window; and yet they could be cheated of their will at the polls by a gang of ballot thieves who deliberately stole the election.

Let us regain possession of the ballot-box and we are in a better position to make a fight against the briber. With a safe ballot-box behind us, we can make progress. But if the ballot-box itself be in danger there will be nothing for it eventually short of the open vote.

(Kingston Whig.)

The result of F. J. Rielly's trial came as a surprise to the majority of his friends and acquaintances here, at his home. They had not counted on a verdict of guilty, being fully convinced that he would never be sent to prison. They did not expect an acquittal, but looked forward to a disagreement on the part of the jury, who must stand unanimous in order to convict. Had one of them stood out Rielly would have been safe. In such a case, it is not likely that the case would have again been brought to trial, as those involved in the ballot-box affair would have been regarded as sufficiently punished already.

Of course, the case is not so at an end. Mr. Johnston, of Toronto, who so ably defended Rielly, gave notice during the trial that he would carry an appeal to the Court of Appeal on the point of admitting as evidence the story of Rielly at the preliminary investigation last December. This appeal will be heard very soon, and in the meantime Rielly will remain in jail. It is thought that Rielly will not serve the sentence, as the Court of Appeal may decide in his favor.

T. J. Rigney, counsel for Rielly, had to come from Belleville yesterday to act on a case here, and the jury's verdict was quite a surprise to him last night. He stated that Mr. Johnston and himself had looked to a disagreement on the part of the jury, but that was all that would be required. As to the sentence, Mr. Rigney said that Justice MacMahon had been very lenient indeed in view of the verdict. He thought that His Lordship had been most fair all the way through the trial.

There is great sympathy expressed for Rielly in all quarters, but blame is attached to him for not being represented by a lawyer at the preliminary investigation last December, when he told far more than was judicious, and all of which has been used so strongly against him. Had his evidence then been directed by a capable lawyer, it is thought that the outcome would have been much different. Rielly told all his connection with the affair and has suffered for it. The others implicated were more careful.

The jury consisted of eight Liberals and four Conservatives, so that the verdict does not stand as one of partizanship.

Col. Sherwood, of the Dominion police, was in town over night, not remaining in Belleville until the sentence was passed on F. J. Rielly. Asked to-day, as to where the sentence of one year would be served, he could give no definite information. In ordinary cases terms of over six months in the common jail are served at Central prison, Toronto, but he considered it possible that the present case might be made an exception. Central prison is considered by those unfortunates, who have served terms there, as the worst place of correction in the Dominion. Many who have served terms both there and in the local penitentiary have said they would prefer to spend three years in the penitentiary to spending one year at Central prison.

(Montreal Witness.)

Light punishment has fallen upon Frank J. Rielly, so far as his actual sentence is concerned, considering the heinousness of his offence. Associated with him in procuring bogus ballot boxes were B. O. Lott and a man named Shibley, both of whom have absconded. Lott was the Liberal candidate in West Hastings and Shibley in Frontenac. Others mixed up with the case, in one way or another, are Police Magistrate Harryett and Ruttan. Harryett's case is put off to the fall assizes, while the jury brought in "no bill" in the case of Ruttan. Ruttan was the man who was charged with 'drowning' the ballot boxes after the elections were over. It was Lott's brother, 'Phil,' who first exposed the conspiracy, and so much like a dime novel story was it that few at first believed it. It seemed impossible that men who were then considered sane, responsible and respectable, could commit such a base and melodramatic offence and one so certain to be found out. Rielly was the go-between for Lott and Shibley in getting the false ballot boxes made at Watertown, N. Y., and getting them conveyed to the places where they were to be operated. But others necessarily had to be let into the secret so as to get the boxes manipulated. These men showed a stupendous confidence in the utter corruptness of public opinion all about them to count on the co-operation of so many; and the extraordinary sympathy shown them and gentleness with which they have been treated, show that their instincts were not entirely at fault. The flight of the chief conspirators and the conviction of one, at least, who has faced his trial, cannot help but be salutary. Those who have fled are forever discredited, as are some who remain and whom the law may not punish. The fate of Rielly, once a highly-respectable and studious young man, should sink deep into the minds and hearts of our whole people, as should the threat of the judge, who said that had the principals in the case come before him he would certainly have given them the full sentence of seven years in the penitentiary, without any hesitation. It would look, however, as though Canada would have to enquire into the sort of moral training in which her people are being brought up, and put herself to school in the very first principles of honor. What is wanted, in school, and church, and everywhere where people gather together, is a vigorous inculcation of men's duty to one another — the beauty and safety of virtue. We have had a very humiliating object lesson in the degradation to which lax principles of honor may bring a community.

(Kingston News and Times.)

F. J. Rielly will have considerable sympathy in relation to the sentence of the court upon him. It was thought that Ruttan's acquittal would result in Rielly's. But here is this to be said that while Ruttan was not innocent of complicity in the affair, he was not implicated to the extent of Rielly. The latter was a self-confessed agent of Shibley, and took the initiatory steps toward having the fraudulent boxes made, and introduced into this section. Ruttan's part seems to have been limited to securing the parcel in which the boxes were, taking it to Shibley, and finally placing the boxes in the lake. As to his knowledge of the contents of the parcel there is a reasonable ground for doubt. He swore that he did not know, and the jury credited him thus far with ignorance and set him free. Of his knowledge of the nature of the boxes when he immersed them, there is, of course, no doubt.

The sentence of Rielly could have been more severe than it is. The judge, doubtless, giving it was influenced by the fact that the prisoner had already suffered on account of his crime He had been put to much inconvenience and loss, and these mitigated the punishment provided for the act by the l

Looki at the affair from the standpo of society, it is well that an exa was made of some party or part to the nefarious transaction. Had all implicated in it been acquitte here would not have been the c to similar proceedings in futur at is now sorely needed in this ince. Men in view of an allroun quittal would have gone on prac fraud in electoral matters, till onstituency would have been sure the election of a representative an honest vote. It is regrettab owever, that the scoundrels wh ed as principals in the fraud, are and are likely to be so. By tt and W. H. (Toronto Globe.)

is impossible not to feel sym y for the young man Rielly, who een found guilty of conspiracy in the Hastings ballot-box case; it is equally impossible not to approve of the sentence of detention passed upon him by way of expiation of his offence and of warning to others who may feel disposed to trifle with the election law. The jury on the evidence could not well have given any other verdict; the presiding Judge took, on the whole, a lenient view of the case, and imposed a penalty about as little severe as the law permitted. Rielly will, like some of the Toronto ward politicians, come out of durance a sadder and wiser man.

Although Shibley and Lott have for the present escaped trial and conviction they have not gone unpunished. They must choose between taking their chances in court and living in disgrace and exile for years to come, in fact indefinitely. The stigma of certain guilt is indelibly fixed upon them, and to this is now added the brand of abject cowardice. To leave Rielly to face his trial and endure his captivity alone shows Shibley to be an utter poltroon. It is to be hoped that the precious pair have permanently left their country for its good.

Philip Lott, in spite of the presiding Judge's palliatory remarks, will find it hard to live down the impression that his part in the whole wretched business was neither patriotic nor fraternal. There was a time when he could have stopped the conspiracy by uttering a word; he allowed matters to drift, intending at the same time to betray his own brother, whom he might have saved from the fate that has overtaken him. Mr. Philip Lott is no common "informer," and the trial did not disclose any motive which the public will regard as justification for the unnatural part he elected to play.

The Sessions.

Chambers vs. McIlroy.—This was a case brought up before the Sessions this morning and tried with a jury. The plaintiff resides in Madoc and the defendant near that place. It appears that the plaintiff a year or so ago effected the sale of a hotel property belonging to the defendant, and situated at Flinton. He claims now a certain commission for what he did and the defendant disputes the claim, hence the suit. Mr. McDonald for plaintiff and E. G. Porter, solicitor; Mr. Wm. Cross for defendant, and Mr. S. Masson, solicitor.

FOUND GUILTY OF COMMON ASSAULT.

ONSLAUGH WYNN GOT OFF LIGHTER THAN IT APPEARED HE WOULD.

The jury which had under consideration the case of Onslaugh Wynn, charged with stabbing, found him guilty of common assault and not the serious charge which the Grand Jury preferred against him. It appears that on the 23rd of February the prisoner was at a hotel in Bancroft and was refused liquor by Alexander Tracey, the bartender, and was also ordered out of the place. He went into the sitting room and, according to Tracey's evidence, when the latter went into the room the prisoner assaulted him and a scuffle ensued, during which Wynn stabbed Tracey in the thigh with a large pocket knife making quite a wound. Tracey was, in some particulars of his evidence, contradicted by other witnesses as to Wynn being the aggressor.

The accused was the only witness for the defence and he swore that Tracey attacked him and threw him on the floor. He claimed he was, to use his own expression, "Pretty drunk," and if he did inflict the wound made was not aware of it and did not do so with intent. He never had any ill-will against Tracey.

After addresses by Mr. Porter on behalf of the prisoner and Mr. Anderson for the Crown, Judge Lazier briefly summed up the case. The jury were out for some time and returned with the verdict above recorded. Sentence was deferred until this morning.

BASEBALL.

Harry Bemis' Lucky Hit.

"Fans across the border may lack something in frenzied enthusiasm," said Harry Bemis to a Cleveland reporter the other day, "but promises made in the glow of excitement over there are kept with a fidelity that might well be emulated in the land of the free.

"In a game at Toronto one day there came up a situation in which a home run was most urgently needed. We were playing Providence and the visitors had us 7 to 4, when little Harry came to bat in the ninth —with the bases all occupied.

"As I missed the first ball pitched, someone shouted: 'A pair of $5 shoes for a home run, Harry.' Then a man in a private box added: 'And a $5 hat,' and his next box neighbor chimed in with: 'And $5 worth of collars and cuffs.'

"By this time the offers were coming in chorus and high above the 'two strikes' and 'three balls' shouted by the umpire and the 'It only takes one to hit it' of the coachers, I could hear a mad medley of gentlemen-furnishing-goods terms such as 'waistcoats,' 'pajamas,' 'cravats,' 'shirts,' 'smoking jackets,' 'silk stockings,' and other things all set off with that alluring title, 'Five dollars' worth.

"It was an inspiring cry all right, but I regarded it as a good-natured jolly. However, with an overwhelming wish to please the big crowd I went after the next ball with all my might and had the supreme satisfaction of sending it over the fence, thus winning the game then and there.

"When I got off the car in front of my house that evening the street was blocked by carts, waggons, bicycles and vehicles of every sort. My own modest home seemed to be the centre of attention, and with the wild thought in my mind that there had been a fire or an accident there, I dashed up the steps.

"Dashed up the steps only to find that every blessed promise made to me that day had been faithfully kept. The hall, the parlor, the dining room were filled to the ceiling with boxes and parcels, great and small, and I could have started a well-stocked store right there as the result of that lucky home-run hit."

HOCKEY.

Marlboros Make Good Showing.

Winnipeg, March 22. — The Marlboros of Toronto, made their first appearance here to-night and made a favorable impression in their game with the Winnipeg Rowing Club, who won by 6 to 5. The locals scored three goals in the first half. Then the visitors got down to work and tied the score. It was a fight to the finish, and the Oarsmen managed to get the winning goal. The ice was in poor condition and the Marlboros' shooting was poor. Tyner, Birmingham and Ridpath played splendidly.

ATHLETICS.

Would Abolish "Gates."

Montreal, March 22.—Sam Baylis, a prominent member of M.A.A.A., who has done great work on the field for his association, has addressed a remarkable letter to his fellow-members, condemning the present methods of amateur sport, which allow ill-concealed professionalism and condone many offences on field and ice in order that a game may be won.

Mr. Baylis expressed the opinion that reforms are necessary and that such reforms could be inaugurated by the M.A.A.A., possessing as it does the finest athletic equipment in Canada and also the largest membership of any order in the Dominion.

In Mr. Baylis' opinion, this evil in the athletic world is caused by "gates," and he proposes that the M.A.A.A. should abolish charges for admissions to games and render matches complimentary affairs.

There is no use of anyone suffering from that painful ailment when this liniment can be obtained for a small sum. One application gives prompt relief and its continued use for a short time will produce a permanent cure. For sale by all druggists.

VENEZUELA SETTLES.

British and German Claimants Given Substantial Guarantee.

London, March 23.—At the office of the council of foreign bondholders the Associated Press was informed yesterday that an agreement between the Venezuelan Government and the British and German bondholders adjusting and consolidating the exterior debt (about $28,600,000), will be signed to-day, the details having been concluded to the satisfaction of both parties.

The guarantees comprise considerably more than fifty per cent. of the customs duties of all ports except La Guaira and Puerto Cabella, but the officials declined to give the exact figure.

Surprise was expressed at the despatches from Washington intimating that the American minister at Caracas, was seeking to prevent the ratification of the agreement, which the council of foreign bondholders contends is entirely in accord with the Washington protocol.

The British and the German Foreign Offices have been consulted, and agree that the bondholders are entirely within their rights and the provisions of the protocol.

Railway Wreck Near Port Hope.

Port Hope, March 23.—A serious wreck on the Midland division was narrowly averted here yesterday morning. As the mixed train from Lindsay was nearing the town, a brake beam broke, throwing three cars over the embankment on to the ice in the river. Some of the grain and flour in the cars was damaged. If it had not been for the thick ice at this place, the whole train would undoubtedly have been thrown into the river.

Marshall will have to appear before the Mayor of Dundas to-day on a serious charge. His stepdaughter is not yet 16 years of age.

TO ADD TO NEW ONTARIO

Important Announcement Made in Speech From the Throne.

It Is Likely That Ontario Will Be Extended Northward to Hudson Bay by the Incorporation of a Slice of Keewatin Territory — Opening of the House Was a Brilliant Spectacle—Proceedings in Detail.

Toronto, March 23.—With something like regal splendor the first session of the eleventh Legislature of Ontario was opened by Lieutenant-Governor Clark yesterday afternoon. Not in the history of the Assembly has there been such a display of feminine loveliness nor such a crush of varied humanity. Not one-sixth of those who trudged through the sloppy streets to the Queen's Park to gain a view of the ceremonies could get within the chamber, but mostly everybody had the satisfaction of a glimpse of His Honor in the full glory of his gold-braided tunic and cocked hat. At an early hour the chamber was crowded.

Lieutenant-Governor Arrives.

The arrival of the Lieutenant-Governor was timed for 3 o'clock, and a few minutes before the hour the booming of the guns of the Hamilton Field Battery announced that His Honor, escorted by a squadron of the Royal Canadian Dragoons, commanded by Lieut. Young, was coming up "the avenue." The guard of honor was composed of 100 men of the Royal Grenadiers, under the command of Capt. Brooke. When the Lieutenant-Governor arrived he was accorded military honors.

Lieutenant-Governor Clark was preceded on his way to the chamber by his military secretaries. By his side walked the Premier, wearing a fresh white rose.

Hon. W. J. Hanna, the Provincial Secretary, announced that it was the desire of His Honor that the Assembly proceed to the election of a Speaker. The Lieutenant-Governor then withdrew to enable the Assembly to proceed to the business before it.

New Speaker Proposed.

Premier Whitney, in an appropriate speech, nominated Mr. St. John for Speaker. "No man hates him," Mr. Whitney said in conclusion. "Most men love him, and all men respect him. We believe he will rise above party prejudices and maintain the best traditions of the chamber."

In seconding the nomination, Hon. J. J. Foy said Mr. St. John was a fair-minded man, who would act impartially, and see that every man received fair treatment.

Mr. Harcourt concurred on behalf of the Opposition. He was sure that Mr. St. John would add to the dignity, the prestige and the honor of the chamber. Mr. Harcourt concluded by assuring the new Speaker that he would be loyally supported by "those who sit in this corner of this side of the House."

Speaker Gives Thanks.

After the election of Mr. St. John had been declared, he mounted the dais and acknowledged his thanks. He said he felt his inability and the weight of responsibility, but he would endeavor to preserve the rights of the members, and if at any time he should err, he hoped that they would not impute improper motives. The chamber had achieved a reputation for the high standard of debate, and he would endeavor to preserve it.

The Lieutenant-Governor returned to the chamber, and was informed by the Provincial Secretary that a Speaker had been elected. He then read the following:

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE.

Mr. Speaker and Gentlemen of the Legislative Assembly:

It affords me great pleasure to welcome you to the performance of your duties at this the first session of the eleventh Legislature of this Province.

As the result of the labors of the husbandman affords the foundation on which the prosperity of the Province mainly rests, our earnest thanks are due to Almighty God for the bounteous harvest of the past year.

In all sections of the Province are to be seen evidences of steadily increasing activity and enterprise on the part of our people, which constitute cause for hearty congratulation.

The Governor-General.

Since the last meeting of the Legislature the term of the Earl of Minto as Governor-General of the Dominion of Canada came to a close. The severance of the relations which had existed between the retiring Governor-General and the people of Canada was sincerely regretted by the people of this Province. During his term of office Lord Minto strengthened the attachment of the Canadian people to the Empire, and to the principles of Constitutional Government under which we live, and which we so highly prize, alike by the great interest which he manifested in everything relating to and affecting the progress and development of the Dominion, and by the wisdom and statesmanship which distinguished his administration of public affairs.

The part taken by the Countess of Minto, and the interest which she displayed in philanthropic movements, as well as her evident concern for the happiness and comfort of the people, were sources of great satisfaction. Her departure was, therefore, a matter of sincere regret.

A hearty welcome has been extended by the people of Canada to Earl Grey as the successor of the Earl of Minto, and I have every confidence that he will represent His Majesty the King with ability and dignity in every duty that pertains to his great office.

The T. and N. O. Railway.

You will be pleased to learn that the Temiskaming & Northern Ontario Railway, as originally planned, has been practically completed, and has for some time been carrying passengers and freight. Owing to the uncertainty of the location of the route of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, and for other reasons, further legislation will be required with reference to this important Provincial work.

Many Changes Foreshadowed.

Among the measures to be submitted for your consideration are: A bill making certain amendments to the education act; a bill relating to the forest reserves act; bills changing the designation respectively of the heads of the Crown Lands Department and the Public Works Department from Commissioner to Minister; a bill to create a Department of Mines, with a Minister at its head; a bill relating to the County Councils act; and a bill amending the Ontario elections act and abolishing the numbering of the ballot.

To Extend Ontario's Boundaries.

A short time ago it was brought to the notice of my Ministers that the Government of the Province of Manitoba had made application to the Dominion Government for the extension of the boundaries of that Province northward to the shore of Hudson Bay, and also that the Federal Government might possibly be willing to divide between and transfer to the contiguous Provinces the territory lying west, south and east of Hudson Bay and James Bay. My Ministers at once put themselves in communication with the Federal Government, and respectfully urged that before the details of any such division of territory should be decided upon, or even considered, the Government of this Province should be allowed to submit for consideration, with reference to such proposed division, its claim to that portion of the territory which the Province might fairly urge should be allotted to it. I am pleased to inform you that a satisfactory answer has been received from the Premier of Canada, and that we are now, perhaps, entitled to hope and expect that a very large portion of the vast territory lying north of the present northern boundary of Ontario, believed to be rich in minerals, and extending to the southerly and westerly shore of Hudson Bay, will be included within the boundaries of our Province.

Electrical Power and Railway Taxation.

The extraordinary possibilities which the future may have in store with reference to electric power are attracting increased attention on the part of both scientific and practical men. The resources of the Province in this respect at Niagara Falls and elsewhere should be carefully husbanded in the interests of the people of Ontario.

The report of the Commission on Railway Taxation will be laid before you. It is to be hoped that, from information derived from this report, and from other sources, the very important matter of railway taxation will receive your attention in the near future.

The public accounts will be laid before you for your consideration at the earliest moment, and the estimates for the coming year will also be submitted to you for your approval at an early date.

Three Formal Motions.

On the conclusion of the speech, the Premier made three formal motions, after which the House adjourned till this afternoon, when the first order of business will be the consideration of the address.

STATE OWNERSHIP.

Mr. Francis Dagger's Solution of the Telephone Problem—The Bell Rates Are Exorbitant.

Ottawa, March 23.—The special committee on telephone systems began its active work yesterday morning, and made good progress. Mr. Francis Dagger, of Toronto, telephone engineer, was present and gave evidence. The first part of the proceedings was the reading by Sir William Mulock of a report on the subject of telephones, which Mr. Dagger had made for the Postmaster-General in March, 1903.

In discussing the rates in Canada and elsewhere, Mr. Dagger declared that the rates in Canada and in the United States are the highest in the known world, being 100 per cent. higher than in Great Britain. The present rates in Canada, he said, might be cut in two and still leave a satisfactory profit on the working. Mr. Dagger's recommendation for this country were Government ownership and control of the long-distance line and Government control of the local system.

The telegraph system should also be acquired at the same time to prevent the telegraph companies entering the field of competition. He estimated the outside value of the present telegraph and telephone systems in Canada as follows: G. N. W. Telegraph Co., $1,000,000; C. P. R. Telegraph Co., $600,000; Western Union Telegraph Co., $200,000; Bell Telephone Co., $1,500,000. The total is $3,300,000. At the same time he believed the Government could duplicate those lines for much less than the amount stated. Figures were also given to show how cheaply local lines could be constructed.

ABIGAIL BECKER DEAD.

The Heroine of Long Point in 1854 Passes Away.

Langton, March 23.—Mrs. Roher, familiarly known as Abigail Becker, the heroine of Long Point, died suddenly yesterday at her late home in Walsingham Centre. She it was who on a stormy wintry night in November, 1854, risked her life to save Capt. Packett and crew of the three-masted schooner Conductor, which was wrecked on Long Point.

For her bravery the Government gave her a farm of one hundred acres. A purse of one thousand dollars was given her by Buffalo shipowners. The New York Life Saving Association decorated her with a handsome gold medal. She received letters from Queen Victoria.

Buys H., G. & B. Railway.

Hamilton, March 23.—The Hamilton, Grimsby and Beamsville Electric Railway has changed hands again. The Hamilton-Cataract Power, Light and Traction Co. is the new owner. All the details have not yet been arranged, but it is only a matter of a few days. The annual meeting of the shareholders was held yesterday afternoon. At the meeting five members of the Cataract Power Co. were elected as directors.

Douks To Get Money.

Montreal, March 24.—A Doukhobor delegation, headed by Peter Veregin, reached the city yesterday, and had an interview with Mr. De Struve, the Imperial Russian Consul, regarding the handing over of the moneys forwarded by the Russian Government. After the big exodus of Doukhobors from Russia, the Government confiscated the homes, and are now paying the owners for them. The Consul has decided to hand over the moneys, which now amount to several thousand dollars, to a special committee, who will distribute it to the different people now residing about Yorkton.

Armed Police Chased Them.

Winnipeg, March 24.—The two desperate highwaymen, Rogers and Horten, who held up, assaulted and robbed three Finns on Saturday night, escaped from jail at Fort Frances yesterday morning by twisting the bars of their cell with a piece of the iron bed. They started east on a railway velocipede and the police started after them on a similar conveyance, armed with Winchesters and determined to hunt them down.

Russian Tale of Failure.

War Correspondent of Novoe Vreyma Tells Bitter Story.

Heart-Sick, Retreating Soldiers Urged by Proclamations from Home to Cease Fighting and Surrender—Alexieff's Bad Initial Work—Failure to Establish Adequate Inteligence Department—Deficiencies of Officers Bring to Naught Commander's Plans.

St. Petersburg, March 24.—The Novoe Vremya to-day will publish a remarkable despatch from a correspondent in the field, who, with the bitter taste of defeat still on his palate, discusses the causes of the Russian reverses and contrasts the spirit with which Russia and Japan are conducting the war, and with sorrow and disheartenment arraigns the elements in Russia who are nourishing their propaganda on defeats in the Far East. "Scattering in the very hour of defeat," according to the correspondent, "broadcast among the heart-sick, retreating soldiers, proclamations urging them to cease fighting and surrender."

The despatch continues: "Not even the enemy has sent up such proclamations, but has confined himself to throwing into our lines telegrams from foreign agencies about disorders in Russia. Put yourself in the place of the soldiers and officers who, returning from Mukden fatigued and heart-sore from want of success, have received from the distant home proclamations with advice to that tenor."

Setting aside the factors of a temporary nature, the correspondent enumerates four main causes of misfortune:

First.—Failure to establish before the war an adequate intelligence department in Manchuria, or to make preparations, contrasted with Japanese activity in that direction.

Second.—Russia is dependent upon a single railway, while the Japanese have many bases, with the possibility of establishing new ones at any point on the coast.

Third.—The deficiencies of many officers, whose mistakes of execution bring to naught the most carefully thought-out plans of commander, or whose technical education has not kept pace with the artillery they are required to handle.

Fourth.—That victory rests not with the army but with the nation.

The correspondent pictures the patriotism, devotion and passionate longing for victory of the Japanese, and, continuing, says:

"On the other side is a nation where part of the people misunderstand the meaning of this war, or are even inimical, taking advantage of distressing times to attain more liberty. The need of greater liberty is undoubted; but is it not possible to press the campaign after the war? The country is entirely occupied with internal affairs and disorders, turning its attention to the army only occasionally and after an unsuccessful operation, and then only to pour a flood of discouragement or abuse, or to send as a palliative to the retreating forces a heap of revolutionary proclamations."

In concluding, the correspondent pleads for a few words of encouragement, and acknowledgment that the 90,000 who fell around Mukden are not unappreciated sacrifices.

Both Russian Flanks Menaced.

Gunshu Pass, March 24.—Gen. Linevitch, the new commander-in-chief of the army, yesterday received the members of his staff. Reports persist of Japanese turning movements on both flanks of the Russian army. Chinese state that the Japanese have recruited many Chinese bandits, and that probably they are now able to count a superiority in cavalry as well as infantry.

The branch of the Russo-Chinese Bank has removed from Kirin to Harbin after an attack on the bank office, in which two of the guards were wounded with cobblestones.

Captured Japanese report that a terrible affray took place in the streets of Mukden March 10, when a big detachment of the Russians, the last to leave the city, were entrapped by Chinese bandits and a few Japanese soldiers, who closed the city gates and blocked the narrow streets. According to the report, which is not confirmed, not a Russian escaped.

Field Marshal Oyama has communicated to Gen. Linevitch the news that the entire Russian medical staff, which remained in Mukden after the evacuation, is uninjured and well.

Women Leave Port.

St. Petersburg, March 24.—It is announced here that all the women have been ordered to leave Vladivostock.

Report From Japs.

Tokio, March 24.—An official report from Imperial Army Headquarters, yesterday, says:

"Our detachment pursuing the enemy entered Changtu on March 21 at 2.30 p. m.

"A large body of the enemy, in disorder, is retreating toward the north-east, along the line of the railway.

"A part of the enemy's cavalry has halted at a point within two miles north of Changtu."

Blockade Runners Captured.

Portland, Ore., March 24.—According to advices brought by the Portland and Asiatic steamship Arabia from Yokohama there are at present about forty blockade runners of various nationalities in Japanese ports, which have been captured attempting to enter Russian ports.

Russians Raise $100,000,000.

St. Petersburg, March 24.—The internal loan of $100,000,000 was signed yesterday. The price of issue is 86 and the bonds are redeemable in fifty years.

Japs Will Borrow $150,000,000.

New York, March 24.—Negotiations for a Japanese Government loan of $150,000,000 have been successfully concluded in London.

PEACE PROPOSALS.

Active Step by Russia Imminent, If Not Already Taken.

St. Petersburg, March 24.—The ministers and supporters of the court who advocate the submission of pacific proposals to Japan, so as to ascertain whether an honorable basis of peace is possible, believe they have carried the day and the Associated Press hears on high authority that an actual step is imminent, if not already taken.

Not At All Surprising.

Washington, D. C., March 24.—The sudden growth of the sentiment in Russian official circles in favor of peace is not at all surprising to the officials here, because it is in line with the predictions of the American Embassy at St. Petersburg when last heard from on this subject.

In fact, it was gathered that the real obstacle in the way of the beginning of negotiations to this end was to be found rather in the jealousies of European powers outside of Russia than in the Czar's own court.

There is believed now, however, that the great financial interests of London, Berlin and Paris, looking to their own salvation and the security of their enormous Russian loans, have risen above national lines, and that to the exertion of their powerful influence is due the present promise of peace in the near future.

TEN PEASANTS KILLED.

Fifty Wounded in An Encounter With Russian Infantry.

Kutno, Russian Poland, March 24.—Ten peasants were killed and fifty were wounded at Lamenta March 21 as the result of the shooting of infantry sent to quell disturbances. A crowd of peasants from Benifnora, proceeded to Lamenta to induce the farm laborers to strike and rioting occurred. The chief of police with a company of soldiers went to the scene, and the troops fired two volleys at the peasants, killing two on the spot and wounding fifty. The latter were brought in carts to the hospitals here, where seven men and one woman subsequently died. Eleven others are dying.

Kutno is situated 70 miles west of Warsaw. It has a population of about 10,000.

Financial Crisis Arises.

St. Petersburg, March 24.—A financial and commercial crisis has broken out at Rostovondon.

Warned Father John.

St. Petersburg, March 24.—The revolutionary committee has warned Father John of Cronstadt to cease his anti-revolutionary propaganda either by sermons or by writings. The military Governor of Cronstadt has taken measures for Father John's protection.

BIG FIRE AT DURHAM.

Furniture Factory Damaged to Extent of $50,000.

Durham, March 24.—Fire broke out in the finishing room of the Durham furniture factory here about 7.30 last night, and in spite of the efforts of the firemen by 9.30 had completely destroyed the building and contents. The dry-kiln and a large stock of lumber was saved, but with difficulty. The company has been six years in operation and was in a flourishing condition, employing about 60 men, paying some $16,000 in wages annually. About $10,000 worth of stored stock, ready for shipment, was destroyed. The total loss is estimated at $50,000. Insurance on building and contents amounted to some $25,000, in the following companies: Northern, Queen's, Economical, Norwich Union, Western, Sun, Ottawa. The loss to the town is severe, but undoubtedly the factory will be rebuilt immediately.

BETTING IN ENGLAND.

EVIL HAS REACHED GREAT PROPORTIONS AND IS WORKING MUCH HARM.

London, March 22.—England, and, indeed, the entire United Kingdom, is a prey to a betting fever that astonishes the foreign observer.

Sir Robert Giffen declares that the net profits of the 20,000 bookmakers for twenty days would suffice to maintain all the hospitals in the three kingdoms. Punch has even made a typical joke upon the subject, suggesting that, whoever be the sovereign, these are the days of the "bad queen bet."

Stern reformers hold that, in fact, Royalty has much to do with the growth of the evil, and the King is taken to task in vigorous language from the pulpit, the platform and the press.

Betting on the races has the practiced encouragement of fashion and officialdom: it spreads downward with appalling rapidity.

When the King, as Prince of Wales, won his first Derby, the bookmakers clapped him on the shoulders. When Lord Rosebery's Ladas passed the post and won, that statesman first became a real personality to the populace.

The cheaper evening papers give more prominence to sporting news than to the gravest affairs of international interest. Their bills, fluttering in the newsboys' hands down every street in London, announce in big lettering the latest rumor from the stables. The caption, "Tips from Newmarket," sells an edition. When M. Blanc's Gouvernant, a French horse, was thought a sure Derby winner, his coming was heralded with reams of description. President Loubet might have come and gone with half the attention. When Gouvernant failed ignominiously, it was a British national triumph.

Serious workers in slum settlements deplore the falling off in the attendance at lectures and literary societies. A pot of beer with a half-penny sporting sheet passed the evening with more delight.

It has been found that fashionable milliners very often make books among their clients. A recent raid revealed transactions to the extent of some thousands of pounds made in one season in the Regent street parlor of a court modiste.

Young university men are ruined every year by getting into the toils of the turf. The college servants are frequently touts for the bookmakers, receiving $10 for every client they introduce, and a commission for every bet they arrange. Medical students are notorious gamblers on the turf. It is said that in almost every hospital one or more of the young practitioners is either making a book regularly or acting as tout for an outsider.

The evil reaches even the schoolboys at the great aristocratic institutions like Eton and Harrow.

"We cannot effectually check it," said the headmaster of Harrow. "It is in the boys' blood before they reach us."

A NEW BATTLESHIP.

JAPANESE SHIP LAUNCHED AT NEWCASTLE.

Newcastle-on-Tyne, March 22.—The new Japanese battleship 'Kashima' was launched to-day at the Elswick Shipbuilding yard, in the presence of Baron Hayashi, the Japanese minister to Great Britain.

The 'Kashima's main battery will consist of four 12-inch, four 10-inch, and twelve 6-inch guns. She is of 16,400 tons. A sister ship is being built at Barrow-on-Furness.

Madame Arakawa, wife of the Japanese Consul-General at London, touched the button which released the ship from the stocks.

At the luncheon after the launching Sir Andrew Noble proposed the toast, 'The Japanese Empire.' He said all the European nations, including Great Britain, might learn a lesson from Japan. Their course prior to the outbreak of the war and their splendid strategy and bravery when compelled to strike, together with the consistently dignified attitude of the government, made them an example for all nations.

Baron Hayashi, who responded, said the Japanese successes on the seas were largely due to the fact that more than a dozen of their great war ships were built in England. He was sorry the 'Kashima' could not participate in the war; but the war must end some time, and, thereafter, the powerful vessel would be used to maintain peace in the Far East.

A ROYAL BOOKLET.

The Grand Trunk Railway System are distributing a very handsome booklet descriptive of the Royal Muskoka Hotel, that is situated on Lake Rosseau, in the Muskoka Lakes, "Highlands of Ontario." The publication is one giving a full description of the attractions that may be found at this popular resort, handsomely illustrated with colored prints of lake and island scenery, the hotel itself and many of the special features that may be found there. It is printed on fine enamelled paper, bound in a cover giving the appearance of Morocco leather, with a picture of the hotel and surroundings on same and the crest of the hotel embossed in high relief. A glance through this booklet makes one long for the pleasures of summer and outdoor life, and copies may be secured gratuitously by applying to H. C. Thompson, C.P. and T.A., Belleville; or to J. D. McDonald, D.P.A., Toronto. m20-6t

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE.

The Speech from the Throne, delivered on Wednesday afternoon, will, we think, satisfy both Conservatives and those Liberals who, for purposes of patriotism, voted for Mr. Whitney's candidates at the election in January. We all remember, of course, the Liberal slogan, "Remember Ross, he is building up New Ontario." It is now evident that Mr. Whitney is, to use a homely but expressive phrase, going Ross one better, for, as will be plain to one who reads the Speech from the Throne, the new Premier has, not figuratively, but in reality, already entered upon the task of enlarging Ontario. An examination of the map will show that what is called New Ontario goes no further north than the Albany River. This river cuts across from the boundary of Manitoba, and runs in a north-easterly direction to James Bay. The territory north of it is very extensive. It reaches from the Albany River to Hudson's Bay, and is possibly four times as large as old Ontario, that is, Ontario from the Ottawa to Lake Huron, and from Lake Ontario to Lake Nipissing Compared with what is called New Ontario, the territory is possibly about the same size as that district. At all events, the new land is enormous in area, and there is reason to believe that it has great natural resources. The explorations have not been thorough. But so far as they have gone they indicate that there are rich deposits of minerals, and that the agricultural possibilities are not inferior to those of the district of Saskatchewan? The acquisition of this new country will be an important factor in the progress of the province. It will give us a new hinterland, and a seaport in the north. Everybody will wish Mr. Whitney success in his policy looking to a larger Ontario.

As to the many other matters mooted in the Speech from the Throne, it was hardly to be expected that any reforms demanding much deliberation could be brought forward at this session. Matters of urgent necessity could only be introduced, leaving others for future preparation and discussion.

In accordance with the promises made by Premier Whitney in past years, legislation will be brought forward to do away with the numbered ballot. Of the evils wrought by this system it is superfluous to speak. The results are known. The ballot was never secret, and this opened the door to tyranny and intimidation. By it the quid pro quo of corruption was traced, and it was a terrible scourge in the hands of the Ross administration.

The creation of a Department of Mines will meet with universal approval. The wealth of this Province in minerals is very great. It is a valuable asset which should be developed along the most progressive lines. It is impossible that this can be adequately done under any of the existing departments. The intricate questions which arise, involving the rights of the Province, those of the prospectors, miners, etc., require the services of a Minister and a special department. Premier Whitney in taking this step has rendered a service to Ontario which should bear fruit in the greater development of our mineral resources.

The statement that the County Councils Act will receive attention will give general satisfaction. The legislation will probably take the form of restoring the old connection between the Township and County Councils. The present Act has been unsatisfactory. In many cases Townships have lost their representation at the County Council. The experience of many members in the House who have served on the Councils will be very useful in framing such a scheme as will do away with existing anomalies.

The references to Lord Minto and Earl Grey contained in the speech, fittingly speak of the services of the late Governor-General and of the cordial welcome which Ontario extends to the latter brilliant statesman. It is worthy of note that Lord and Lady Minto are both using their position and knowledge of Canada in the best interests of the Dominion in Great Britain. Lord Minto is pointing out on every possible occasion the many advantages of the country and Lady Minto only last week was reported as urging the wisdom and the pleasure to be derived by Old Country residents making a tour here during the summer holidays.

Rielly appears to be young man of better than ordinary attainments. His punishment will mean more to him than would a like term of imprisonment to an ordinary criminal. It will also be a lesson to that large class of men who too often come to the front in election campaigns and by their readiness to do illegal things tempt more scrupulous men into evil courses. What to Do for Heart Trouble.

I BACK UP MY ADVICE WITH THIS REMARKABLE OFFER:—A FULL DOLLAR'S WORTH OF MY REMEDY FREE TO PROVE THAT I AM RIGHT.

I ask no reference, no deposit, no security. There is nothing to promise, nothing to pay—either now or later. To any heart sufferer who has not tried my remedy—Dr. Shoop's Restorative—I will gladly give, free, not a mere sample, but a full dollar bottle.

I am warranted in making this unusual offer because mine is no ordinary remedy. It does not vainly try, to stimulate the heart. Such treatments are worse than useless. It goes straight to the cause of all heart trouble—the heart nerves—and strengthens them and vitalizes them and restores them. Then that is the end of heart diseases.

For the heart itself has no more self-control than a common sponge. It is made to beat by a tender nerve, so tiny that it is scarcely visible to the naked eye. Yet ten thousand times a day this delicate nerve must cause the heart to expand and contract.

The heart is about the size of your clenched fist. Open and close your fist a dozen times, even, and you will see the monstrous labor this little nerve must do.

The heart nerve is only one of the branches of the great sympathetic nervous system. Each branch of this system is so closely allied with the others that weakness or irregularity at any point is apt to spread. Heart trouble frequently arises from stomach trouble through sympathy, and kidney trouble may also follow. For each of these organs is operated by a branch of these same sympathetic nerves—the inside nerves.

The bond of sympathy between the nerves that operate the vital organs has a useful purpose, as well. For what will cure weakness in one branch will surely cure weakness in every branch—what will restore one center, will surely restore them all.

There is nothing new about this—nothing any physician would dispute. But it remained for Dr. Shoop to apply this knowledge—to put it to practical use. Dr. Shoop's Restorative is the result of a quarter century of endeavor along this very line. It does not dose the organ or deaden the pain—but it does go at once to the nerve — the inside nerve — the power nerve—and builds it up, strengthens it and makes it well.

If you have heart trouble and have never tried my remedy, merely write and ask. I will send you an order on your druggist, which he will accept as gladly as he would accept a dollar. He will hand you from his shelves a standard sized bottle of my prescription, and he will send the bill to me. This offer is made only to strangers to my remedy. Those who have once used my Restorative do not need this evidence. There are no conditions—no requirements. It is open and frank and fair. It is the supreme test of my limitless belief. All that I ask you to do is to write —write to-day.

For a free order for a full dollar bottle you must address Dr. Shoop, Box 69 Racine, Wis. State which book you want.	Book 1 on Dyspepsia. Book 2 on the Heart. Book 3 on the Kidneys. Book 4 for Women. Book 5 for Men. Book 6 on Rheumatism.

Mild cases are often cured by a single bottle. For sale at forty thousand drug stores.

HORROR OF DEATH CHAIR.

THOMAS A. EDISON TELLS OF INSTANT OF INDESCRIBABLE AGONY.

Columbus, O., March 23. — John A. Hendershot, of New York, an electrical expert, here temporarily, tells the story of Thomas A. Edison's opinion of putting persons to death by electricity:

"A couple of weeks ago I attended a dinner in New York at which Thos. A Edison was a guest. During the evening some member of the party asked Mr. Edison if he had invented the apparatus for the killing of murderers.

"'No. sir,; I did not,' he replied, emphatically, 'and I am very sorry electricity has been put to any such use. It is perhaps the quickest way of putting any one to death, but is not painless by any means. There is a sensation of a moment only, but in that moment there is pain indescribable. The flash comes, and the shock; it is ten times more excruciating than the feeling that results from placing one's hands upon live coals. It is a burning, devilish, harrowing feeling.

"'Imagine, if you can, the quick thrusting of 10,000 red hot needle points into your body at the same time and you may have a faint idea of the torture that is endured by the poor wretch in the death chair for an instant after the current is turned on.'"

STRAWBERRIES AND THEIR CULTURE.

BY W. T. MACOUN, HORTICULTURIST, EXPERIMENTAL FARM, OTTAWA, CANADA.

During the past sixteen years more than 400 named varieties of strawberries have been tested at the Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa, under as nearly uniform conditions as possible. Every year many new varieties are offered for sale, some at very high prices, and it has been the aim to test these alongside older varieties and find out whether they are really any better. It is, we think, safe to say that 95 per cent. of the varieties introduced every year are inferior to the best varieties already being grown, hence the value of giving these new kinds a careful and fair test. Many kinds are discarded at the Farm every year, having been tested long enough to judge of their merits. In 1904 there were 196 varieties tested. As the average results are more conclusive than those from a single year, the following twelve varieties which have averaged best for four years are those which would be likely to prove most productive when the conditions are the same as at Ottawa, the soil being a rich sandy loam not lacking in moisture.

The most productive twelve varieties in order of merit are the following, with brief descriptions of each:

1.—Mele, Perf.; This is a wonderfully productive berry, but being rather soft is not highly recommended. Fruit above medium size, roundish or pointed conical, pale but glossy red. Quality medium.

2.—Sample, Imp.; The Sample is undoubtedly one of the best commercial strawberries now on the market. It is very productive, handsome and uniform in shape. Fruit large, bright to rather deep glossy red, and moderately firm. Season medium late. Quality medium.

3.—Buster, Imp ; Although not generally known, the Buster is another fine variety. It is very productive and the fruit, which is large, maintains its size well to the end of the season. The color of the fruit is pale, glossy red much like Clyde in appearance. Moderately firm. Quality above medium. Season medium to late. Foliage very good.

4.—Bisel, Imp.; This variety has been lost sight of to a large extent owing to so many new and much advertised varieties being given such prominence, but it is one of the most productive and handsomest berries tested at Ottawa. The fact that it stands 4th in a four-year test of many varieties shows that it is equal and superior to many others. Fruit large, roundish, bright red, moderately firm. Quality above medium. Season medium to late.

5—Afton, Imp.; Can see no difference between this variety and Warfield.

6.—Steven's Early, Imp.; Appears identical with Warfield.

7.—Glen Mary, Perf.; The Glen Mary has for years been one of the most productive varieties at the Central Experimental Farm. It combines great productiveness with very large size of fruit, the fruit remaining large until the end of the season. Fruit very large, rather irregular in shape, bright red, moderately firm. Quality medium. Season medium. The irregularity of the fruit is somewhat against this variety.

Daisy, Imp.; The Daisy is a variety which was sent to the Experimental Farm for test sixteen years ago and has always proved exceedingly productive. Fruit above medium size, uniform in shape, round-conical, rather soft, bright glossy red. Quality medium. Season medium. A very attractive berry but a little soft.

9.—Grenville, Imp.; This variety has always proven very productive here and on account of its good quality is very desirable for home use as well as market. Fruit large to very large, roundish or wedge shaped, moderately firm to rather soft. Quality good. Season medium. More suitable for near than for distant market.

10.—Daniel Boone, Imp.; This variety appears identical with Warfield.

11.—Howard's No. 41, Imp.; A firm, productive, medium to late variety with medium sized deep red fruit.

12.—Enhance, Imp.; This is another variety which has not received the attention it deserves. Fruit above medium to large, roundish, deep red, firm. Quality above medium to good. Season medium. Should be an excellent variety for shipping long distances.

Warfield, Imp.; While the Warfield comes thirteenth in order of productiveness, it may deserve fifth place if the Afton, with which it seems identical, is the same variety. The Warfield is one of the very best of the older varieties, being very productive and of an attractive deep glossy red color. It is one of the best varieties for canning. The foliage is inclined to rust sometimes, which is somewhat against it. Quality medium Season early to medium.

Others which closely follow the above are Marie and Beder Wood, the latter being one of the best all-round early perfect varieties. For home use we should suggest Bubach, Greenville, Lovett and Beder Wood as among the best. Williams, which is probably grown more than any other variety for long distance shipment, came 29th in the four years average. It is one of the best for this purpose, but we should like to see Enhance given a further trial.

Strawberries succeed best on rich, well drained soil, which will not bake easily. Thorough preparation and heavy manuring will give best results. Seldom, if ever, are strawberries too heavily manured. There are many systems of growing plants, but for those who are not strawberry specialists, and even in most cases for those who are, the matted row is the best. Plant early in spring when the soil is ready, setting the plants from 18 inches to 24 inches apart in rows 3 1-2 to 4 feet apart. Give thorough cultivation during the growing season. The looser the surface soil is kept the better the results will be. Place the runners, if possible, so that they will be evenly distributed in the row. If the plants are kept at least six inches apart the results will usually be better than if closer. Mulch lightly just before winter sets in and after the ground is frozen with coarse straw or marsh hay. Frequently this will save the plants in thawing and freezing weather without snow on the ground, when otherwise they would be killed. Remove mulch in spring before plants begin to grow and place between the rows. It may smother the plants if left too long.

PROGRESS OF THE CAMPAGIN.

According to the reports from Tokio the Japanese pursuing army has reached Changtu, driving the enemy northward along the line of railway. It has still a long way to go to reach Gunshu Pass, where the Russians are at present concentrating and is only about one-fifth of its way along to Harbin.

The Russians hope to make an effective stand on the line from Changchun to Kirin. Changchun is a station on the railroad and a town of some size about a hundred and fifty miles above Teling, and about the same distance below Harbin. It is about sixty-five miles west of Kirin, with which it is connected by a branch railroad, which may or may not be in working order. The country between the two places is mountainous and rugged. Each of the two stands upon a considerable tributary of the Sungari River, which is probably now or will soon be in flood.

It is not known that either place is fortified, or is capable of being fortified at short notice, and there seems to be nothing in particular to prevent the Japanese from marching around one end of that line, especially around the western end of it. The resolution to try to hold that line would seem to be a counsel of desperation, inspired by the realization that there is no other place at which to make a stand south of Harbin itself, that Harbin is indefensible, and that its fall would mean the isolation of Vladivostok.

There is also talk about Russian hopes of defending the crossing of the Sungari River. It is not to be supposed the reference is to that river at Harbin, but either at Kirin, or, more probably, at the point where the railroad crosses it, near Dalashan, eighty miles south of Harbin. That branch of it is there a large stream. Of course, the Japanese must cross it to get to Harbin, and if the Russian army gets across it first in good order it may be able to make it very difficult for the Japanese to follow.

For weeks to come the stream will be swollen with melting snow from the mountains, and while there is plenty of timber for bridge-building, the work of bridging a broad, deep and rapid river under a fire from the opposite shore is not at all inviting. Gunshuling, at present a storm centre, is on the railroad about thirty-five miles below Changchun, at the crossing of the northernmost of the tributaries of the Liao River, so that in passing from it toward Changchun the armies pass over the watershed from the valley of the Liao into that of the Sungari and the Amoor.—The Globe.

A Chicago Alderman owes His Election to Chamberlain's Cough Remedy.

"I can heartily and conscientiously recommend Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for affections of the throat and lungs," says Hon. John Shenick, 220 So. Peoria St., Chicago. "Two years ago, during a political campaign, I caught cold after being overheated, which irritated my throat and I was finally compelled to stop, as I could not speak aloud. In my extremity a friend advised me to use Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. I took two doses that afternoon and could not believe my senses when I found the next morning the inflammation had largelyy subsided. I took several doses that day, kept right on talking through the campaign, and I thank this medicine that I won my seat in the Council. This remedy is for sale by all druggists.

STORIES FOR THE LADIES

WHY A GIRL SHOULD NOT BLINDLY MARRY HER "IDEAL."

"That is the type of man I should like to marry." How often one hears this expression fall from the lips of a girl whose admiration some man has aroused. Perhaps he has distinguished himself in some particular field of sport; or maybe he has performed some heroic deed, or won a good position by reason of his intellectual ability and business acumen. Whatever he has done, he is probably her ideal man for the time being, and as such she would marry him, irrespective of other considerations.

There are few girls who have not the picture of an ideal lover engraved on their hearts. No harm would arise from this if they would always stop to think whether their ideal man would make an ideal husband. But, alas! very few do so. He is their first choice among men, and they remain true to that choice, and marry him if possible. Of course, when a girl really loves a man she will, in nine cases out of ten, marry him if he asks her to do so, no matter what might be said against him. Sometimes there is nothing to be said against a girl's first choice, and he proves himself to be all that could be desired.

But there is a great risk in a girl blindly marrying her first choice. In the first place, owing to her mind being filled with the picture of her ideal, she omits to study other types of men. The consequence is that her knowledge of the male sex becomes limited. She just contents herself with setting her ideal above all others, and measures other men according to his standard. She has no eyes but for him, and in the majority of cases is unable to see his faults.

It is a popular fallacy that the first love is the true love, unique in its excellence. This is far from being always true. As well say the first picture of a painter is the best of all he will paint in the course of his life; that the first speech; the first book; the first statue; the first composition will be the best of the statesman, novelist, sculptor or musician, as the case might be. First works have all the imperfections of uncertainty, of inexperience and ignorance. The first agreeable young man who looks a girl in the eyes, and with his eyes tells her that he loves her, will doubtless please her by that fact, and will incline her to consider him handsome and perfect.

It is absolutely necessary, however, that the girl who wishes to be happily wedded should be most careful in the choice of a life partner, and take nothing for granted. That choice cannot be made without comparisons, and the girl who sets her ideal on one side, so to speak, for a time, and judges a man's calibre with an unbiased mind, is far more likely to find a good husband than the girl who allows herself to be solely attracted by the man of her fancy.

The quiet, plodding, steady young fellow does not appeal to many girls, for the simple reason that they probably always thought they should like to choose as a husband a man of popularity among his fellow-men —one who was spoken of as a "jolly good fellow," and considered the best of company. And yet such a man generally makes a poor husband. He can probably introduce more pleasure and amusement into a girl's life than the "plodder," whose seriousness is such a great fault in the opinion of many girls. And yet the latter has far more backbone in him, as the saying goes, than his more dashing companion, who, when trouble comes, usually proves himself to be a poor fighter of adverse circumstances.

When a girl meets with her first choice, no matter how much he may please and attract her, she must study and compare him with other men. Nothing is to be gained by accepting a man at once, because he approaches nearest to your ideal. Some girls, of course, have excellent ideals—men who are an embodiment of all that goes to make a good husband. They hardly need to be warned against marrying their first choice, because that choice will be the best man of their acquaintance.

But there are some girls whose ideas of what a man should be are confined to the type who are brilliant in one or two things, and really have no other qualifications for the position of husband. Their defects are hidden by the manner in which they show themselves to the outside world, and it is only by a careful study of their characters that their faults can be discovered.

The absolutely perfect man has yet to be born. But a woman should always take care that the man she marries compares favorably with other men. Statistics go to show that there are far more happy marriages among people of mature years than among the young people who enter into matrimonial contracts. This is only because the older a woman becomes the more experience of men she gains, and the wiser becomes her judgment of their characters. We cannot put old heads on young shoulders, but a young woman can exhibit quite as much wisdom in her matrimonial venture as one ten years older, if she does not choose for a husband the first man she fancies, irrespective of all other considerations.

A GOOD DEAL OF NONSENSE

ABOUT "BLOOD BITTERS" AND "TONICS."

Every drop of blood, every bone, nerve and tissue in the body can be renewed in but one way, and that is, from wholesome food properly digested. There is no other way and the idea that a medicine in itself can purify the blood or supply new tissues and strong nerves is ridiculous and on a par with the fol-de-rol that dyspepsia or indigestion is a germ disease, or that other fallacy that a weak stomach which refuses to digest food can be made to do so by irritating and inflaming the bowels by pills and cathartics.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets cure indigestion, sour stomach, gas and bloating after meals, because they furnish the digestive principles which weak stomachs lack, and, unless the deficiency of pepsin and diastase is supplied, it is useless to attempt to cure stomach trouble by the use of 'tonics,' 'pills' and 'cathartics,' which have absolutely no digestive power, and their only effect is to give a temporary stimulation.

One grain of the active principle in Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will digest 3,000 grains of meat, eggs and similar foods, and experiments have shown that they will do this in a glass bottle at proper temperature, but of course are much more effective in the stomach.

There is probably no remedy so universally used as Stuart's Tablets, because it is not only the sick and ailing, but well people who use them at every meal to insure perfect digestion and assimilation of food.

People who enjoy fair health take Stuart's Tablets as regularly as they take their meals, because they want to keep well, prevention is better than cure, and Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets do both; they prevent indigestion and they remove it where it exists. The regular use of one or two of them after meals will demonstrate their merit and efficiency better than any other argument.

THREE SPEECHES.

Dr. Sproule, Hon. Wm. Paterson and Mr. F. D. Monk Heard on the Autonomy Bill in the House.

Ottawa, March 24.—Three speeches were heard in the House yesterday. Dr. Sproule, Hon. William Paterson and F. D. Monk discussed the school question from their respective standpoints.

Dr. Sproule made an impressive argument in favor of national schools.

Mr. Paterson gave many reasons why separate schools should be perpetuated in the Northwest, and F. D. Monk stated the reasons which led him to take the Government side of the argument on the schools question.

All the speeches were good. Dr. Sproule was at his best, Mr. Paterson twisted the constitution into all shapes and forms, and F. D. Monk sustained his reputation as a debater.

Hon. Clifford Sifton moved the adjournment of the debate. His speech to-day is looked forward to with intense interest.

Kept in the Dark.

The Minister of Railways, in reply to a question, said that the Government had no information as to the progress of the Grand Trunk Pacific surveys in British Columbia. It was, however, the intention of the Government to urge the early construction of this section of the Grand Trunk Pacific.

Hon. Sydney Fisher informed Mr. Gunn that 96 convictions had been had under the Fruit Marks Act, upon information laid by the staff of the fruit division of the department. In addition, there had been at least three convictions on information laid by outside parties.

Yankee Currency Here.

The Minister of Finance stated, in reply to Mr. Bickerdike of Montreal, that the Government is aware that a very large amount of American currency is at present in circulation at par in Canada, while in most cases Canadian currency is refused in the United States or taken at a very heavy discount. The Government does not intend to introduce a measure to prevent the circulation of United States coin in the Dominion, as it believes it can make regulations that will largely displace United States coin in Canada.

Woodstock Railway.

Ottawa, March 24.—The Railway Committee yesterday took up the Brantford and Woodstock Railway Co.'s bill. The committee did not tie the road down to the use of steam. The bill was reported.

To Prevent Tuberculosis.

Ottawa, March 24.—Senator W. C. Edwards, president of the Canadian Association for the Prevention of Tuberculosis, yesterday moved in the Senate, "That in the opinion of the Senate the time has arrived when Parliament should take some active steps to lessen the widespread suffering and the great mortality among the people of Canada caused by the various forms of tuberculosis."

The motion drew from several Senator an expression of sympathy with the movement. Among those who urged action on the part of the Dominion to put down tuberculosis were Senators William Hingston, Robertson, McMillan and Lougheed. Senator McMullen adjourned the debate. There can be no doubt that the Senate will be unanimous in passing the resolution which recently received the fullest endorsation of the House of Commons.

OFFERED TO QUIT IT.

Judge Lafontaine Willing to Turn Case Over to Another.

Montreal, March 24.—Messrs. Gaynor and Greene were before Judge Lafontaine yesterday, His Honor deciding that he had jurisdiction in the matter. As soon as he had finished speaking, and while counsel were considering what steps should be taken next, His Honor, showing much emotion, said: "Notwithstanding the foregoing, as my competence has been attacked, I am willing, provided both parties agree, and it can be legally done, that this enquiry shall be held by Chief Justice Lacoste, or Acting Chief Justice Sir Melbourne Tait or any judge of the Supreme Court who may be designated by them."

This declaration certainly came as a surprise, and for some little time not a word was said.

MacMaster Scores Fitzpatrick.

Then Mr. MacMaster stated that as the enquiry had been commenced by Judge Lafontaine, he, Mr. MacMaster, would prefer that it should be consinued by him, as his jurisdiction had been upheld time and time again.

Referring to the part Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick had played in the matter, Mr. MacMaster said: "The Minister of Justice is a very important man in Canada, but it might have been well if he had consulted the proprieties and not allowed his name to be attached to a writ of habaes corpus for three weeks, after it had been objected to."

Charles Cameron Dead.

Toronto, March 24.—One of the pioneer residents of the Town of Collingwood and one of the most prominent mercantile men in Simcoe County, passed away at the General Hospital yesterday in the person of Charles Cameron. Mr. Cameron was a native of Aberdeenshire, Scotland, and settled in Collingwood vicinity about the year 1854.

Horse Badly Slashed.

Wiarton, March 24.—A horse was badly slashed with a knife in the hands of some unknown party at the Pacific Hotel stable last night. Its abdomen was ripped open and a deep gash about two feet long cut into the shoulder and down the thigh. The horse belonged to Edward Kyle and was used on the mail service between here and Stokes Bay.

John Meyers Acquitted.

Berlin, March 24.—In the Assizes yesterday John Meyers, of Preston, was acquitted of the charge of manslaughter in connection with the death of Annie Renwick, of Hespeler, who was killed by a car on the Galt, Preston and Hespeler Railway, in an accident which occurred at Preston last fall. Meyers was motorman on the car.

Wireless on Sable Island.

London, March 24.—(C. A. P.)—The High Commissioner's Department has been notified here that the Canadian Government intend to erect a Marconi wireless station on Sable Island, to come into operation August 1.

An Irishman gave his wife away by talking in his sleep. That is nothing. Plenty of wives give their husbands away by talking while awake.

It is worse than madness to neglect a cough, or cold which is easily subdued if taken in time but becomes, when left to itself, the forerunner of consumption and premature death. Inflammation, when it attacks the delicate tissue of the lungs and bronchial tubes, travels with perilous rapidity; then do not delay, get a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, the medicine that grasps this formidable foe of the human body, and drives it from the system. This medicine promotes a free and easy expectoration, subdues the cough, heals the diseased parts, and exerts a most wonderful influence in curing consumption, and other diseases of the throat and lungs. If parents wish to save the lives of their children, and themselves from much anxiety, trouble and expense, let them procure a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, and whenever a child has taken cold, has a cough or hoarseness, give the Syrup according to directions.

What is that which is lengthened by being cut at both ends? Answer—A ditch.

It is the Farmer's Friend. — The farmer will find in Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil a potent remedy for wounds or pains in the body or for affections of the respiratory organs and for household use generally. He will also find it a convenient friend in treating injured horses, cattle, etc., or relieving them when attacked by colds, coughs or any kindred ailments to which they are subject.

Why is bread like the sun? Answer—Because it rises from the yeast.

Not a Nauseating Pill.—The excipient of a pill is the substance which enfolds the ingredients and makes up the pill mass. That of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills is so compounded as to preserve their moisture, and they can be carried into any latitude without impairing their strength. Many pills, in order to keep them from adhering, are rolled in powders, which prove nauseating to the taste. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are so prepared that they are agreeable to the most delicate.

If you were to ride a donkey what fruit would you resemble? Answer—A pair.

How to Cleanse the System.—Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are the result of scientific study of the effects of extracts of certain roots and herbs upon the digestive organs. Their use has demonstrated in many instances that they regulate the action of the liver and the kidneys, purify the blood, and carry off all morbid accumulations from the system. They are easy to take, and their action is mild and beneficial.

What black thing enlightens the world? Answer—Ink.

To discern and deal immediately with causes and overcome them, rather than to battle with effects after the disease has secured a lodgment, is the chief aim of the medical man, and Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup is the result of patient study along this particular line. At the first appearance of a cold the Syrup will be found a most efficient remedy, arresting development and speedily healing the affected parts, so that the ailment disappears.

Name something with two heads and one body. Answer—A barrel.

Worms cause feverishness, moaning and restlessness during sleep. Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator is pleasant, sure and effectual. If your druggist has none in stock, get him to procure it for you.

What coat is finished without buttons and put on wet? Answer—A coat of paint.

Is there anything more annoying than having your corn stepped upon? Is there anything more delightful than getting rid of it? Holloway's Corn Cure will do it. Try it and be convinced.

A Royal Romance.

The London Daily Express' Paris correspondent says: The Liberte, which is in touch with the political friends of Prince Napoleon, asserts to-night that, notwithstanding the denial issued by the Belgian court, there is a formal engagement between Prince Napoleon and the Princess Clementine, thought it is not yet officially recognized at the court. King Leopold alone is hostile to the match, because he fears to offend the French Government, but both the Princess and the Prince are determined to get married in spite of all obstacles. In accordance with the Belgian law, where a parent refuses his consent, three respectfully worded notices will be sent to King Leopold at intervals of three weeks. After this delay the couple can get legally married, even if the King still withholds his consent.

Shares Record With Pitt.

An interesting incident of a recent sitting of the House of Commons was the promising maiden speech of Viscount Turnour, who is not yet 21 years of age. He was warmly congratulated by many members, including Sir Edward Grey, who complimented him on sharing the record with the boy Premier, William Pitt.

Linked by Fate

BY CHARLES GARVICE

Author of "The Verdict of the Heart," "A Heritage of Hate," "Nell of Shorne Mills," "Paid For," "A Modern Juliet." Etc.

and not seldom the guests met together for the first time in the day at the eight o'clock dinner; which was a meal that met with the approval even of Sir Chandos Orme, who was somewhat exacting in the matter of his food—and drink.

Most of the men were out all day with their guns or their rods—there are sea-trout in the Lesway that runs through the estate—and some of the women joined them at lunch or rode out with the tea-baskets. Vane had his gun and his fishing-rod standing each morning against the terrace ready for either sport, and did not seem to care which it was; indeed, he usually sat on the coping with his pipe in his mouth while the program was being settled, and took up either weapon with equal cheerfulness—and, alas! indifference.

The Letchfords, who were of course of the party, discussed him in the privacy of their own room.

"He seems very little better than he was on the night we found him," Sir Charles remarked, regretfully. "Whatever he had got on his mind is there still. He's behaving like—like a brick and keeping everything going here splendidly, but—"

"But he is not happy," finished Lady Letchford. "He tries to hide the trouble, whatever it is, and I dare say most of the people here think him the happiest and most fortunate of men; but you and I know better, don't we, Charlie? And there is someone else who knows it—Lady Fanworthy."

"Ah, she always was a clever one!" remarked Letchford.

"Yes; and she's fond of him," said his wife. "I see her looking at him every now and then with a curious and pained glance, as if she wondered what was the matter, and wishing she could help him."

"So do I," said Letchford, with a sigh. "I'm deuced fond of him, Blanche."

"It is not difficult—to be fond of him, I mean," responded Lady Blanche, comprehensively.

"Jolly good thing he's taken a fancy to his cousin Julian Shore. Good-looking chap, isn't he, and agreeable, too!"

Lady Letchford was silent for a moment.

"Yes," she said. "He is good-looking enough; but—"

Sir Charles laughed and yawned; he had been shooting all day.

"But you don't care for him eh? What fancies you women get! I should have thought he would have been just the sort of man you would have admired and liked; a fellow who sings like an opera chap and looks like—like an Adonis, and always says and does the right thing."

"Perfection, in short," said Lady Letchford. "But then we don't care for perfection in a man—that's why I like you, Charlie. I suppose—it's poaching on our preserves, you see. Do make haste or we shall be late for dinner, and it's the one thing dear old Lady Fanworthy sticks at. She almost frowned at Judith Orme when she came in late last night."

"Ah, yes; I see you and Judith have made it up, Blanche."

"You see nothing of the kind," retorted Lady Letchford from her dressing room. "Perhaps you mean that we are civil to each other—we couldn't quarrel or cut each other in another man's house."

"Oh, that's it, is it?" said Sir Charles. "By the way, do you notice how smitten Julian Shore is?"

"Of course I do," said Lady Letchford. "I am not blind. But I won't talk any more or you'll never be ready. I cannot understand why it should take a man so long to tie that ridiculous white tie. I'd do it in half a minute—"

"Better come and do it now."

"I shall do nothing of the kind. You're quite old—and ugly—enough to dress yourself. Oh, go away, Charlie! Here comes Louise! And shut the door or you will go on talking. I am sure we shall be late!"

They were in time for dinner after all. It was as usual a merry meal, for the men had had a good day, and the women were rejoiced to have them back. Vane alone was rather silent, as usual, but from his place at the bottom of the table, facing Lady Fanworthy, he smiled whenever the conversation required a smile from him, and he spoke now and again to Lady Lisle who, with her husband, was dining at the Hall that night, and who sat at his right. A little further down the table was Judith Orme, the most beautiful, and the best dressed woman present. Lord Lisle was next her and she seemed to be listening with interest to his detailed account of the day's sport; but every now and then her eyes wandered to the grave face at the bottom of the table; and every time they so wandered, Julian, who sat opposite her, noted the glance, though his soft voice never hesitated and his pleasant smile never faltered. He seemed scarcely to look at her, but not a movement, not a word of hers escaped him, though he appeared engrossed with the young girl whom he had taken in, and who was chatting with the volubility of nineteen.

The talk ran its course in the light, desultory manner of table-talk, and Lady Fanworthy, in her black silk and priceless lace, leant back with the serenity of the hostess when her dinner is going well, and looked thoughtfully at Vane with the expression in her keen eyes which Lady Letchford had noticed.

Presently Sir Chandos Orme's thin falsetto voice was heard in a moment of silence.

"Dropped in at the Momus last night," he said; he had run up to Town to interview his beauty-doctor the day before. "They're going well and strong. Was in time for that first piece: deuced clever! Harcourt I went behind to—er—see a man I know—told me that he's commissioned the author to write a comedy; and Harcourt expects a big success with it."

"Quite a new man, and very young, isn't he?" said Julian.

"Quite a boy. His name's Herbert Wood," replied Sir Chandos, signing to France to fill his glass—for the fourth time—"and a cripple. Harcourt hasn't seen him yet. He's a friend of the Polly Bainford who's made such a hit in the first piece; and Harcourt communicates with him through her."

"Quite mysterious and—stagey," murmured Judith Orme. "You remember the piece, Lord Lesborough?"

"Yes, quite well, what I saw of it," said Vane. "I should think the author would write a very good comedy. We must all go and see it."

"I say, Shore," said Sir Chandos with the flickering of the eyelids and the twitching of the lips which always followed his fourth glass of champagne, "I had a regular fright just now."

Julian raised his eyes. "Metaphorically speaking, of course," he said. "You were in the Seventy-second, Sir Chandos?"

Sir Chandos showed his perfectly constructed teeth.

"By gad, yes; we weren't easily frightened. But I give you my word I was—well, rather startled. I was coming down from my room the short way—a little late"—he smiled and bowed to Lady Fanworthy—"and I ran up against the most extraordinary looking person. She didn't seem to hear me, when I came behind her, and when she turned—well, outside Madame Tussaud's I've never seen anything like her. A walking corpse, by George! And I fancy she must be deaf and dumb, for when I apologized for running against her she just turned and looked at me like—like a statue, touched her lips and ears and glided into that den of yours. Who is she, eh?"

Julian watched France fill his glass and stopped him when it was half full, before he replied, quite casually:

"She is an old servant of mine. Her name is Deborah. I'm sorry she startled you."

"Oh, that's all right," said Sir Chandos, but grudgingly. "But you must have a queer fancy. If she belonged to me I should send her to Barnum & Bailey's."

"I'm sure you would," said Julian so smoothly that there was a general laugh.

"The fact is," said Vane, with a nod and a smile at Julian, "no one but an old and faithful servant would stand the awful smells of Julian's den."

"You go in for chemistry, I understand, Shore?" said Lord Lisle. "A most interesting study. I used to dabble in it, but quite unprofessionally. What branch have you taken up?"

Julian shrugged his shoulders, the slight shrug which hinted at his Spanish blood. "Oh, well," he replied, modestly, "I am trying to find a new color."

"Really! How interesting! How clever you must be!" exclaimed the young girl. "I hope it will be a nice color, one that will suit us ladies."

"Any color I am fortunate enough to discover will possess that virtue," he retorted with a slight bow.

"One of these days Julian will awake to find himself famous," said Vane; "and in quite a new line for the Mannerings. I don't think any of them has come out strong as a scientist."

"I should so like to see your—laboratory; is that the right name?" said the young girl.

"Julian smiled at her indulgently. "So you shall; whenever you please; though there is very little to see."

"Take my advice, Miss Limmington, and—don't," said Vane. "You'll see nothing but pots and pans in a variety of glass and iron; and you will be assailed by a smell that will haunt you more than any ghost you have at the Grange."

"Lord Lesborough's advice is good, I assure you," said Julian with a charming frankness and modesty.

Lady Fanworthy, who had been listening to the conversation with a non-committal smile and drooped lids, looked up and around the table, gave the sign which every woman at once sees, and no man ever notices, and the ladies rose and followed her to the drawing-room.

Vane gathered the men round him and sent about the claret-jug and cradled port, and set an example by lighting his old briar—the briar which he had smoked on the Fairy Isle. The conversation promptly took a sporting direction, and Vane bore his share of it; but every now and then he became preoccupied and absent-minded, and presently he said:

"Won't any one take any more wine? Orme?"

Sir Chandos filled his glass, tossed it off, and rose, a trifle shaky, with the others.

When they entered the drawing-room, Judith was at the piano playing in the soft, indolent fashion in which women play while they are waiting for the men; and she stopped and looked mechanically at Julian, for, as usual, everybody wanted to hear him sing.

"Is it too soon after dinner, Julian?" said Vane, with his hand on Julian's shoulder.

"No," he said, "if Miss Orme will play the accompaniment."

She looked at him, beyond him. "You usually play your own," she said.

"This is a new one," he said; "and I can't play at sight."

She sat down to the piano, with the faintest suggestion of resignation, and played the prelude, and he sang.

It was Pinsuti's "'Tis I," and he sang it—well, his rendering of the famous song would have satisfied even the composer. The conversation faltered and died out, and every one listened in a profound, an emotional silence.

"Oh, it is beautiful, beautiful!" murmured the young Miss Limmington. "What a lovely, lovely voice Mr. Shore has; and how exquisitely he sings!"

Vane, who happened to be near her, nodded perfect agreement.

"Yes; my cousin has a wonderful voice, hasn't he?" he said, warmly. "Ask him to sing 'Kathleen Mavourneen.' I shouldn't be surprised if he makes you cry."

Julian sang "Kathleen Mavourneen," and succeeded in bringing tears to the eyes of more than Miss Limmington.

"First rate; splendid!" said Sir Charles, with a half-defiant glance at his wife. "Sing us something else, Shore?"

But Julian courteously declined. With the Spanish shrug of the shoulders he left the piano and sauntered to the French windows, which had been left open, for the night was warm, and passed out on to the terrace. He thought that he was done, and he lit a cigarette and leant against the stone railing, his eyelids drooping, his long lashes sweeping his sallow cheek. Music excites the performer as well as the listener, and his heart was beating quickly. While he had been singing his eyes had rested upon Judith Orme's profile. From her beauty he had drawn the inspiration which had enabled him to move his hearers as they had been moved. And now his heart was aching for her, as it always ached the moment he was out of her sight. At first he had fought against the passion which had taken possession of him, had tried to argue himself out of it; but he had long ceased to struggle, and now surrendered himself as the demoniac surrenders to the spirit that enthrals it. And jealousy was adding another torture to that of unrequited love, for he had seen, almost on the first day, the day he had called on her with Vane, that she was in love with his cousin. Love makes the dullest man quick-witted and sharp-eyed where the woman he loves is concerned, and Julian had discovered that Judith was not heartless, as the world considered her, but that her heart had been given to Vane. Fate had willed that his cousin should not only step in between him and the Lesborough peerage, but that he should stand between him and the woman whom he loved with an absorbing passion which was nearly akin to madness.

With a gesture of despair he flung the end of his cigarette away and went towards the end of the terrace. As he was descending the steps he saw Sir Chandos Orme coming out of the smoking-room where he had been for the brandy-and-soda which pulled him together after his dinner. At the same moment there was the frou-frou of a woman's dress, and one of the ladies stepped on to the terrace from the drawing-room, and Julian heard Sir Chandos say, cautiously:

"Is that you, Judith?"

Julian went softly down the steps and stood under the terrace listening.

"Yes, father; do you want me?" replied Judith, coming towards him. They stopped almost immediately above Julian, so that he could hear every word, though both father and daughter spoke in a low voice.

"Yes," said Sir Chandos with a slight hiccough. "Look here, Judith, I want to talk to you. I'm getting anxious, uneasy. You don't seem to be making much of this game—now, don't be offended and turn away like that. I won't have it! I've been a good father to you—"

She laughed with a kind of weary scorn.

"I am listening," she said, coldly.

"Well, then, I'll go further and say you seem to me to be making a mess of it. We've been down here—how long is it?—and you are no 'forrader' than you were in London. I've got eyes in my head, of course, and I can see, anyone could see, that Lesborough isn't in the least smitten. The man seems to be like a block of ice; confound him! 'Pears to me you've completely lost your old power over him—"

She leant against the stone coping, her hands clasped tightly, her eyes fixed on the darkness.

—"Now don't go over the old ground and tell me it's my fault, that's all past and gone."

"I was not going to do so," she said in a low voice. "It would be useless."

"Quite so," he asserted. "Nothing is more painful than that kind of—of bickering between father and daughter, especially when they understand each other as you and I do. What I wanted to say was that, in my opinion, Lesborough isn't a marrying man, that he doesn't intend to marry; and that he intends this Julian Shore to succeed him here. You can't help observing this—the fuss Vane makes over the fellow."

"Well?" she said, after a pause.

Sir Chandos got out a cigar, but after a glance along the terrace, refrained from lighting it.

"Well," he said, shifting his small, tightly-shod feet uneasily. "Well, you can't be blind—no one could be—to the fact that Julian Shore is—er—very much in love with you, my dear Judith."

"Well?" she said again and in exactly the same tone.

"Well! Bless my soul, you don't want me to point out that you ought to shift your objective. If you can't get the present king o' the castle, why not—not make for the next?"

She laughed wearily.

"You talk as if Vane were an old man, on the brink of the grave."

"No, he's not an old man, but—well, accidents are always occurring," retorted Sir Chandos. "Look at the way Providence shot him into the title, and—and—well, I've a fancy Vane won't make old bones. He looks to me like a man who has ceased to take an interest in life, and by gad, when that's the case, life soon ceases to take an interest in the man! Then—then he is a reckless devil; you saw him riding that horse of his yesterday? It was a marvel he wasn't thrown. Mark my words, he'll break his neck some day!"

Her face went white in the darkness and her hands clenched each other.

"Until he does—" she began, then stopped.

"So what I say is," resumed Sir Chandos with the redundance and emphasis of a half tipsy man, "keep the two strings to your bow, my dear girl. For instance, there's no need to treat Shore so cavalierly. He's a decent chap, he's fond of you, and it's my opinion that he'll come into this sooner or later—" He swept his hand across the view comprehensively. "At any rate, I'm dead certain that you're making no headway with Vane. Of course with your beauty—by gad, I'm as proud of it as you are!—you might marry anybody; but, well, you've got into the pace here and— Now, take my advice and think the matter over."

She laughed again.

"If I do not marry Vane, if I have lost him," she said, almost to herself, "it does not matter—"

"That's what I say," her precious father caught her up, with an eager hiccough. "It's been my motto all my life—and a very prosperous life it's been—that, if you can't get the moon, good cream cheese is an admirable substitute. Now do be a sensible girl, my dear Judith!"

He stretched out a wavering hand to lay it upon her shoulder, but she shrank slightly but perceptibly, and Sir Chandos, carrying his hand to his moustache and murmuring, "I'll just go and get a drink. Too much salt in that last savoury," shuffled jauntily back to the smoking-room.

Julian, with a pale face and a throbbing heart, was stealing away when he heard another step on the terrace, and he waited. It was Vane's. Judith also heard it, and with a smothered sigh turned towards him.

"Who is it?" said Vane. "Ah, it's you!" as she moved into the light from the window. "Have you seen Julian? They want him for bridge."

"No," she said in the soft, low and deliciously musical note which always came into her voice when she spoke to him. He left the drawing-room some time ago."

"Gone into that den of his, I suppose. If so, it's useless to attempt to draw him. What a good fellow he is, isn't he?"

"Yes?" she said, half interrogatively, as if she knew he had a purpose in his praise.

"Such a—a likeable chap," said Vane with the awkwardness with which a man approaches a delicate subject. "And he's clever, too. The sort of man who would make his mark in the world if—if he had an object."

He lit a cigarette, tossing the match almost on to Julian, and smoked furiously for a moment or two.

"You—take a great interest in him," she said in so low a voice that Julian had to strain his ears.

"Rather!" assented Vane, "and naturally, seeing that he will follow me here."

"Will—follow you?" she repeated, mechanically.

Vane nodded. "Yes. I shall never marry." She moved out of the light and leant against the railing in her old attitude. "I'm one of those fellows who are better single."

"Ah, I understand!" she breathed with a long-drawn sigh.

Vane frowned and set his teeth.

"See here, Judith," he said in the tone of a man who has resolved to speak his mind and to spare neither himself nor his hearer, "I don't think you do. Of course I know you are thinking of the past and—and our old engagement. You don't mind my speaking of it? Why should you?"

"Why should I?" she said in a still voice.

"Quite so. That's all past, and I don't want you to think you have anything to reproach yourself with. We—well, we made a mistake, that's all; and it was precious lucky for you that you discovered it before it was too late!"

"Was it I only who discovered it?" she asked.

Vane hesitated for a moment. It is never easy to tell a woman that you have ceased to love her.

"Let us say that you were the first to make the discovery," he said, gently. "We won't discuss it."

"No; it isn't necessary," she said in a strange voice, as if she were holding herself under control. "You have told me enough. I—jilted you, Vane; but—you found consolation. There is another woman!"

Vane did not start, but he set his teeth and his brows as if she had struck him. For a moment he was silent, then, looking straight before him, he said grimly:

"You are right, there is—there was another woman."

Her hand stole to her bosom and clutched the lace there. She had hoped against hope for a swift denial; the confirmation of her dread was almost more than she could bear. Scarcely breathing she stole a little closer to him.

"Tell—tell me about her," she whispered.

He shrank again; but after a pause, during which she thought he must hear the wild beating of her heart, he said:

"I don't think I can. There are some things— No, no, just let it rest at that."

"Is she—is she anyone I know?"

"No," he replied almost curtly.

"She is, of course, very beautiful? I—I can't imagine you caring for a plain woman."

He drew his hand across his brow.

"She— Let it rest," he said, hoarsely. "I did not want to speak of myself, but—Julian."

She stood motionless, as if she had not heard him, then as if she had suddenly become conscious of his words, she said, in a voice absolutely emotionless:

"Mr. Julian Shore?"

"Yes. Judith, he—has fallen in love with you."

"And you—you have come to plead his cause!" she said swiftly through her closed teeth.

"I have come to plead his cause," he assented, resolutely. "It's like my impudence, you think? But, consider, Judith! He is of my kith and kin; I like him, I am fond of him; and I don't like to see him suffer. The poor fellow has got thin and worn—oh, but you know, you must know! I know what you are going to say: that he might speak for himself. But Julian is the last man to do that in such a case. He is poor, I stand between him and the title, the estate. He thinks, and rightly, that you are far above him. And he is just that sensitive, high-minded kind of fellow who would suffer in silence—and you treat him, well, not too gently."

Her breath was coming fast and she moved a little away from him that he might not see the passionate heaving of her bosom.

"So let me plead his cause," Vane went on, warming to his advocacy, and deaf and blind to the passion which was rending her. "I'm convinced that he would make you—"

"A good husband," she finished, quite calmly.

"Well, it sounds pretty banal; but that's what I was going to say," he admitted. "And that he loves you with all his heart and soul, I've seen—and you must have seen—for some time past. I know the signs," in a low voice, but without bitterness. "And, mind, I am not altogether disinterested."

"No?" she said, keeping the surging mockery from her voice.

"No. I want to see the man who will come after me make a better thing of his life than I have done. I want him to be—happy. And, by George, Julian will never be happy until he has won you!"

"Or you have won me for him?" she said.

He looked at her quickly.

"You are offended, indignant?" he said. "I'm sorry. I beg your pardon, Judith, beg it most humbly! And I'm a afraid I've done Julian more harm with you than good. But I—well, I presumed on our old—friendship—"

She moved suddenly, as if she were losing the control over herself which she had maintained by an almost super-human effort. If Vane Mannering had sought for a mode of avenging himself for her treatment of him, he could not have found a more deadly, a more cruel one. For a moment or two her lips trembled with the rage—and, yes, hate—which possessed her; but she pressed her hand to her lips and forced the hot words back.

"You—mean well," she said at last. "Your cousin should be very grateful to you—"

"Then—then you are not offended? You'll think it over, and—and be a little kinder to Julian?" he said, gravely, earnestly.

"I will think it over, and Mr. Shore shall have no cause to complain of my unkindness," she said. Then suddenly she laughed, not loudly, but so strangely that Vane started and looked at her with questioning surprise; for as he had ceased to love her, as his heart was buried there on the Fairy Isle, he had no suspicion that she still cared for him: had she not left him of her own free will?

"What—what is the matter?" he asked with all the denseness of the straightforward man.

"Nothing," she replied, the laugh dying suddenly and her voice once more impassive and emotionless. "I was only thinking how well you had performed your task; that—that if I had known the truth I might have spared myself some, as it proves, quite unnecessary remorse. But the past, our past, is past, as you say—"

"Quite, quite," he said, gently. "Shall we go in now? The air is chilly."

"Thanks, no; I should like to re- turally, like to be alone to think of—Mr. Julian Shore."

Vane regarded her with a vague uneasiness, then, having nothing to say, said nothing, but with a slight nod of acquiescence, went into the house.

She stood for a moment or two as he had left her, then, supporting herself by the rail; moved slowly to the end of the terrace; there, out from the light of the windows, she flung up her hands to her face and choked back the moan of wounded pride, of outraged love, of the worst humiliation which a woman can suffer; the avowed indifference of the man she loves. Loves! There was not one ember of love left in the fire which smouldered in her heart, but in its place a hate as savage as death!

Half unconscious of what she was doing, where she was going, she paced back as far as the steps, and, drawn by the stillness and darkness, went down to the garden—and saw the figure standing against the terrace wall.

She held her breath for a moment, then glided forward and laid her hand on Julian's arm. He turned and she saw his face.

"You have been listening!" she panted. "Coward! I will call to them—tell them!"

She swung round towards the house, but he caught her arm. His face was white, his eyes glowing; but, just as he had restrained himself when he found that he was dispossessed, so now he mastered his self-command.

"Wait," he said, quietly. "Do not move, do not speak! Wait!"

She stood still, stood motionless, rendered speechless by his unnatural calmness, and peered at him breathlessly.

"Yes, I have listened," he said as quietly as before. "And it is true. I love you—ah, do not speak—yet! I love you. Is it a crime to do so? Then I am the greatest of criminals, and I throw myself at your mercy. But you know I love you, you have known it since the day we first met. Do you suppose I am going to ask you if you care for me? I am not so great a fool! I know that Vane stands between us— No, not yet! Wait. I beg you to wait until I have said what I have to say. It is him you care for. I am—well, just the dirt beneath your feet. But he—ah, well, I have listened; there is no need to remind you. Vane does not count. You are less than nothing to him."

She put up her hands as if, indeed, she were about to strike him, but he did not move, and his dark eyes did not quail before the lightning in hers.

"While I—God, how I love you! You are just my whole life and soul!"

"You love me?" she said gliding closer to him. "Prove it! Prove it!"

"Tell me how—"

"Thrash him! Thrash him within an inch of his life!" she hissed.

He smiled, and the smile was like a douche of ice on her fury.

"No," he said as if in response to quite an ordinary, every-day proposition. "That would be a cheap kind of melodrama: and I should be the one who would be thrashed; Vane is a stronger man—" He shrugged his shoulders.

"You are a coward!" she said, her bosom heaving, her lips twitching. "You prate of love like—like an actor, and a bad one; but you stand by and see the woman you say you love insulted. But you want my answer to your kind proposal—your cousin's kind proposal, coward! Take it then! I will marry you the day you reign here as master instead of dependent, the hanger on you are."

He caught her by both wrists and leant forward, his breath coming as fast as hers, his eyes sinking into her own.

"I accept your conditions," he said, hoarsely. She shrank back, but he still held her. "You made it in jest, in mockery—"

She watched him closely, hungrily. "No!" she panted. "I—I am serious. It—it is you who jest, who trifle."

He smiled and, for a moment, his self-possession left him.

"Coward! The word stings! You shall see! I accept the conditions. Give me—give an earnest of your promise."

She shrank from him as he drew her closer to him; but suddenly she lifted her face, white and set.

"Take it!" she whispered.

He bent his head slowly and kissed her on the lips. With a low cry she broke from him and sped up the steps; but on the terrace she turned and looked down on him with a strange expression in her eyes, an expression in which fear and hate and the longing for revenge fought for predominance.

Julian stood looking up at her, at the spot on which she had stood, with glowing eyes, while one could count twenty; then he went softly round the house, unlocked a door in a wall and passing through the small yard—it had once been a ladies' garden, but was now moss and weed-grown—on which the laboratory looked—unlocked the laboratory door with his club-key and entered the room.

There was an air of comfort about the apartment. The walls were colored a dark maroon, the woodwork was of walnut, beautifully polished, there were pictures on the walls, and a baby grand piano; but its scientific purpose had not been forgotten. Vane, with the generosity which characterized him at all times, but never more than in his dealings with Julian, had given him carte-blanche, and Julian had transformed the Witches' room into a model lab-

WORSE THAN RUSSIA.

A Friend of Tolstoi Testifies That This Is So of England—A Victim of Tyranny.

"It is not a whit better in England," declared Count Tolstoi, comparing in a recent interview the conditions of life in Russia with those in this country, says The London Daily Mail.

"Why," exclaimed the famous novelist-philosopher, "my friend Tchertkoff, who lives outside the Town of Christchurch, is compelled to pay a tax for the maintenance of a band which plays inside the town, and which he himself would much rather never hear at all."

The Russian victim of British bureaucracy thus referred to is M. Vladimir Tchertkoff, who seven years ago was banished from the liberty-rejoicing country of the Czar, and now resides in a handsome house, surrounded by picturesque grounds near the quaint and pretty Town of Christchurch. Unfortunately, the band towards the upkeep of which M. Tchertkoff has to contribute compulsorily, performs at Bournemouth—a pleasant walk of about five miles from the Russian's house. When visited by a representative of The Daily Mail, M. Tchertkoff did not manifest excessive resentment against this tyrannical treatment of English-governing authorities. Time, indeed, has begotten a cheerful resignation to his fate; and the collector of the band rate no longer calls in vain.

M. Tchertkoff has suffered perhaps even greater hardships than this at the hands of the bureaucrats of his own country. When the Doukhobors, a Russian sect, originally numbering 12,000, refused to serve in the army because their religion forbade the shedding of blood, their lands were confiscated, their homes destroyed, and the people themselves scattered in starving groups throughout the barren plains of the country. Hundreds died of hunger. M. Tchertkoff, who was then an officer in the Imperial Guards, interested himself on behalf of these ill-treated peasants. He took a prominent part in bringing about the emigration of 7,000 Doukhobors to Canada.

In this and other ways, M. Tchertkoff made himself disagreeable to Russian bureaucracy, and he was banished. Nor when he believed Leo Tolstoi was on the point of death would they allow him to visit his friend. M. Tchertkoff has done much to make the great Russian novelist understood and appreciated in this country; it is but a small return for these services that Count Tolstoi should take an opportunity to point out how a strange country is treating his exiled friend by making him pay for a band he cannot hear.

In more important respects it would appear that the much vaunted freedom of England is not the real thing that a misguided people has imagine it to be for some centuries. Such a pronouncement from a victim of Russian oppression will no doubt be adjudged distinctly exhilarating.

"And yet," observed M. Tchertkoff, "I do not find in general that the state of England is very much better than the state of Russia. There is the same combination of oppressors and exploiters on the one hand, and the oppressed and exploited on the other. The laws in this country, as in Russia, protect the wealth of one man while allowing another to die of hunger.

"Indeed, I believe there is a disadvantage in a Government like that of England in comparison with a state of crude autocracy, such as exists in Russia. Whereas in Russia the evils produced by the Government are self-evident, and the Government are opposed by people enlightened in the least degree, in England, on the contrary, while the Government supports and encourages the same evils, they are not so obvious, and consequently not combated by the people. There is a kind of a show of justice.

"In Russia the evil is wrought with bare hands; in England, with kid gloves. Therefore, there is less hope of the evil being recognized and dealt with."

M. Tchertkoff instanced the unemployed and slum life as examples of these evils. Another was the exploitation of our colonies and dependencies by British commerce. "Thousands of natives in India hunger," he declared, "because the food they produce is exported to the United Kingdom."

"One great illusion," added the Russian exile, "is that England is self-governed. This is not the case [illegible] of the House of Commons are not the representatives of the people, but of the moneyed classes. The voting of workpeople is influenced by their employers. A man cannot venture to become a Parliamentary candidate unless he is prepared to spend several thousands of pounds on his election.

"The favorable impression at first made upon a Russian who comes to reside in England is not maintained when the foundations of things are examined."

In matters of detail, so it would appear from M. Tchertkoff, "more liberty of action and choice is afforded in Russia than in England. For instance, English people are afraid to shock their neighbors by manifesting any little originality in dress, and I find doctors who are atheists attending places of worship in order to keep their practice.

"In fashionable circles in St. Petersburg the interests, especially of the women, take a more serious form than their prototypes in the west end of London. I would affirm, in fact, that women in Russian high society are more cultured than women of like position in England. For example, these intelligent, fashionable ladies in St. Petersburg do not, and could not read the 'trashy,' superficial literature devoured in the drawing-rooms of London."

As a parting shot, M. Tchertkoff declared that "religion in the English fashionable world is a mere matter of etiquette."

Dover's Chalk Cliffs.

The white chalk cliffs of Dover, renowned in poetry and history, are said to be slipping slowly into the sea that for many thousands of years has dashed at their base. A portion of the cliffs fell some time ago, and recently a further portion at St. Margaret's Bay, Dover, has given indications that it is also slipping seaward. Cracks in the land have opened, and some portions of the cliffs have already fallen into the sea, where they form at low water a long causeway seaward. It has been suggested that the blasting operations at the Admiralty Harbor, Dover, may have loosened the outer portions of the cliffs.

FOLLOWS LORD MILNER

LORD SELBORNE TO BE GOV.-GEN. OF SOUTH AFRICA.

Factors Which Show He Should Be Amply Qualified for the Arduous Post—An Oxford Man, Who Has Been in Public Life Ever Since His Graduation—Wife a Cousin of Mr. Balfour.

In choosing Earl Selborne to assume the duties in South Africa which ill-health obliges Lord Milner to relinquish, the Imperial Government has selected a man who should be amply qualified for the position. William Waldegrave Palmer, the second Earl Selborne, is a young man, although he has put in six comparatively useless years, according to Dr. Osler's theory, unless, indeed, he is an exception to that dogmatic rule. As First Lord of the Admiralty, he has displayed ability, and in the reconstruction of the British navy has played a leading part. From 1895 to 1900 Earl Selborne was Under Secretary for the Colonies, in which position he must have obtained a keen insight into the problems of South Africa, some of which, in new phases, persist to-day, and with which he must deal. He is an Oxford man, like Lord Milner, and since graduating has been in public life almost constantly.

Married Salisbury's Daughter.

Added to the ambitious impulses he must inherit from his father, the new Governor-General gained further political momentum in 1883 by marrying a daughter of the Marquis of Salisbury. His wife is, therefore, a cousin of Mr. Balfour's. When one takes into consideration these factors he is justified in predicting a distinguished career for Earl Selborne. His father, who got off in the race of life with no such flying start, became a very famous man, indeed, and was Lord Chancellor, a position which he had refused a few years before, because he could not agree with Mr. Gladstone on the question of the disestablishment of the Irish Church. This first Lord Selborne, who was Roundell Palmer before the title came to him, was a distinguished lawyer, and represented the British Government at the Geneva Court of Arbitration. He was also Solicitor-General and Attorney-General at different stages in his career. He chose Selborne as his title, as it was the name of the country residence he had acquired from Gilbert White, the naturalist, whose "Natural History of Selborne" is a classic.

Milner a Great Statesman.

Of Lord Milner, whose health has been failing for some time, it can truly be said that he is one of the foremost living statesmen. While he was yet a student at Oxford Dean Church said of him, "Milner is the finest flower of human culture which Oxford has produced in our time," a tribute which Alfred Milner's subsequent career has justified. In early life he served an apprenticeship at journalism, and worked with William T. Stead. At the time he was a tall, thin, apathetic young man, aloof and reserved, whose only hobby was swimming, an art in which he excelled. He drifted into a moderate sort of Socialism, and then into Liberalism, finally evolving into that rara avis an educated Liberal Imperialist. About this stage in his career it is told of him that on one occasion, as he rose to address an audience, someone shouted, "Sit down, you fool!" This aroused Milner, and he made a really forceful speech, something he had never before accomplished. In later years, commenting on the incident, he said that he would be a good speaker if someone would hit him in the eye before he rose.

At the Egyptian Tangle.

The official life of this gifted man began with his service as private secretary to Lord Goschen, when the latter was Chancellor of the Exchequer. There he displayed a capacity for administration that was soon recognized by his appointment to the head of the Inland Revenue Department. Here again he won unstinted applause. When it became necessary for Great Britain to unravel the Egyptian financial tangle, Milner was chosen as the man. In Egypt he mastered a very intricate and difficult situation. It is said that on that occasion he overcame difficulties by riding a high horse, and that that fact disqualified him from service where gentler methods are required. But as Finance Minister in Egypt, Milner was successful, and that is the test of all tests. While in the land of the Nile, he wrote a book on the country, which was recognized as a standard authority. His official work commanded the highest praise on all hands.

South Africa the Climax.

But the climax of the career of this Empire-builder was South Africa. Honors had been showered upon him. He had become Sir Alfred Milner, and more recently Lord Milner. A Conservative administration was looking for a man to grapple with a very dangerous situation. He must be firm, and yet not obstinate; he must strive for peace and yet face the possibility of war unflinchingly. Milner undertook his great task in South Africa with infinite pains. He traveled through parts of the country that had never before seen a High Commissioner. He learned the Cape Dutch, so that he could converse without the aid of an interpreter, and read the Dutch newspapers. He solved the crises in Basutoland and Swaziland, and installed the new constitution of Rhodesia. There never was any doubt or hesitation as to his attitude towards the Transvaal. He firmly presented the British demands, and when war was precipitated he set about to protect against invasion in Cape Colony, which had many sympathizers with the Boers. Invasions were successfully resisted. Surrounded by influences that were strongly anti-British, Lord Milner sustained through all the long and trying struggle the British cause. At the end he remained to restore order and harmony out of the political chaos that was the inevitable result of the struggle.

Grain for Fowls.

It should be remembered that fowls are not fitted to depend too largely upon bulky foods and that the proportion of grain in the ration must always be fairly large.

COALING WARSHIPS.

Modern Methods Do Not Require Reduction of Speed.

In the old days, said a retired naval captain recently, the coaling process adopted by warships was not only hazardous both to the collier and the man-of-war, but a sad waste of time besides. For instance, a cruiser on her way to join the main fleet would perhaps run out of coal and the captain would anchor, hail the collier, who would come alongside, and also anchor, heavy tenders would be placed between the two vessels and the coaling would begin. If there was a smooth sea then the operation might terminate without any serious damage to either vessel, but with a heavy swell and a strong tide running the ships would grind and pound each other until it was a wonder sometimes the side of the weaker vessel wasn't stove in.

The process was a slow one, too, for with the best intentions the men seldom succeeded in stowing away more than 15 tons an hour, and in this way 30 hours would be spent in putting on board a matter of 450 tons. And this, mind you, could only be accomplished when Father Neptune was in his kindliest mood.

I have known occasions when a man-of-war and her collier have been together for the best part of a day, and at the end of that time the exchange of coal has been less than 50 tons. In times of war, of course, the question of coaling was a very serious one, and was often the greatest hindrance to the mobility of a fleet, but things have changed since then, and a warship may now coal without even having to reduce her speed.

How is it managed? Well, as you probably know, every man-of-war has its own collier, which accompanies her in all her trips, ever ready to supply the bituminous mineral as soon as she shall run short. Each warship is now fitted with a cable which enables her to tow, or be towed, by her collier, the general rule being that the bigger vessel supplies the motive power. As soon as the battleship expresses her desire for more coal, a cableway is run from the mast of the collier to a jury mast rigger on the battleship. When the connection is made, a small engine on the collier is constantly at work keeping the cable from sagging, for, as you can understand, the distance between the vessels (usually about 400 feet) is constantly varying. When the cable has been fixed, the man-of-war continues her journey at a speed of about 10 knots an hour, towing the collier, and thus assists the small engine in keeping the cable taut.

At a given signal a coal bag containing about 2,000 pounds weight is hauled up to the "traveler" or cradle, and then drawn from the collier to the battleship by means of a wire hawser wound on a steam capstan. In order to assist the traveler on her way the cable is raised at the starting point so that the bags slip along with the maximum amount of ease.

Of course, only one traveler is used, but this runs backward and forward at express speed, the bags being emptied and returned with marvelous celerity. To give you some idea of the rapidity with which the work is accomplished, I may say that by this method 50 tons an hour may be put on board, so that in 40 hours the biggest battleship afloat may have coaled and at the same time proceeded on her way a distance of some 500 miles.

Recently a clever invention has been patented by a stevedore named Louis A. de Mayo, whereby Atlantic liners are enabled to coal in an incredibly short space of time. The ordinary rate of coaling with these vessels is about 15 tons an hour, seven men being employed. By de Mayo's system, however, five men are able to handle 180 tons an hour. The frame and the machinery employed are made of malleable iron and steel, and a continuous belt runs over a wheel at the top. Specially shaped buckets, triangular in appearance, form the belt or chute. The pins on the belt travel in channel irons so as to keep rigid on one point. In the wheel at the top are notches which catch these pins and throw over the buckets.

If the slanting side of the bucket were long enough to project over the open chute that runs into the coal port of the ship it would catch and tear the machine to pieces. But the inventor utilizes gravity and the force of the coal itself. Thus, the contents of bucket No. 2 assist in conveying the coal in No. 1 bucket into the open chute, while No. 3 assists No. 2, and so on.

The invention is a most ingenious one, and should minimize considerably the present difficulty in coaling liners. I believe, however, the time will soon come when nothing but liquid fuel will be employed, and then we shall be able to say good-bye to bunkers and stokers and solve forever the perplexing questions regarding the speediest methods of "coaling" our fleet.

An Antiquarian Hoax.

A great joke has been played on the Dumfries (Scotland) Natural History and Antiquarian Society.

There has been on exhibit a scrap of parchment labeled as a Greek charm. It was said to have been taken from the dead body of a Bedouin, in Egypt, and the writing to have been done with the blood of a young girl.

Dr. Semple, the well-known scientist, deciphered the inscription as being English written in Greek characters. It was to the following purport:

I'm old Bob Ridley, O!
I'm old Bob Ridley, O!
I'm old Bob Ridley, O!
I'm old Bob Ridley, O!

They are the chorus words of an old song which was very popular in the nineteenth century. The discovery caused much merriment.

Question of Speed.

The judge, lawyers, and everybody else were badgering an Irishman about the speed of a cart.

"Was it going fast?" queried the judge.

"Yis, it were," answered the witness.

"How fast?"

"Oh, purty fasht, yer honor."

"Well, how fast?"

"Purty fasht."

"Was it going as fast as a man can run?"

"Aw yis," said the Irishman, glad that the basis for an analogy was supplied to him. "As fasht as two min kin run."—Birmingham Post.

THERE WAS FAMINE AND MUCH SUFFERING

IN THE LAND AFTER THE U. E. LOYALISTS CAME, AND SOMETIMES DEATH FROM STARVATION.

Kingston Whig: A fact in connection with the early history of this part of the world, and probably almost unknown, was brought out at the meeting of the Historical Society on Tuesday evening. It was contained in an extract from Canniff's history read by Dr. Walkem, and refers to the 'hungry year,' which beginning in 1787, made miserable the lives of the U. E. Loyalist settlers for more than a year and the effects of which were felt for a decade.

The Yankees, enraged with the loyal British subjects, for leaving the rebellious republic, cut off the food supply along the frontier, and the early settlers were dependent on the rations of grain dealt out by the government for three years. During this time but few were able to clear enough land on which to raise crops of roots, and grain sufficient for their needs, and many of the incomers, disbanded soldiers, had an idea that "Old George's" provisions were going to be a permanency. There were also failures in the working of the commissariat department which brought up stores from Lower Canada.

The result of all this was that famine stalked through this fertile belt, and that not alone intense suffering was caused, but that there were deaths from starvation. The instances of privation are pathetic in the extreme. In one case a little girl stole out at night to dig up the potato peelings which had been planted for seed (the potato being saved for food) and eating them. Beef bones were passed about from one family to another, to flavor the bran porridge. Roots, the bark of trees, beech leaves, the young buds of trees, chaff, everything that could in anyway sustain life was eaten by the starving people. In one place the milk from a young cow kept a family from death for a winter. When the crops began to come up in 1789 the young, milk-like grain was boiled and eaten, numbers coming from far and near to satisfy their hunger from a field of oats growing on the Prince Edward shore.

The grinding of grain in those pioneer days was a difficult matter, as there were no grist mills. The first mill, in this section was put up, by government order, government supplying the materials, at Kingston Mills, in 1782, by Robert Clark, of Ernesttown, soldier-settlers doing the work, a second one going up a few years later at the falls of Napanee Mills. This afterwards was sold by Capt. Macdonald, of Marysburg, Prince Edward County, to Hon. R. Cartwright. Home-made grist mills were constructed by hollowing out the trunks of large trees, burning the cavity smooth with red-hot cannon balls, etc., to form a mortar, and making a pestle, usually of ironwood, and pounding the grain in this primitive way. These were called hominy blocks. The grain was afterwards passed through a horse-hair sieve serving a whole community, and the work of grinding very often fell to the lot of the women.

Altogether, this first page of the history of the "ten townships," which covers the district close about here and up the Bay of Quinte, is a tragic one, brightened only by instances of heroism, and the generous sharing of scanty provisions with fellow-sufferers.
